FRANCIS W. EATON, COMMISSIONER OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY, ET AL.

(See S. C., "Clark v. Trust Co." 10 Otto, 149-153.)

Inadequacy of price—invalid sale.

1. That the price which property brought at a trustee's sale was grossly inadequate, does not alone constitute a sufficient reason to impeach the genuineness or validity of the sale, unless the inadequacy was such as to shock the conscience, or raise a presumption of fraud or unfairness.

2. That the trustee, at the date of the deed to him and when the sale was made, was the actuary of the Trust Company, whose debt it was given to secure, does not invalidate a sale made under it to the company, which was in conformity to the deed and free from fraud.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson and J. G. Bigelow, for appellants.

Messrs. Enoch Totten and A. C. Bradley, for appellees.

Mr Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The preliminary question in this case involves the validity and effect of the sale made at public auction by Eaton, or rather by the auctioneer under his directions and as his agent.

McGhan and wife, by indenture dated August 15, 1864, and duly acknowledged on 18th November, 1864, conveyed the premises in controversy to Edward Clark, in trust for the sole use and benefit of Mrs. McGhan, for and during her natural life, permitting her to use and occupy the same, and to receive and apply the rents and profits thereof, and in trust also to sell and convey absolutely in fee simple or by way of mortgage, to such person or persons and for such use and purposes as Mrs. McGhan should, in writing, request and direct, her then or any future coverture notwithstanding. The indenture also contained a provision that, upon the death of Mrs. McGhan, the premises, or so much thereof as remained undisposed of, should be conveyed to the husband, his heirs or assigns.

By an indenture executed and duly acknowledged on 20th June, 1870, McGhan and his wife, together with Clark, the trustee, conveyed the property to Daniel Eaton, of the City of Washington, in trust to secure the payment of a debt due from McGhan and wife to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, for the sum of $10,000, evidenced by their joint and several promissory note to that Company, of like date with the indenture, and payable twelve months thereafter to the order of the Company, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum, interest payable half-yearly. That conveyance was in part upon these trusts: 1. To permit Mrs. McGhan and husband to occupy the premises, and the rents and profits to have and apply to their sole use and benefit, until default be made in the payment of the note or interest thereon, or any proper charge or expense in and about the property; and, upon payment of the note, interest and costs, to release and reconvey the premises to Clark, the trustee, for Mrs. McGhan; 2. Upon default in any of the said respects, quoting from the deed itself, "To sell the said piece or parcel of ground and premises at public auction upon such terms and conditions, and at such time and place, and after such previous public advertisement, as the said party of the second part or his heirs in the execution of this trust shall deem advantageous and proper, and to convey the same in fee simple to the purchaser or purchasers thereof at his, her or their cost or expense; and of the proceeds of said sale or sales first to pay all proper costs, charges and expenses, and to retain as compensation a commission of five per cent out of the amount of said sale or sales; secondly, to pay whatever may then remain unpaid of said note and the interest thereon, whether the same shall be due or not; and, lastly, to pay the remainder, if any, to the said Louisa McGhan, her heirs or assigns."

On or about April 5, 1872, the note held by the Company being unpaid, and interest to the amount of $1,400 having accrued thereon, Eaton, the trustee, made public advertisement that he would sell the mortgaged property at public auction to the highest bidder, at a designated hour, on April 24, 1872, giving the terms of such proposed sale. The sale was postponed from time to time until July 1, 1872, when it took place, the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, by one of its officers, becoming the purchaser at the price of $13,000.

We find in the record a writing signed by Eaton, purporting to be an indenture executed July 1, 1872, whereby, in consideration of the sum of $13,000 in hand paid, he conveyed to the purchaser the property so sold at public auction.

It purports to have been "Signed, sealed and delivered in presence of—Brainerd H. Warner," and to have been acknowledged before said Warner as a notary public for the District of Columbia. As printed in the transcript, that writing shows no seal attached to the signature of Eaton, and the certificate of acknowledgment before the notary is without date. That writing was placed upon record on the 4th of February, 1873; but, for the want of a seal to Eaton's signature, complainants claim that it was ineffective for any purpose. Subsequent to that sale, the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company commenced proceedings in ejectment against McGhan and wife and Clark, to recover possession of the property. The defendants in that action failing to appear, judgment by default was entered against them on November 7, 1872, and, under a writ of possession, McGhan and wife were ejected and the Company put in possession of the property.

In 1873, Bradley purchased the same property from the Company, and subsequently sold and conveyed it to Shepherd. Eaton died on the 16th of February, 1873, and McGhan died on October 27, 1874.

In this action, commenced April 5, 1875, by Mrs. McGhan, and by Clark, as trustee in the deed already referred to, it is sought to redeem the property sold by Eaton under the deed of June 20, 1872. To that end the complainants, among other things, prayed that the deed from Eaton to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and the subsequent conveyance under which Bradley and Shepherd (who are alleged not to have been bona fide purchasers) claim, be declared null and void, and the notes given by Bradley to that Company be canceled; that an accounting be had of the rents, issues and profits of the premises, and that the amount thereof be applied on account of the said note of $10,000; and that the lease of the premises may be decreed to inure to the benefit of the complainants.

The court below having dismissed the bill, this appeal has been prosecuted, and the assignments of error present several propositions of law for our consideration. But, in the view we take of the case, it is only necessary to determine the preliminary question already stated, in reference to the validity and effect of the sale at public auction by Eaton, the trustee, on the first of July, 1872.

That sale is attempted to be impeached upon several grounds, viz.:

1. That a proper opportunity was not afforded, to persons desirous to purchase the property, to bid at the sale; that, had there been, the property would have brought, at least, $2,000 more.

Upon a careful examination of all the evidence, we find nothing of a positive, substantial character sustaining this position. While there is some little conflict in the evidence as to what occurred upon the occasion of the sale, the overwhelming preponderance of testimony shows that the sale was duly advertised and was fairly and properly conducted.

2. It is next contended that relief should be given because the price which the property brought was grossly inadequate. That fact alone does not constitute a sufficient reason to impeach the genuineness or validity of the sale. Besides, the inadequacy was not such as to shock the conscience, or raise a presumption of fraud or unfairness. Hill, Tr., 152, n.; [Cooper v. Galbraith], 3 Wash. (C. C.), 546; [Hubbard v. Jarrell], 23 Md., 66.

3. The sale is assailed upon the further ground that Eaton, at the date of the deed to him, as well as when the sale was made, was the actuary of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and that, consequently, no sale made by him, under the authority conferred by the deed of June 20, 1870, would cut off the equity of redemption.

Touching this objection, it is sufficient to say that the deed was not made to Eaton in his capacity as an officer of the Company, nor did he act in that capacity when exerting the authority conferred upon him. The fact that he held official relations to that Company did not incapacitate him from accepting the trust set out in the deed of June 22, 1870, or from discharging the duties thereby imposed. It is true that his relations to the Company would make it the duty of the court to scrutinize very closely all that he did in the execution of the trust; but we find nothing in the evidence to justify the belief that he acted otherwise than honestly and faithfully in the discharge of his duty. The evidence does not justify the charge that he bid off the property for the Company.

What we have said leads to the conclusion that the sale of July 1, 1872, was a valid sale, which the purchaser was entitled to have consummated by a conveyance executed and acknowledged in proper form. It is, therefore, of no consequence in this suit to inquire whether the writing executed by Eaton to the Company, in pursuance of the sale made at public auction, was or was not sufficient to pass the title from him.

If he was bound, as we hold that he was, to have executed a sufficient conveyance, the court should not, by granting the relief asked, defeat the sale altogether. An ineffectual attempt, upon the part of Eaton, to consummate the sale, does not authorize a decree setting aside the sale, which, as we have said, was in conformity to the deed, and was free from fraud or imposition, or such inadequacy of price as, upon recognized principles of equity, constitutes ground for relief.

We are all of opinion that the decree must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PEDRO J. CAVAZOS, Exr. of MARIA JOSEFA CAVAZOS, Deceased, ET AL.

Lands of Mexican pueblo—private lands for public use—former adjudication—prescription.

*1. By the laws of Mexico in force in 1826, pueblos or towns, when recognized as such by public authority, became entitled for their use and benefit and the use and benefit of their inhabitants, to certain lands embracing the site of such pueblos or towns and adjoining territory to the extent of four square leagues, which were to be measured and assigned to them.

2. By the Constitution of Tamaulipas, one of the States of Mexico, in force in 1826, the property of an individual could not be expropriated; that is, divested of its private character, for an object of common recognized utility, without previous compensation, and the amount of such compensation could only be estimated by arbiters appointed by the State and the owner. If such compensation was not made, though the failure to make it was caused by the owner's refusal to appoint an arbiter, the title was not divested, and the owner and his grantees could recover the same after the change of government over the country by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

3. By the law of Texas, a judgment against a plaintiff, in an action for the possession of real property, is conclusive, unless he commence a second action within a year. Held, that, in an action commenced within the year by the former defendant against the grantees of the former plaintiff for the same property, the latter are not precluded by the judgment in the original action from setting up their claim to the land.

4. Where there was a mixed possession of the property in controversy, and a continued contest and litigation of the parties over it up to the commencement of the action, and an absence of actual possession by either, of a large portion of the property; it was held that no prescription could be claimed by either, and that the case must be determined on the documentary evidence of title.

Argued Nov. 14, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas.

This action was commenced by the City of Brownsville, now plaintiff in error, in the District Court of Cameron County, State of Texas, against Maria Josefa Cavazos, Elizabeth P. Stillman and others. The petitioner alleged that the defendants were guilty of various trespasses upon a certain tract of land, of which the petitioner was lawfully possessed in fee simple. The petitioner asked judgment, declaring it to be the true and lawful owner in fee simple of the tract in question, and that a writ of possession, in due form, issue, commanding the sheriff of the county to put the petitioner in the full and lawful possession of such tract of land, and that the claims and pretenses to title thereto set up by the defendants be adjudged invalid.

The case was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States by the defendants.

The property in question is within the boundary line tract of fifty-nine and one half leagues, called the Espiritu Santo tracts, granted by the Spanish Government to one De la Garza in 1781, which grant was recognized by the Legislature of the State of Texas by the "Act to relinquish the right of the State to certain lands therein named," approved February 10, 1852. It is conceded by both parties, that for several years prior and up to 1826, one Doña Maria Francisca Cavazos was seised of the Espiritu Santo tracts (including the land in dispute), by regular derangement of title under said grant. Madam Cavazos died in 1835, and devised the Espiritu Santo tract to three parties, one of whom was Doña Maria Josefa Cavazos, the first of the defendants above named, who, by an act of partition between the parties, became seised of that portion of the tract which is in question. A portion of these premises she subsequently conveyed to other persons, under whom the other defendants claim by regular derangement of title.

The title set up by the City arises from a proceeding for expropriation by which, as is alleged by the plaintiff, the premises in dispute were expropriated as part of the ejidos or town lands of the City of Matamoras, in 1826 and 1827. The principal question in the case is as to the validity and the effect of these expropriation proceedings.

The following was the decision of the court below:

"We find against both parties in fact, under the issue of prescription; and, as a matter of law, we find for the defendants on the question of title, namely: that the defendants are respectively seised in fee of the respective parts and portions of the lands claimed by the petition for which they respectively defend, and that the plaintiff is not so seised; and, as a consequence of this finding, we also find the defendants not guilty as they have severally pleaded, subject, however, to the disclaimer filed by the defendants; lands and premises disclaimed not being embraced in this judgment. And we give judgment for the defendants, that they severally recover the said lands in the parts and portions respectively claimed by them in the pleadings in the cause, and that as to the action and demand of the plaintiff, they go thereof without day and recover their costs."

The plaintiff below brought the case to this court by writ of error.

The case is further stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stephen Powers and Durant & Horner, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James R. Cox, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for the possession of certain real property in Brownsville, a City of Texas, situated on the left bank of the Rio Grande, opposite the Town of Matamoras. Previous to the revolution which separated Texas from the Republic of Mexico, Brownsville constituted a portion of Matamoras, which was recognized as a town in 1826 by a decree of the Congress of Tamaulipas, one of the States of Mexico. By the laws of Mexico in force at the time, pueblos or towns, when recognized as such by public authority, became entitled for their use and benefit and the use and benefit of their inhabitants, to certain lands embracing the site of such pueblos or towns and adjoining territory, to the extent of four square leagues. This right was held by the cities and towns of Spain for a long period before her conquests in America, and was recognized in her laws and ordinances for the government of her colonies here. L. of the Indies, in White, Recop., Vol. II., 44; Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wall., 326 [72 U. S., XVIII., 547]; Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall., 363 [73 U. S., XVIII., 863]; The Pueblo Case, 4 Sawy., 563. By them provision was made for the measurement of the lands and their assignment to the pueblos or towns, when once they were officially recognized. If any portion of the lands which fell within the four square leagues, laid off in the usual way in a square or oblong form, had previously become vested in private proprietorship, authority was sometimes given to take the necessary proceedings to divest the property of its private character—to expropriate it, as it was termed—and subject it to the uses of the town. Such was the case here. The four square leagues measured off and assigned to Matamoras crossed the Rio Grande and embraced the site of the present City of Brownsville, which was then the private property of one Doña Maria Francisca Cavazos. The premises were a part of a tract called the Espiritu Santo tract, granted by the Spanish Government, in 1781, to one De la Garza. The grant was recognized as valid by the Legislature of Texas in 1852, when it relinquished to the heirs and assignees of the grantee all the right and interest of the State therein. For the expropriation of the premises thus embraced within the limits of the land assigned to the municipality, proceedings were taken soon after the town was established, in 1826. For some years immediately preceding their institution, Madam Cavazos was seised of the Espiritu Santo tract by regular derangement of title from the grantee; and so continued until her death in 1835, unless she was divested of that portion assigned to the town by the proceedings for its expropriation. She devised the tract to three parties, one of whom is the defendant, Dña Josefa Cavazos, who, on partition with the others, became seised of that part which includes the premises in controversy, portions of which she conveyed to persons from whom the other defendants derive their title to the parcels which they severally claim.

The principal inquiry, therefore, presented for our consideration relates to the validity of the proceedings taken for the expropriation of the premises assigned to Matamoras as common lands—or ejidos, as they are termed in the Spanish language—on the left bank of the Rio Grande. And on this point we can add nothing to the clear and satisfactory exposition of the law contained in the opinion of the presiding Justice at the circuit. We can do little more than repeat his argument and adopt his conclusions. Brownsville v. Cavazos, 2 Woods, 293.

After the separation of Mexico from the mother country, the several States composing the Republic formed new constitutions of government, retaining the old Spanish laws so far as they were applicable to their new condition. The State of Tamaulipas, which embraced territory on both sides of the Rio Grande, in 1825 adopted a Constitution containing an article which declared that "Neither the Congress nor any other authority shall be able to take the property, even that of the least importance, of any private individual. When it shall become necessary for an object of a common recognized utility to take the property of any person, he shall first be compensated upon the examination of arbiters appointed by the Government of the State and the interested party."

Under this article, in order to divest the title of Madam Cavazos to the property taken, it became necessary to make to her compensation; and its amount could only be determined by arbiters, of whom one was to be chosen by her. But she declined to appoint an arbiter, or to participate in the proceedings. She desired to retain the farm occupied by her, from which she drew her support, and specially wished that it should be reserved from the ejidos or common lands. Various efforts were made for more than a year to induce her to act in the matter, but she persistently refused. Finally, in October, 1827, the Congress of the State interfered, and by its decree declared that the government, in the exercise of its powers, would see that the civil authorities of Matamoras compelled her to obey the Constitution and laws; that if, on being notified a second and third time, she should refuse to appoint an arbiter for the appraisement of her lands, which were to be taken for the town, the Common Council should proceed to their occupation and survey without further citation to her; and that should she or her heirs afterwards ask for indemnification, and be willing to name an arbiter, a new measurement should be made if desired, and the land she asked should be given to her.

It is upon this decree that the plaintiff, the City of Brownsville, relies to sustain its case, contending that the decree was an adjudication in rem for the expropriation of the property without compensation to Madam Cavazos, if she persisted in her refusal to name an arbiter; reserving, however, to her, the right to claim compensation at a subsequent period upon complying with the law. On the other hand, the defendants insist that the decree merely authorized the use of the lands without expropriation until indemnification to her should be provided as proposed by the government.

The presiding Justice at the circuit was of opinion that the court was not at liberty to question the validity of this decree, but must regard it as an act of the supreme authority of the State, in its dealings with its citizens, and that the inquiry of the court was, therefore, limited to its meaning and effect. This doctrine may, perhaps, be subject to some qualification, as the Congress of Tamaulipas was restrained by a written Constitution. But assuming that even a partial expropriation—a temporary possession of private property without compensation, in the case of an obstinate owner refusing to appoint an appraiser of its value—was permissible, we are of opinion that the position of the defendants is the only tenable one, and for several reasons:

In the first place, absolute expropriation was forbidden by the Constitution of Tamaulipas, without previous compensation. Until that was made, private ownership of the property was not divested. The State could have resorted to coercive measures to compel the owner to appoint an arbiter to act with its own appointee in estimating the amount to be paid. The decree states that the government would use its powers for that purpose, but it does not appear that any such measures were adopted. Its efforts did not go beyond a solicitation to her to act in the matter, and a summons in 1834 to all owners of lands within the ejidos to attend at the capital, "So that, hearing the Attorney-General of Finance, the indemnification to all might be agreed upon." Madam Cavazos declined to attend upon this summons, giving her old age as an excuse, but stating that she would receive her indemnification in money, and submit to whatever the government might order. It does not appear what action was then taken by the government. There is no evidence that any money was ever paid to her for the property, or that any mode was ever devised for appraising its value, other than that prescribed by the Constitution.

In the second place, the action of the Congress of Tamaulipas in 1848 upon this subject is persuasive, if not conclusive, evidence of the intent and meaning of the decree.

By the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, ratified on the 30th of May, 1848, 9 Stat. at L. 922, the Rio Grande was acknowledged to be the boundary between Mexico and the United States, when, of course, the jurisdiction of Tamaulipas over the premises in controversy ceased. But rights of private property previously existing in the territory east of the Rio Grande were in no respect affected. If they had arisen before the independence of Texas, their validity was to be determined by the laws of Mexico or Tamaulipas then in force. The authorities of Matamoras, claiming the ejidos under the decree in question, and believing that after the Treaty it would be difficult to enforce contracts with respect to the lands east of the Rio Grande, proposed to sell those now in controversy to various parties from the United States. Thereupon one John Treanor, representing the Cavazos family, and particularly Dña Josefa, one of the defendants in this suit, applied to the Congress of Tamaulipas for protection; in effect asking that the municipality be restrained from making the contemplated sale, on the ground that it possessed no just claim to the property, and that such action would be of serious injury to the owners. To this application the Common Council of Matamoras replied by setting up the claim of the City. The matter was then presented to the Congress, and referred to a committee, who gave to the subject extended consideration, and finally made an elaborate report, to the effect that compensation had never been made to the owners of the property; that such compensation was an indispensable requisite to its expropriation; and as such expropriation could not now be made in consequence of the change of government over the country, they were entitled to receive back their lands, and were not confined to compensation; and that the alienation of the lands by the City, under these circumstances would not be subjecting them to a public use, but disposing of them for purposes of speculation; adding, that the right of expropriation had another and more noble origin, its object being not to increase the public revenues, but to provide for the well-being of the community. The committee further suggested that the alienation might produce complications with the Government of the United States, as the latter would probably contend that, if the lands belonged to the municipality, they must be considered as public property. The Congress, therefore, passed a Resolution to the effect that as article thirteen of the ancient Constitution of the State and article seventy-one of the then existing Constitution prescribed that in no case could an expropriation be established without previous compensation; and as this had not been made for the ejidos situated on the left bank of the Rio Grande, the Corporation of Matamoras had not acquired any property in them, and that in consequence they were preserved to their ancient owners. This Resolution bears date the 20th of October, 1848. As between the City of Matamoras and the applicants it is conclusive; the Congress had jurisdiction of these parties; neither questioned its power, and both accepted its judgment as a finality.

Although this Resolution may not bind the State of Texas, or previous purchasers or alienees of Matamoras, it is entitled to the highest consideration and respect as a decision touching the law of Tamaulipas, and as an interpretation given to its Constitution upon the expropriation of private property, and to its own previous legislation. It accords with the obvious and natural meaning of the Decree of 1827, which only proposed to allow the City to occupy the lands in advance of compensation, and it is supported by all the attendant and subsequent circumstances of the transaction. We, therefore, adopt it as at once a just and reasonable disposition of the matter.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to inquire as to the possible interpretation which the language of the charter of Brownsville might receive, or what rights that City might have had, if Matamoras had held property on the east bank of the Rio Grande which, upon the independence of Texas, passed either to her successor or to the State.

It remains only to consider the pleas of res judicata and prescription interposed by the See 10 OTTO.

plaintiff in bar of the title set up by the defendants.

It appears that certain parties by the name of Basse & Ford, under whom some of the defendants trace their title, brought suit for the property now claimed against the City of Brownsville, which resulted in a judgment of dismissal in June, 1872; and a new suit under the law of Texas was not brought by them within one year afterwards. By that law a judgment against a plaintiff in an action for the possession of real property—or an action of trespass to try the title, as it is termed in the law—is conclusive unless he commence a second action for the property within a year. But the answer to the objection that the judgment here is conclusive against the defendants is, that before the year elapsed and, indeed, within ten days after the dismissal, the City commenced the present suit for the same property, in which all their rights were again brought into litigation. The law which gives to the dissatisfied party a right within one year to re-litigate a second time a controversy respecting land in Texas, does not bar him or his grantees from setting up his or their claim, if within the required period a similar suit respecting the same land is commenced against him or them by the former defendant. The object of allowing a second litigation of the same title, and of requiring such litigation to be speedily instituted, is equally accomplished.

As to the plea of prescription, we agree with the court below that, under the circumstances, the mixed possession of the parties, their continued contest and litigation from 1854 to the present time, and the absence of actual possession by either, of a large portion of the property, no prescription can be claimed and that the case must be determined on the documentary evidence of title.

We are satisfied with the conclusions reached by the Circuit Court, and its judgment is, in all respects, affirmed.

Original papers, when to be transmitted on appeal—affidavits—new evidence on bill of review—discretion.

1. The power of the courts below, and of this court, over the transmission of original papers to this court on appeal, is and should be confined to such as require actual inspection as originals, in order to give them their full effect in the determination of the suit.

2. The original affidavits, which have been sent up by the clerk below, are no part of the transcript in the cause, and the clerk of this court was right in not having them printed.

3. There is no universal or absolute rule which prohibits the courts from allowing the introduction of newly discovered evidence under a bill of review, to prove facts which were in issue on the former hearing.

4. But the allowance of it is not a matter of right in the party, but of sound discretion in the court, to be exercised cautiously and sparingly and only under circumstances which demonstrate it to be indispensable to the merits and justice of the cause.

Argued Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Charles S. Whitman, for appellant.
Messrs. Thomas I. Gardner, Jno. Guthrie, Jas. Coleman and Matt. H. Carpenter, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Craig, the appellant, on the 2d of February, 1872, filed a bill in equity against the defendants in the circuit court to enjoin them from using an improved well-tube, for which he claimed to have a patent. The defendants answered, attacking the validity of the patent: 1. Because the patented invention had been described in a certain printed publication publicly circulated and distributed prior to the supposed discovery by Craig; 2. Because it had been anticipated by certain other persons whose names and places of residence were given; and 3. Because it had been in public use more than two years before the date of the alleged patent. A replication to this answer was filed, and proofs taken. The cause was heard June 5, 1873, and a decree entered sustaining the patent, and ordering a reference to a master to take an account of profits. The master made his report December 12, 1873, and on the same day leave was granted the defendants by the court to file a petition for rehearing within forty days. This petition was filed Jan. 21, 1874, and set forth that, since the hearing, the defendants had discovered evidence of new and substantive facts which they had not been able to discover before, and which they were advised and believed were material and pertinent to the issues. This new matter was: 1. A patent to Charles Batcheller, of Keene, New Hampshire, as early as Dec. 12, 1865, for an invention alleged to be substantially like that of Craig; and, 2, an extensive prior knowledge and use during the years 1865 and 1866, in various places throughout the United States, of well-tubes in all material respects like that in dispute. The names and places of residence of twenty-five persons who had this prior knowledge of the thing patented, and who knew of its prior use, were given, and in addition affidavits of each one of these persons, showing what they knew and had seen, were attached to the petition as exhibits.

The petition further stated that the defendants were general hardware dealers at Topeka, Kansas, and sold the well-tubes, claimed to be an infringement, in their business; that when the suit was commenced they employed counsel, naming him, to conduct their defense; that, as they believed, he used due diligence in procuring evidence, but that notwithstanding his and their efforts they never really obtained any available clew to the facts until after the former hearing; that the patent to Batcheller was not found until Sep., 1873, and it was after that date when they actually ascertained that they could prove, by the persons named, the facts set out in the affidavits, made exhibits; "That, since the commencement of the suit, through all such likely sources as they could discover or were informed of, the said defendants have made persistent inquiry and search after the facts material and pertinent to the issues in said cause; but owing to the often uncertain character of their information, the scattered situation of the sources of information, and, withal, the delay and obstacles not easily surmounted, which were necessarily attendant upon such inquiry and search, they wholly failed to discover any of the evidence herewith exhibited until long after the submission, hearing and decree in said cause as aforesaid." Attached to the petition as an exhibit was an affidavit of the counsel showing his diligence in the premises. The petition was sworn to by one of the defendants.

On the 24th of January, 1874, a supplemental petition was filed, setting forth a considerable number of rejected applications for patents for improvements in well-tubes, which, it was claimed, described the complainant's patented invention. All the several applications were attached to the supplemental petition as exhibits. On the 18th of February, 1874, Craig asked and obtained leave until April 1, for the filing of counter affidavits, and the defendants were allowed until May 1, for such further steps on their part as they should be advised were necessary.

On the 27th of April, Craig filed his answer to the petition and supplement. In this he insisted that the newly discovered matter was wholly inadmissible, in fact and in law, for the purpose of obtaining a rehearing, because it all existed before the former hearing, and no sufficient reason was shown for the omission to procure it, and because it was cumulative only. He then denied that the patent to Batcheller anticipated his invention, and denied that the several persons named ever saw in use well-tubes like his before his patent was granted. He then took up the several affidavits filed with the petition as exhibits, and gave his reasons in each case why they did not sustain the claims of the defendants. In addition to this, he produced a large number of counter affidavits, which he attached and made exhibits to his answer.

On the 9th of June, the defendants filed a replication to the answer of Craig, and on the same day the following order was entered on the journal of the court:

"This cause coming to be further heard on a petition of the defendants for a rehearing, and it appearing that the decree had been enrolled before the said petition for a rehearing was filed in this court, it is ordered by the court, the parties consenting, that the petition for rehearing stand as and for a bill of review, and that the answer to said petition stand as an answer to said bill of review, and that the replication stand as a replication to the said answer. It is further ordered by the court, upon the consent of the parties hereto, that the affidavits taken by the parties and filed herein stand and be treated as depositions, and as such be read on the hearing. And the said cause being submitted by the parties to the court on the original bill, answer and replication, and the bill of review, answer and replication thereto, and the proofs, exhibits and drawings exhibited from the Patent Office, and models filed in the case, as well those used on the original bill, answer and replication as those taken and filed with the bill of review, answer and reply, was taken under advisement."

At the next Term, the bill of review was sustained, the original decree reversed, and the bill of the complainant dismissed with costs. At the same Term, an appeal from this decree to this court was allowed, and the following order made:

"And it is ordered by the court that the clerk of this court transmit to the Supreme Court of the United States the original exhibits, patent certificates, schedules, drawings and models on file, along with and as part of the record and transcript in this cause."

In making up the transcript of the record, the clerk below omitted all the affidavits filed with the bill of review and answer thereto, and sent up the originals. In printing the record for the use of the court those affidavits were omitted, and the court declining to allow them to be used at the hearing on that account, the appellant moved that they be printed, and the hearing suspended until that could be done.

It is necessary to determine at the outset whether the affidavits which were attached as exhibits to the bill of review and the answer thereto, and brought here as original papers and not copied into the transcript, will be considered as part of the proofs in the case.

In the Act of 1803, 2 Stat. at L., 244, which first authorized appeals to this court in "cases of equity, of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and of prize or no prize," it was provided "that, upon such appeal, a transcript of the libel, bill, answer, depositions and all other proceedings of what kind soever in the cause, shall be transmitted to the said Supreme Court; and that no new evidence shall be received in the said court, on the hearing of such appeal, except in admiralty and prize causes." Under this statute it was held, in the case of The El sineur, 1 Wheat., 439, that, where an inspection of original documents was material to the decision of a prize cause, this court would order the original paper to be sent up from the court below. This decision was made in 1816, and the next year the following rule was promulgated, 2 Wheat., vii.: "Whenever it shall be necessary or proper, in the opinion of the presiding judge in any circuit court, or district court exercising circuit court jurisdiction, that original papers of any kind should be inspected in the Supreme Court on appeal, such presiding judge may make such rule or order for the safe-keeping, transporting and return of such original papers as to him may seem proper, and this court will receive and consider such original papers in connection with the transcript of the proceedings." This rule, with some slight modifications, not at all important to the present inquiry is still in force as part 4, Rule 8. In 1823, the following rule was adopted, 8 Wheat., vi.: "No cause will hereafter be heard until a complete record shall be filed, containing in itself, without references alivunde, all the papers, exhibits, depositions and other proceedings which are necessary to the hearing in this court." This rule is still in force as part 3, Rule 8. The statute law regulating this subject remained unchanged until 1864, when the "Act to Regulate Prize Proceedings and the Distribution of Prize money, and for Other Purposes," 13 Stat. at L., 306, was passed. Section 13 of that Act provided for appeals in prize causes direct from the district courts, and for the transfer, on proper application, of causes then pending in the circuit courts to the Supreme Court. Then followed this language:

"All appeals to the Supreme Court from the Circuit Court, in prize causes, now remaining therein, shall be claimed and allowed in the same manner as in cases of appeal from the district court to the Supreme Court. In any case of appeal or transfer the court below, or the appellate court, may order any original document or other evidence to be sent up, in addition to the copy of the record, or in lieu of a copy of a part thereof."

From this it is clear to our minds that it was the intention of Congress to confine its legislation on this subject to prize causes, leaving the rules of court alone in force as to other cases; but in the revision of this statute this special provision of the Act of 1864, was reproduced in section 698, which is as follows:

"Upon the appeal of any cause in equity, or of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, or of prize or no prize, a transcript of the record, as directed by law to be made, and copies of the proofs, and of such entries and papers on file as may be necessary on the hearing of the appeal, shall be transmitted to the Supreme Court: Provided, That either the court below or the Supreme Court may order any original document or other evidence to be sent up, in addition to the copy of the record, or in lieu of a copy of a part thereof. And on such appeals no new evidence shall be received in the Supreme Court, except in admiralty and prize causes."

Construing this statute in the light of those from which it was taken, and the practice that had prevailed in the courts, which it was, undoubtedly, intended to confirm, we think the power of the courts below and of this court, over the transmission of original papers to this court on appeal, is and should be confined to such as require actual inspection as originals in order to give them their full effect in the determination of the suit. We will not undertake to control the discretion of the courts below in sending up papers which, in their judgment, require inspection; but where papers come up that ought not to be sent, we will look closely to the language of the order below to see whether they are included within its provisions.

Here the papers which have come up are what were used below as ordinary depositions, and there certainly appears to be no good reason why they should not be copied into the transcript. No complaint was made of their authenticity, and, so far as any representations have been made to us, there can be no possible necessity for their inspection. The order of the court was for the transmission of "The original exhibits, patent certificates, schedules, drawings and models on file, along with and as part of the record and transcript." It is true that the affidavits were attached as exhibits to the bill of review and answer, but we think the term "exhibit" was not used in that sense in the order. The evident purpose of the court was not to send here the original of what was to be read simply, but of what was to be looked at for the impression it was to produce. They ordered up what had been exhibited below as contradistinguished from what had been read. In that sense, the order conforms to what has always been the practice, from which we are not inclined to depart. Prudence requires that papers which properly belong on the files of a court should never be removed, except in cases of positive necessity, and anything which has an opposite tendency should be promptly discouraged here and elsewhere.

For these reasons, we hold that the original affidavits which have been sent up by the clerk below are no part of the transcript in the cause, and that the clerk of this court was right in not having them printed. The motion to print them now is also overruled, because, if printed, they cannot be considered by us a part of the proof. This being so, we must, under the understanding by which the hearing was permitted to go on, consider the case as it was argued; that is to say, as upon a demurrer to the bill of review, or, more properly, perhaps, as if the allegations made in the bill of review had been established by the evidence. In this condition of the case we may lay aside all the allegations in respect to the prior undiscovered patent issued to Batcheller, and all the newly discovered applications for patents on file in the Patent Office, rejected for want of patentability or otherwise. There is still left all that relates to the newly discovered evidence of the prior knowledge and use of machines like that patented. The averments as to this are full and complete, and notice of the names and places of residence of the persons alleged to have had such knowledge and to have seen the use is given with sufficient particularity. If the averments in this respect were true, and the newly discovered evidence was such as could be made available by bill of review, there can be no doubt that the original decree was wrong.

It is contended, however, that the evidence could not be used because it related to matters which existed at and prior to the former hearing, and by the use of proper diligence it might have been found and produced at that time, and also because the evidence was cumulative only. The bill avers that due diligence was used to find the evidence, but without success. This is one of the facts which, for the purposes of this hearing, we are to consider as proved by the evidence submitted below, but not sent here.

There is no universal or absolute rule which prohibits the courts from allowing the introduction of newly discovered evidence, under a bill of review, to prove facts which were in issue on the former hearing. "But the allowance of it is not a matter of right in the party, but of sound discretion in the court, to be exercised cautiously and sparingly, and only under circumstances which demonstrate it to be indispensable to the merits and justice of the cause." Such was the language of Mr. Justice Story, in Wood v. Mann, 2 Sumn., 334, and he states the rule none too strongly. In the absence of the evidence produced below, we are to presume that this case was brought within this requirement. In the original answer, a prior invention of one Young was set up, which, it was said, was like that of Craig, and the public use of this machine with the consent and allowance of Young in Mobile and Memphis. The new matter alleged in the bill of review relates to other machines used in other places. In legal effect, the bill of review gave new notice of prior knowledge and use by different persons and in different places from those set out in the answer. That a proper case was made for the admission of the evidence may fairly be inferred from the fact that, without submitting that question to the court, all parties went to a hearing, by consent, upon the merits of the case as presented under the original bill and the bill of review.

It is also contended that, even though the review was right, it was wrong to dismiss the original bill on the first hearing, and without an answer on file giving notice of the new matter; that is to say, of the names and places of residence of the persons alleged to have been discovered, who had knowledge of the prior invention and prior use, as required by section 4920 of the Revised Statutes. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that the cause was submitted by the parties "On the original bill, answer and replication, and the bill of review, answer and replication thereto, and the proofs, * * * as well those used on the original bill, answer and replication, as those taken and filed with the bill of review, answer and reply." This was clearly a submission of the whole case on the merits after a review granted. The bill of review contained all the notice to Craig that he could demand, and as it was filed more than thirty days before the final submission of the cause, all the requirements of sec. 4920, R. S., were substantially complied with.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MONTGOMERY.

State decisions—holder for value of negotiable paper—Alabama law—interpretation of statutes—national bank—usurious interest.

*1. The statutes of Alabama examined, and held to place bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable in money at "a certain place of payment designated therein," upon the same basis as to immunity from set-off, discount or equities, as bills and notes payable at a bank or private banking house. Such declared to be the intention and effect of the Act of April 8, 1873, amending section 1833 of Revised Code of Alabama.

2. The intention of the Legislature, clearly expressed in a constitutional enactment, should not be defeated by too rigid adherence to the letter of the statute, or by technical rules of construction. Any construction should be disregarded which leads to absurd consequences.

3. The Federal Courts are not bound by decisions of state courts upon questions of general commercial law.

4. A creditor who takes a negotiable note before maturity, so indorsed that he becomes a party to the instrument, as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, in consideration of an extension of time to the debtor, actually granted, is, according to the law-merchant, a holder for value, and his rights as such, are not affected by equities between antecedent parties of which he had no notice.

5. A national bank, at the request of its debtor, gave further time in consideration of the transfer before maturity, of a negotiable note, as collateral security, and in consideration also, of the payment, in advance, of usurious interest, for the period of extension. The note was so indorsed as to make the bank a party to the instrument, responsible for its due presentation and for due notice of non-payment. The consideration was, in part, legal and, in part, vicious. The former was itself sufficient to sustain the contract of extension and transfer, and to constitute the bank a holder for value. While the bank was subject to the penalties denounced by law for taking usurious interest, the statute under which it was organized had not declared the contract of indorsement void. No such penalty being prescribed, the courts could not superadd it.

Argued Nov. 18, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Alabama.

This action was commenced in the court below, by the defendant in error against Oates, the plaintiff in error, on a promissory note. Upon the first trial in the circuit court, a verdict was rendered for the defendant in that court. This verdict, however, was set aside and a new trial granted. In the second trial verdict and judgment were in favor of the Bank, from which judgment Oates has sued out the present writ of error.

Messrs. W. Hallett Phillips, P. Phillips, Hilary A. Herbert and William C. Oates, for plaintiff in error:

How can the Bank be a bona fide holder in the usual course of trade, when it acquired the note on a usurious contract? There is a solecism on the face of the expression, "a bona fide purchaser on usury," said the Supreme Court of New York.

Ramsdell v. Morgan, 16 Wend., 574.

The Supreme Court of Alabama has decided repeatedly, that the purchaser of negotiable paper on a usurious contract is not a bona fide purchaser, and that the equities of the maker against the payee, are available against the paper in the hands of such a purchaser.

Saltmarsh v. Tuthill, 13 Ala., 390; Carlisle v. Hill, 16 Ala., 405; Hunt v. Acre, 28 Ala., 596; Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala., 150.

See, also, Cram v. Hendricks, 7 Wend., 573; Gaither v. F. & M. Bank, 1 Pet., 37; Lloyd v. Scott, 4 Pet., 205; Harrison v. Hannel, 5 Taunt., 780; Dean v. Howell, Hill & D., 39; Keutgen v. Parks, 2 Sandf., 60.

Mr. H. C. Semple, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment in behalf of the First National Bank of Montgomery, against Oates, the plaintiff in error, upon a promissory note for $5,200, executed by him at Eufala, Alabama, on the 25th day of July, 1873, and made payable on the 1st of December thereafter, to the order of B. H. Micow, President, at the office of the Tallassee Manufacturing Company, No. 1, in the City of Montgomery. The consideration of the note was fifty shares of the capital stock of that company purchased by Oates, and for which, at the time, he received a certificate in the customary form. As part of the contract of purchase, he took from the company a separate written obligation, reserving to him the option, on the 1st of December, 1873, at the maturity of the note, of surrendering the certificate of stock and receiving his note duly canceled. It appears that Oates was induced to buy the stock upon certain representations of the special agent of the company as to its financial condition. These representations were subsequently ascertained by him to have been false and fraudulent.

On or about November 4, 1873, Micow applied to the Bank for an extension of time upon certain indebtedness then held by it against the company, amounting to about $40,000, and all of which matured thereafter and in that month. That indebtedness had been previously extended, on several occasions, at usurious rates of interest, paid invariably in advance. The Bank signified its willingness to give an extension for 30, 60, 90 and 120 days, upon collateral security being furnished, and upon the payment in advance for such extension of interest at the rate of one and one quarter per cent. per month, upon the different classes of the company's paper by it held. These conditions were complied with, and the extension was accordingly made for the periods stated. The required interest was not carried into the extension bills, but was paid in advance. Among the collaterals placed with the Bank, under this arrangement, was the note for $5,200 already described, indorsed in blank, "B. H. Micow, Prest."

The evidence was somewhat conflicting as to whether the officers of the Bank, at the time of receiving the note in question, had actual notice from Oates as to its consideration. It was, however, conceded that its president had reason to believe the note was given for stock of the company. Oates, although residing at Eufala, was a stockholder and director of the Bank. No inquiry was made of him by the officers of the Bank, before receiving the note as collateral security, as to any defense which he might have against its payment. But it was proven by them that, when the extension was given to the company, they had no notice of any defect in or defense to the note, or of any equities, except such notice as might be implied from the foregoing facts and the relations of the parties. It is not claimed, that the Bank had, at that time, any notice of the separate written obligation of the manufacturing company to which we have already referred.

On the 24th of November, 1873, the Bank gave written notice to Oates that it held his note as collateral security for the indebtedness of the company. A few days thereafter he transmitted to the Bank the company's agreement or obligation, under which he had purchased the stock and given his note, informing its officers that he had, by the same mail, returned his stock certificate to the company, and demanded the surrender and cancellation of his note. The Bank, replying to this notification, stated that it had purchased the note as negotiable paper, in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of any private understanding between Oates and the company, its officers or agents.

These are the essential facts developed in the record. We are to inquire whether the court below committed any error of law to the prejudice of the plaintiff in error.

The first contention of the plaintiff in error is, that, by the terms of the contract under which he purchased the stock and gave his note and, in view of the false and fraudulent representations of the company's agent as to its financial condition, he was entitled, as of absolute right, to surrender the certificate of stock and have his note returned or canceled; and, further, that his defense, upon that ground, was secured to him by the statutes of the State of Alabama, in force when the contract was made.

It is clear that, as between the Tallasse Manufacturing Company and Oates, the defense of the latter is perfect. And it would undoubtedly be sustained, even against the defendant in error, were it true, as claimed, that, by the statutes of Alabama, the transfer of the note was without prejudice to any defense which the maker might assert against the payee. This renders it necessary that we should ascertain to what extent, if at all, the rights of parties are affected or controlled by the statutes of Alabama.

By section 1833 of the Revised Code of that State it is declared that "Bills of exchange and promissory notes payable in money, at a bank or private banking house, are governed by the commercial law, except so far as the same is changed by this Code." Section 1839 declares that "All contracts or writings, except bills of exchange, promissory notes payable in money at a bank or private banking house, and paper issued to circulate as money, are subject to all payments, set-offs and discounts had or possessed against the same, previous to notice of the assignment or transfer."

Thus stood the law of Alabama until April 8, 1873, when by statute of that date, entitled "An Act to Amend Section 1833 of the Revised Code of Alabama," it was enacted that section 1833 (copied in full in the Act) "be so amended as to read as follows: 'Bills and notes payable at a banker's or a designated place of payment, are negotiable instruments; bills of exchange and promissory notes payable in money at a bank or a certain place of payment therein designated, are governed by the commercial law.'" Acts 1872-73, p. 111. By the same statute, section 1839, as it then stood in the Revised Code, was expressly repealed. It should be observed that the words "except so far as the same is changed by this Code," in section 1833 as it originally stood, are omitted from that section as remodeled by the Act of 1873.

The argument of the plaintiff in error is, that, although by the explicit declaration in the Act of 1873, "Bills and notes payable in money at a certain place of payment, therein designated," are negotiable instruments, to be governed by the commercial law, such bills and notes are, nevertheless, under section 1839, "subject to all payments, set-offs and discounts had or possessed against the same, previous to notice of the assignment or transfer." We concur with the court below in holding that construction to be wholly inadmissible. It seems that upon this precise point there has been no direct adjudication by the Supreme Court of Alabama, to which primarily belongs the duty of giving authoritative construction of the statutes of that State. The only case in that court to which we are referred that has any bearing upon this question, is Cook v. Ins. Co., 53 Ala., 37. Jones, it seems, gave to Cook, in 1871, a promissory note, payable to the order of the latter at the office of W. H. Roberts, Mobile, and indorsed by the payee to the insurance company. In an action instituted by the insurance company against Cook, the question arose as to whether the note was commercial paper, protected in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, against defenses resting upon payment, set-off or discount. The inferior state court ruled that it was paper of that kind; but the Supreme Court of Alabama held that the note, when made, was not commercial paper, and that the rights and liabilities of the parties were to be determined by the statute in force at the date of its execution. That court, speaking by its Chief Justice, said: "Since the making of the promissory note, on the indorsement of which this suit is founded, the Statute of April 8, 1873, has converted promissory notes, payable in money at a designated place, into negotiable instruments governed by the commercial law. It operates on the nature and obligation of the contract of the parties to such notes, and cannot be construed as affecting notes made and indorsed prior to its passage. The law of force when the note is made and indorsed regulates and defines the liability of the parties." No other reasons are assigned in support of the conclusion that the Act of 1873 did not control the case. It is quite manifest from the language employed by the court, that, had the note there in suit been executed subsequently to the Act of 1873, it would have sustained the ruling of the inferior state court, and excluded all defenses inconsistent with the established doctrines of the commercial law. Such, in our opinion, must have been its determination upon any proper construction of the Act of 1873. It is true that that statute does not in express words amend section 1839, whereby only "Bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable in money at a bank or private banking house, and paper issued to circulate as money," are in terms, protected against payments, set-offs and discounts, which the maker might assert in the case of all other contracts and writings. But it is perfectly evident that the object of the Act of 1873 was to place bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable at a certain designated place of payment, upon exactly the same basis, as to immunity from set-off, discount or equities, as the statute prescribed in reference to bills and notes payable at a bank or private banking house. In declaring that bills and notes of the former class were negotiable instruments, to be governed by the commercial law, the Legislature necessarily intended to throw around such paper the same protection that had previously been given by statute to bills and notes payable at banks or private banking houses. If such was not its object, then confessedly, the Act of 1873 was both meaningless and illusory. The duty of the court, being satisfied of the intention of the Legislature, clearly expressed in a constitutional enactment is to give effect to that intention, and not to defeat it by adhering too rigidly to the mere letter of the statute, or to technical rules of construction (Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet., 627; Sedgwick, Const. and Stat. Constr., 196) and we should discard any construction that would lead to absurd consequences. U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall., 482 [74 U. S., XIX., 278]. We ought, rather, adopting the language of Lord Hale, to be "curious and subtle to invent reasons and means" to carry out the clear intent of the law-making power when thus expressed. The defense of the plaintiff in error would be good under section 1839, if no regard was had to the Act of 1873; but since that statute expressly included notes payable at a certain designated place in the class of negotiable instruments to be governed by the commercial law, which could not be if section 1839 be enforced according to its literal import, the judiciary must respect the latest expression of the legislative will, and not permit it to be eluded by mere construction. "A thing which is within the intention of the makers of a statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter; and a thing which is within the letter of the statute is not within the statute unless it be within the meaning of the makers." [Suckley v. Furse], 15 Johns., 338; [People v. Ins. Co.], 15 Johns., 358, 380.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the statutes of Alabama do not permit, as against a bona fide holder, for value, of a "promissory note, payable in money at a certain place of payment therein designated," defenses which are disallowed in cases where the note is payable at a bank or private banking house.

2. Giving to the Alabama Statute the construction indicated, our next inquiry is, whether the Bank, under the circumstances disclosed in this case, became, according to the recognized principles of commercial law, a bona fide holder for value of the note in suit. That it acquired the note in good faith, without fraud, we are not permitted by the evidence to doubt. Its officers were not bound to inquire of the plaintiff in error, before they took the note, whether he had any defense or set-off. They rightfully supposed, as the face of the note imported, that he had undertaken absolutely to pay the amount specified at the time and place designated. That the President of the Bank had reason to believe it was given for stock of the Tallassee Manufacturing Company is a fact of no significance whatever in determining the question of good faith. Having no knowledge or notice of the private agreement between Oates and the Company, as set forth in the separate obligation of the latter, which was withheld from the public, the bank officers justly assumed that there was no circumstance attending the sale of the stock which could lessen the obligation of Oates to pay the note according to its tenor and effect.

But it is contended that, by the rules of commercial law, as recognized by the Supreme Court of Alabama, one who receives a promissory note as collateral security for a pre-existing debt does not become a purchaser for value, in the course of business, so as to cut off equities which the maker may have against the payee. Such was declared to be the settled doctrine of that court in Fenouille v. Hamilton, 35 Ala., 319. But the opinion in that case contains some passages which apply with peculiar force to a suit like this. The court said: "In this case there was no other consideration for the transfer of the note to the defendant than the security of the pre-existing indebtedness of the defendant's indorsee. The fact that the defendant may have been led to grant indulgence, or forbear to enforce his remedies for the collection of the debts, does not prove that such indulgence or forbearance was an element of the contract, or the consideration upon which it was made. If there was any forbearance by the defendant, it was a voluntary act to which he may have been persuaded by the collateral security, and may have resulted from a consciousness of security; but such forbearance was not the result of contract, and is not shown to have been the consideration of it." Had there been, in that case, a present consideration for the transfer of the note beyond giving security for a pre-existing debt, or had the forbearance of the creditor to enforce his remedies been an element in a binding contract, under which the collateral security was furnished, we are persuaded that the Alabama court would have ruled that the creditor, in receiving the collateral became a holder for value in the course of business. But, if we are mistaken in our interpretation of the decision of the Supreme Court of Alabama, the result will not follow for which plaintiff in error so earnestly contends. While the Federal Courts must regard the laws of the several States, and their construction by the state courts (except when the Constitution, treaties or statutes of the United States otherwise provide) as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States, in cases where applicable, they are not bound by the decisions of those courts upon questions of general commercial law. Such is the established doctrine of this court, so frequently announced that we need only refer to a few of the leading cases bearing upon the subject. Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet., 1; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 16 Pet., 495; Watson v. Turpley, 18 How., 517 [59 U. S., XV., 509]. We have already seen that the statutes of Alabama placed under the protection of the commercial law promissory notes, payable in money at a certain designated place; but how far the rights of parties here are affected by the rules and doctrines of that law is for the Federal Courts to determine upon their own judgment as to what these rules and doctrines are.

Upon principle and authority, we do not doubt that the defendant in error was, in the sense of the commercial law, a bona fide holder for value of the note in suit. In Swift v. Tyson [supra], cited by counsel, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Story, said that it entertained no doubt "That a bona fide holder for a pre-existing debt of a negotiable instrument is not affected by any equities between antecedent parties, when he has received the same before it became due, without notice of any such equities." In some of the state courts the authority of that case has been disputed, so far as the language of the court referred to collateral security received for a pre-existing debt, upon the ground that the note there in suit was transferred in payment of and not as security for a pre-existing debt, and that, consequently, the opinion expressed in the language just quoted was unnecessary to the decision of the point in issue. In the more recent case of Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How., 343 [61 U. S., XV., 334], it was contended that a party who took negotiable paper merely as collateral security for a pre-existing debt did not acquire it in the usual course of business, but took it subject to prior equities. The court being of opinion that no such question was presented by the record, waived its consideration. But after an extended review of the authorities, American and English, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Clifford, said: "It seems now to be agreed that, if there was a present consideration at the time of the transfer, independent of the previous indebtedness, a party acquiring a negotiable instrument, before its maturity, as a collateral security to a pre-existing debt, without knowledge of the facts which impeached the title as between the antecedent parties, thereby becomes a holder in the usual course of business, and that his title is complete, so that it will be unaffected by any prior equities between other parties, at least to the extent of the previous debt, for which it is used as collateral."

That language would seem to be conclusive of the question under consideration. There was here a present consideration at the time of the transfer, independent of the indebtedness of the manufacturing company to the Bank. That consideration as to the Bank was the unconditional extension of time upon all the company's indebtedness, for different periods reaching beyond the maturity of the note transferred as collateral security. Such extension for fixed periods was a cardinal element of the contract. The creditor forbore pursuit of the remedies which the law supplied for the enforcement of his demands, then soon to mature, in consideration of collateral security being furnished, and in consideration also of the payment by the debtor of usurious interest in advance. Besides, having received the note, indorsed so that it became a party thereto, the Bank was bound to observe all the rules of the law-merchant as to presentation, protest and notice of non-payment. It did not receive the note as the agent of the debtor, and merely for collection. It took it under all the responsibility as to presentation, protest and notice of dishonor, which attached to absolute ownership, and became liable to have the note treated as payment pro tanto, if there were a failure to make due presentation, and, in the event of non-payment, to give proper notice to the creditor. The debtor could not withdraw his indorsement after delivering the note, under the contract for extension, nor could the Bank, after receiving the note under that contract, disregard its agreement for forbearance. Nor was the Bank any the less bound by the contract for extension because of the payment in advance of usurious interest by its debtor. Although the taking of usurious interest subjected the Bank to certain forfeitures prescribed by law, and to an action by the debtor, if he so elected, to recover twice the amount so paid by him, it could not, of its own volition or by its own act, avoid the contract for indulgence because of such payment of usury. The payment in advance was itself a sufficient consideration for the extension, in the sense that the Bank would not be allowed to repudiate its agreement, upon the ground that it had taken usurious interest in violation of law. 2 Dan. Neg. Inst., sec. 1317. But independent of that aspect of the case, and throwing out of view altogether the usurious feature of the contract, we are of opinion that a creditor, who takes a negotiable note before maturity, so indorsed that he becomes a party to the instrument as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, and in consideration of an extension of time to the debtor, actually granted, is, according to the law merchant, a holder for value, and that his rights as such holder cannot be affected by equities between antecedent parties, of which he had no notice. Goodman v. Simonds [supra]; 1 Pars., Notes and B., 221-228; Story, Prom. N., sec. 195, n., 7th ed., by Thorndike; 1 Dan., Neg.

Inst., 2d ed., secs. 820, 832, and n.; Lead. Cas. upon Bills of Exch. and Prom. N., by Redf. and Big., 186-217, and n. Whether the taking of such note merely as collateral security for antecedent debts, without any binding contract for indulgence, would constitute a valuable consideration within the established rules of commercial law, protecting the creditor against defenses or equities between antecedent parties, of which he had no notice, it is not necessary now to decide. That precise question is not presented in this case, and we forbear to express any opinion upon it.

One other question remains to be considered. Counsel for plaintiff in error have pressed with much vigor the suggestion that the Bank, consistently with public policy, should not be regarded as a bona fide holder for value of the note in suit, since the contract under which it received the note involved in its execution a direct violation of the statutes against usury. We are referred in support of that position to several decisions of the Supreme Court of Alabama which, it must be conceded, announce the broad doctrine that one "who has become the indorsee of a bill, by violating the provisions of a statute, cannot with any degree of propriety be said to be a bona fide holder in the usual course of trade." Saltmarsh v. Tuthill, 13 Ala. 410; Saltmarsh v. Bk., 14 Ala., 668; Carlisle v. Hill, 16 Ala., 406. Without extending this opinion by a critical examination of those cases, we repeat that in the determination of such a question we are not bound by the decisions of the state court. The question is one of general law, and depends in nowise for its solution upon local laws and usages.

We are referred, in this connection, to two cases in this court, Levy v. Gadsby, 3 Cranch, 180, and Gaither v. Bk., 1 Pet., 37. The case in 3 Cranch is so meagerly reported that it is difficult to see the precise ground upon which the conclusion of the court was rested. That in 1 Peters, is clearly distinguishable from this case. There, a note was indorsed and delivered as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, evidenced by a note given on an usurious contract. The case was held to be governed by the statute of Maryland, which declared "All bonds, contracts and assurances whatever, taken on an usurious contract," to be utterly void. Under that statute, the contract of indorsement was held to be void. In the eye of the law, it was as though it had never existed and, consequently, no cause of action, it was adjudged, passed to the indorsee.

The case in hand is altogether different. The statute under which the Bank was organized, known as the National Banking Act, does not declare the contract, under which the usurious interest is paid, to be void.

It denounces no penalty other than a forfeiture of the interest which the note or bill carries, giving to the debtor the right to sue for and recover twice the amount of interest so paid. If we should declare the contract of indorsement void and, consequently, that no right of action passed to the Bank on the note transferred as collateral security, an additional penalty would thus be added beyond those imposed by the law itself. "On what principle could this court add another to the penalties declared by the law itself?" De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat., 367; Bk.

v. Dearing, 91 U. S., 29 [XXIII., 196]; Barnet v. Bk. [ante, 212].

Besides, in this case, the forbearance extended to the debtor was not upon the sole consideration of usurious interest paid in advance; it was upon the additional and substantial consideration that the debtor Corporation gave collateral security for the payment of indebtedness about to mature, and which it confessed its inability to meet. We have already seen that the transfer of the note before maturity, as collateral security and so indorsed that the Bank became a party to the instrument under obligation to make due presentment and give due notice of non-payment, was itself a sufficient consideration to constitute the Bank a bona fide holder for value, within the recognized principles of the law merchant. The presence, then, in the contract under which the note was indorsed and delivered to the Bank, of an additional consideration—the payment in advance of usurious interest—which the law declares to be vicious and illegal, ought not to destroy the entire contract of indorsement, when there is a sufficient consideration, aside from the usury paid, upon which it may rest.

We are of opinion that no error of law was committed by the court below, and the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

COUNTY OF CASS, Plff. in Err.,

Case followed—Missouri Act—constructive notice—subscription to stock.

1. County of Henry v. Nicolay, followed.
2. The Missouri Act of 1860, being an amendment to the general railroad law, does not apply to companies having special charters, in which special power is given to counties and townships to subscribe stock in aid thereof.
3. A bona fide purchaser of negotiable securities before maturity, is not affected with constructive notice of a suit respecting such paper.
4. An actual manual subscription on the books of a railroad company is not necessary to entitle a county to the stock of such company, nor to bind it as a subscriber thereto.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. James O. Broadhead, J. F. Phillips and A. Comingo, for plaintiff in error,

Mr. T. K. Skinker, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The action in this case was brought to recover the amount of certain interest coupons annexed to certain bonds of Cass County, Missouri, issued in payment of a subscription to the capital stock of the Clinton and Kansas City Branch of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company.

See 10 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

The case was tried by the court below without a jury, and judgment given for the plaintiff upon special findings of fact.

The case is almost precisely similar to that of Henry Co. v. Nicolay, reported in 95 U. S., 619 [XXIV., 394], the authority for issuing the bonds being claimed under the same charter, that of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, and being pursued under the same general Act of March 21, 1868, as in that case; and the same defense, amongst others, being set up, to wit: that the subscription to the capital stock of the road was made and the bonds issued by the Act of the county court alone, without a vote of the people, as required by the Constitution of 1865. This is the ground relied on in the first assignment of error.

The only material difference between the present case and that of Henry County, in reference to the point in question, arises from the circumstance that in this case the order of the county court for making the subscription to the capital stock of the road was not made until after the assignment by the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company of a portion of its franchises to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company; whilst in the Henry County case the order for a subscription was made before the said assignment. But we do not regard this difference as material. In both cases, the branch railroad was authorized to be constructed by a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company before the assignment, and a committee was appointed to take charge of its construction and solicit subscriptions therefor; and in both cases the bonds of the County were issued after the said assignment. The authority of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company to establish independent branches under its charter, and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 21, 1868, entitled "An Act to Aid in the Building of Branch Railroads in the State of Missouri," was considered in the Henry County case, and need not be again discussed. The resolution for establishing the branch road, to aid which the bonds now in question were given, was adopted on the 6th of June, 1870 and was as follows:

"Resolved, by the Board of Directors of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, that it is the desire of this company to build a branch railroad from a point on the main line of the road of said company, at or near the Town of Clinton, Henry County, northwardly in the general direction of Kansas City, to a point either on the Pacific Railroad easterly of said city, or to a point at said city on the line of road lately known as the Cameron and Kansas City Railroad, said branch railroad to be designated and known as the Clinton and Kansas City Branch of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad, and that the same is designated and established under the provisions of the charter of this company and the Act of the General Assembly of Missouri, entitled 'An Act to Aid in the Building of Branch Railroads in the State of Missouri,' approved," etc.

The findings also show that the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company authorized a committee to take charge of the construction of said branch road, and to use the name of the company, and to solicit subscriptions in its name to the use of said branch. As far, therefore, as depended upon the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company proper, its powers were exerted, before the assignment of its franchises, in the establishment and organization of the branch road. The branch being thus organized and set in operation, became invested with the powers and privileges conferred by the charter of the company, to enable it to lay out and construct its road, and to procure the requisite means of accomplishing these objects; and the counties through which it was located thereupon became authorized to subscribe stock in aid of its construction. These powers, having thus been brought into existence, were not extinguished by the subsequent partial assignment of its franchises by the parent company to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company. Whether the application to the County for aid was made before or after said assignment, could make no difference. As stated in the Henry County case, the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company still continued in existence, invested with a large portion of its franchises.

The County of Cass thus having the power to subscribe capital stock in aid of the branch road, the county court, on application made to it for that purpose, on the 28th of February, 1871, did order and adjudge "That the County of Cass do subscribe for and agree to take three thousand shares of the capital stock of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company (now in part the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company), in the name of and for the use and benefit of the Clinton and Kansas City Branch of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad, and to aid in the construction thereof, each share being of the denomination of $100, and amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $300,000, under and by virtue of the authority in the charter of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company contained, and under the Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled 'An Act to Aid the Building of Branch Railroads in the State of Missouri,' approved March 21, 1868, and in accordance with the resolutions and orders of the Board of Directors of said Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company establishing said branch railroad and authorizing subscriptions to said capital stock to aid in the construction thereof, adopted on the 6th day of June, 1870; the said stock to be paid for by the issue and delivery to the committee appointed to construct said branch railroad, or to their successors in office, of the coupon bonds of the County of Cass, of the denomination of $1,000 each, bearing date the first day of February, 1871, with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually," etc.

The order then prescribed certain conditions as to the time and circumstances under which the bonds were to be delivered, which are not relevant to the point under consideration.

In pursuance of this order, the bonds were signed by the officers of the County, and were issued in August, 1871; and the court finds that the plaintiff is an innocent holder for value of the coupons seen on.

We think that the case is entirely within the decision in Henry Co. v. Nicolay, and that the constitutional provision does not apply to it.

But the defendant, in its second assignment of error, relies on the Act of the Missouri Legislature passed January 14th, 1860, which required, as a condition precedent to the subscription of stock to a railroad company, and the issue of bonds to pay therefor, that an election should be held in the County to test the sense of the tax payers on the question of subscription.

The same objection was raised in the case of Schuyler Co. v. Thomas [ante, 88], and we overruled it on the authority of Smith v. Clark Co., 54 Mo., 58. We see no reason to change that opinion. The Act of 1860 was an amendment to the general Railroad Law, and is held not to apply to companies having special charters, in which special power is given to counties and townships to subscribe stock in aid thereof.

The third assignment of error relates to the supposed effect of the assignment by the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, of its franchises, to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, which has already been sufficiently discussed.

The fourth assignment is based on the fact that the bonds were issued pending and in violation of an injunction of the Circuit Court of the County of Cass, directed to the Justices of the County Court; and it is argued that this was notice to all the world of the objections to the regularity and validity of the bonds. It seems that the bonds were in the keeping of the National Park Bank of the City of New York, which was not made a party to the injunction suit. It also appears by certain proceedings of the County Court of Cass County, had on the 25th day of September, 1871, and set forth in the findings of fact, that the bonds were delivered to the construction committee of the branch railroad; but under what circumstances they were delivered is not shown. The coupons subsequently came into the hands of the plaintiff as an innocent purchaser for value. The question of lis pendens, as applicable to negotiable securities, was fully considered by us in the case of Warren Co. v. Marcy, 97 U. S., 107 [XXIV., 981], and we there held that a bona fide purchaser before maturity is not affected with constructive notice of a suit respecting such paper. That decision applies to the present case, and the objection cannot prevail to invalidate the plaintiff's title.

The fifth and last assignment of error is as follows: it does not appear from the finding of the facts by the court that the County Court of Cass County made any valid contract with the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company, or any other person or company, for the issue of stock to said County, nor that there was, in fact, any valid subscription by said county court to the stock of any company; and the court, therefore, erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff below, on the special finding of facts.

To this it may be answered, that it does appear that the county court on behalf of the County made an order to subscribe to the capital stock of the Tebo and Neosho Railroad Company for the use of the Clinton and Kansas City Branch; that it dealt with the construction committee of the branch road, and that the bonds in question were issued to the said committee in payment of said stock. That this was a transaction which entitled the County to the amount of stock subscribed, cannot be doubted. An actual manual subscription on the books of the company was not necessary to entitle the County to the stock, or to bind it as a subscriber thereto. In the case of Moultrie Co. v. Bk., 92 U. S., 631 [XXIII., 631], where the Board of Supervisors of the county ordered that a subscription to the stock of a railroad company be made by the County, and that bonds should be issued in payment thereof; and the order was recorded in the minutes of the Board, and bonds were actually issued to the railroad company in pursuance thereof, though no subscription to the stock was actually made on the books of the company, we held that, whether the action of the Board was in substance and legal effect a subscription, or only an undertaking to subscribe, accepted by the company, a valid contract existed between the County and the company. The committee of construction in the present case represented the branch railroad as a separate interest from that of the parent company, and the acts of the committee were, as to the branch, the acts of the company which the latter could not control or gainsay. The stock subscribed, or agreed to be subscribed, for the use of the branch, was separate stock, not under the control of the parent company, but under the control of the committee. As the dealings of the county court were with the committee, though the name of the company was used, the transaction was complete without any confirmatory action of the company, and the County was entitled to its stock whether certificates therefor were actually issued or not. We think that this assignment of error cannot be sustained.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Citation on appeal—when necessary—practice.

1. When the appeal is taken and perfected in open court during the term at which the decree complained of is actually entered, a citation is not necessary.

2. When the appeal was allowed in court when the appellees were present by their solicitors, but at a term subsequent to the rendition of the decree, a citation was necessary to bring the appellees to this court.

3. Where the appellants might well have supposed that a citation would be waived, this court will not dismiss the appeal absolutely, but order that a citation be issued and served, or that the appeal will be dismissed.

Submitted Dec. 1, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Lyman Trumbull, for appellants.

Messrs. E. C. and W. C. Larned, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

See 10 Otto.

The decree appealed from in this case was rendered February 12, 1879, during the December Term, 1878, of the circuit court. The appeal was not allowed until April 14, 1879, which was during the March Term, 1879. The practice only dispenses with a citation when the appeal is taken and perfected in open court during the term at which the decree complained of is actually entered; and, to be technically sufficient, so as to render a citation unnecessary, the taking of the appeal should, in some form, appear on the records of the court. The theory of the rule is, that as a party to a suit is constructively present in court during the entire term at which his cause is for hearing, and as the doings of the court are matter of record at the time, he is chargeable with notice of all that is done during the term affecting his suit; because, if actually absent when an order is made, he can on his return obtain full information by an examination of the minutes. Still, an appeal otherwise regular would not probably be dismissed absolutely for want of a citation, if it appeared by clear and unmistakable evidence, outside of the record, that the allowance was made in open court at the proper term, and that the appellee had actual notice of what had been done.

The records of the court in this case show an allowance of the appeal in court when the appellees were present by their solicitors. It was, however, at a Term subsequent to the rendition of the decree and, under the practice, a citation was necessary to bring the appellees to this court. The case was docketed promptly here at the Term to which the appeal was returnable, and as the appellants might well have supposed that a citation would be waived, we will not dismiss the appeal absolutely, but apply the rule acted upon in Dayton v. Lash, 94 U. S., 112 [XXIV., 33], and "grant summary relief" "by imposing such terms upon the appellants as under the circumstances may be legal and proper."

An order may be entered that, unless the appellants cause a citation, returnable on the first Monday of February next, to be issued and served upon the appellees before that date, the appeal be dismissed.

NOTE.—In the similar case, Gurnee v. Blair, No. 988, argued at the same time, similar order was made.

Preemption—notice for—superior equity.

1. Under the Act of March 3, 1853, a person, to acquire a preemption right in land, must file the requisite notice of his claim in the land-office for the district, within three months after the plats of the survey of the lands are returned to the land-office.

2. Such notice, if given before the time allowed by law, is a nullity; but where it is filed subsequent to the period prescribed by the amendatory Act it is operative and sufficient unless some other person had previously commenced a settlement and given the required notice of claim.

3. Where neither of the parties complied strictly with the law in filing the declaratory statement, but the plaintiff holds the legal title and the superior equity, the defendant has no such standing in court as will justify a court of equity in interfering in his behalf.

Argued Dec. 1, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. R. Mason and John S. Hauke, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. W. Cope and Walter Van Dyke, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Preemption rights of the kind in controversy are regulated by the Act of March 3, 1853, from which it appears that unsurveyed as well as surveyed lands, not exempted by the same Act, are subject to the preemption laws, with all the exceptions, conditions and limitations expressed in such, unless otherwise herein provided. Provision is also made for the appointment of a Surveyor-General and of a register and receiver, with the same powers and duties as conferred and prescribed under the prior preemption laws. Official surveys were to be made, and the same section which gives the right to pre-empt the lands provides that, where unsurveyed lands are claimed, the usual notice of such claim shall be filed within three months after the returns of the plats of surveys to the land-office. 10 Stat. at L., 244.

Proceedings in the nature of an action of ejectment were instituted by the plaintiff to recover certain lands situated in Humboldt County, and damages for their detention. Service was made; and the defendant appeared and filed what is called in the state practice, an answer and cross complaint, in which he admits possession but denies that it is wrongful, and sets up a preemption title to the lands.

Complete title to the lands is claimed by the plaintiff under a patent from the United States, issued to him as a preceptor. On the other hand, the defendant claims that he was justly and legally entitled to the patent, which was wrongfully issued to the plaintiff; and the object of the cross complaint is to establish a trust in favor of the defendant, and to compel the plaintiff to convey the lands to the defendant.

Every allegation of the cross complaint being denied by the plaintiff, he demurred to the same, and showed for cause as follows: (1) That it does not appear by the allegation of the same that the defendant filed the required notice of his claim in the land-office for the district within three months after the plats of the survey of the lands were returned to the said land-office. (2) That it appears that all the matters in controversy had previously been determined and adjudicated by a competent tribunal in an issue respecting the title to the same property between the same parties. (3) That it does not appear that the defendant ever made the proof required by law before the register and receiver of the land-offices, prior to the day appointed for the commencement of the sale of the land. (4) Because the cross complaint shows that the defendant did not in person occupy the land for nearly a year before the cross complaint was filed.

Hearing was had; and the court of original jurisdiction sustained the demurrer and rendered judgment for the plaintiff, which, on appeal, was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Being dissatisfied with the judgment, the defendant sued out a writ of error, and removed the cause into this court.

Errors assigned here are as follows: (1) That the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the cross complaint. (2) That the court erred in affirming the judgment of the subordinate state court. (3) That the court erred in holding that the declaratory statement of the defendant was a nullity because it was filed before the plats of survey were returned into the land-office by the Surveyor-General.

Sufficient appears, to show that the land was unsurveyed and that the plaintiff made entry and settlement of the land in controversy on the first day of November, 1853, before the plats of survey were made; that the defendant made entry and settlement on the same quarter section the 22d of February, 1854, the land being still unsurveyed. Nothing is exhibited in the record to enable the court to ascertain the precise date of the survey, but it appears that the defendant filed his notice of claim or declaratory statement prior to the return of the plats of survey to the local land-office, the record showing that the declaratory statement of the defendant was filed on the 20th day of February, 1856, and that the plats of the surveys of the land were not returned into the local land office until the 26th of April following.

Congress has provided that where unsurveyed lands are claimed by preemption, the usual notice of such claim shall be filed within three months after the return of plats of surveys to the land-officer, and proof and payment shall be made prior to the day appointed by the President's Proclamation for the commencement of the sale, including such lands. 10 Stat. at L., 244.

Declaratory statements under the original Act might be made within three months after the return of the plats of surveys to the local land-offices, and it was effectual as a step to secure the right, if it was made within one year from the passage of the Act, which last provision was amended by a subsequent Act, and extended to settlements made prior to and within two years after the passage of the amendatory Act. 12 Stat. at L., 410.

Due settlement of the quarter section in controversy was made by the plaintiff more than four months before the defendant entered upon it and commenced his settlement, but he did not file the usual notice of claim or declaratory statement until the 11th of October, 1858, more than two years after the amendatory Act went into operation. Authority to file such a declaratory statement within three months after the plats of survey are returned into the local land-offices is expressly given by the Act of Congress; but there is no authority given to file before that time, from which it appears that the declaratory statement filed by the defendant was premature. Attention to that subject was called on the trial of the case in the court below, and the Supreme Court of the State held that the statement of the defendant, inasmuch as it was filed without authority of law, was a nullity, and this court adopts that conclusion as correct.

System and order are essential, in administering the land-offices, and if a party may anticipate the time for such an act as prescribed by law for two months, it is not perceived why he may not for two years, or even for a longer period, which would necessarily introduce confusion, uncertainty and irregularity of practice in the local offices of the Land Department. For these reasons the court is of the opinion that the declaratory statement filed by the defendant is inoperative and without any legal effect. Daniels v. Lansdale, 43 Cal., 41; 1 Lester, Land L., 400; Copp, Land L., 420.

He filed his declaratory statement more than two months before the return of the plats of survey, and in direct violation of the law upon the subject, which required it to be filed within three months after such return, as appears from the explicit language of the Act; nor can the court relieve the defendant from the consequences of his failure to comply with the express requirement.

Opposed to that is the suggestion that the statement remained in the local land-office when the plats of survey were returned there; but that circumstance will not remove the difficulty, as it was made and filed without authority of law, and was, in every sense, an unofficial document not belonging to the office. Such a notice of claim or declaratory statement is indispensably necessary to give the claimant any standing as a preemptor, the rule being that his settlement alone is not sufficient for that purpose.

Attempt is made to show that the plaintiff failed to comply with the requirements of the preemption laws as to the settlement, occupancy and cultivation of land entered for preemption; but the court is of the opinion that the defense in that regard is wholly unsustained. Nothing of moment is alleged in the answer to support the alleged defect, except that the plaintiff purchased a dwelling-house, instead of erecting the one which he occupied. His entry and occupancy of the tract are admitted; and the court is of the opinion that it is immaterial whether he built the dwelling-house himself or hired an agent to erect it for him, or whether he purchased it after it was built by another, provided it appears that he was the lawful owner of the dwelling-house, and made the entry and settlement in good faith, and continued to occupy and cultivate the land, as required by the preemption laws. Enough appears to show that the dwelling-house was there on the land, and that it was owned, possessed and occupied by the plaintiff as his home more than three months before the defendant entered and attempted to make his settlement. 1 Lester, Land L., 424.

Suppose that is so; still the defendant insists that he was entitled to the patent because the plaintiff did not file his declaratory statement until more than two years after the plats of the survey of the land were returned into the local offices. Grant that, but it only shows that both parties settled upon the land while it was unsurveyed, and that each was to some extent in fault in filing his declaratory statement, the difference being that the defendant filed his before he had any right to file it under the Preemption Act, which rendered it a nullity, and that the plaintiff did not file the required notice of claim until the time allowed by the amendatory Act had expired. Such a notice, if given before the time allowed by law, is a nullity; but the rule is otherwise where it is filed subsequent to the period prescribed by the amendatory Act, as in the latter event it is held to be operative and sufficient unless some other person had previously commenced a settlement and given the required notice of claim. Johnson v. Townsley, 13 Wall., 72, 91 [80 U. S., XX., 485, 489].

Tested by that rule, it is clear that the equity of the plaintiff is superior to that of the defendant, as the latter never filed any other notice of claim than that which preceded the return of the plats of survey into the local land-offices.

Other defenses failing, the defendant contends that the plaintiff failed to comply with the requirements of the preemption laws in other respects; but the court is of the opinion that the defense in that regard is not made out, it appearing that he had a dwelling-house thereon, of which he was the lawful owner, and that his occupancy was continuous, either in person or by his tenant. 5 Stat. at L., 455, sec. 10; 1 Lester, Land L., 424.

Beyond doubt, the declaratory statement of the defendant was a nullity, as it was filed at a time when the Act of Congress gave it no effect; and it is equally clear that the notice of claim was not seasonably filed by the plaintiff, but the entry and settlement of the plaintiff were first made; from which it follows that the equity, as between him and the defendant, is decidedly in his favor, the universal rule in such cases being that in the adjustment of such controversies the superior equity must prevail. Story, Eq. Jur., 9th ed. sec 64 d. Qui prior est in tempore, potior est in jure. Jeremy, Eq. Jur., 285, 286; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet., 177; Adams, Eq., ed. 1872, 148.

Nor does the plaintiff rely entirely upon the proposition that his is the superior equity, which of itself is sufficient to show that the judgment below must be affirmed; but it also appears that the parties were fully heard before the Land Department, where the decision was in his favor, and that he now holds the patent for the land; from which it follows that the legal title is in the plaintiff.

Neither of the parties complied strictly with the law in filing the declaratory statement; but, inasmuch as the plaintiff holds the legal title and the superior equity, it is clear that the defendant has no such standing in court as will justify a court of equity in interfering in his behalf.

Complaint is made by the defendant, of the decision of the Land Department in granting the patent to the plaintiff, but it is too clear for argument that no case is made to warrant the court here in reversing that decision. Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S., 330 [XXIII., 424]; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S., 530 [XXIV., 848].

Reference to these authorities is sufficient to show that the defendant is not entitled to the relief asked; but if the law were otherwise, it would not benefit the defendant, as he does not show what questions were litigated before the land-officers, nor does the record contain any specification as to what the rulings of the officers were in regard to any particular point. It appears that there was a contest between the parties there, and that the case was decided in favor of the plaintiff, but the grounds of the decision are not stated. Such being the state of the pleadings, it is impossible to say that any error of law was committed by the tribunal.

Viewed in any light, it is clear that there is no error in the record, and the assignment of errors must be overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

JOHN T. MOORE & COMPANY, a Commercial firm composed of JOHN T. MOORE and JOHN T. MOORE, JR., Interveners, Appts.,

v.

AMANDA M. F. SIMONDS, Admr. of JOHN S. SIMONDS, ET AL.

Misnomer in appeal—mortgage on vessel.

1. Where an appeal should have been taken in the name of the individual members of a commercial firm, but instead thereof is taken in the name of the firm, the defect is one that may be amended under the law as it now stands, and for that reason this court will not dismiss the appeal.

2. A mortgage on a vessel, under the Act of Congress, as between the parties, and as against persons having actual notice thereof, is valid without acknowledgment or record.

Submitted Dec. 8, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

This cause was commenced by libel filed in the District Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana, against the steamboat John T. Moore. The cause was transferred to the circuit court, after various proceedings had when the decree appealed from was rendered.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Mr. Richard De Gray, for appellees.

Messrs. Charles Singleton and Singleton & Browne, for appellants.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Technically, this appeal should have been taken in the names of the individual members of the commercial firm of John T. Moore & Co., instead of in the name of the firm, and because of such an irregularity an appeal was dismissed in the case of The Protector, 11 Wall., 82 [78 U. S., XX., 47]. That case was decided before the Act of June 1, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 196, sec. 3, now sec. 1005, R. S., allowing amendments of writs of error in certain cases, and it does not appear that the defect could have been remedied by reference to anything in the appeal papers. Here, however, section 1005 was in force when the appeal was taken, and the bond shows that the firm in whose favor the appeal was allowed was composed of John T. Moore and John T. Moore, Jr. We are clear, therefore, that the defect is one that may be amended under the law as it now stands, and for that reason we will not dismiss the appeal. But on looking into the record we find that the only question involved is whether the lien of the appellants' mortgage on the steamboat John T. Moore is superior to that of another mortgage in favor of Swift's Iron and Steel Works and Dennis Long. From the findings of fact it appears that the last named mortgage was executed Jan. 27, 1871; that it was signed and acknowledged by the owner of the boat in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom was a notary public; that the witnesses attested the execution of the mortgage, but the notary did not sign officially; that there was no other or further acknowledgment of the mortgage before a notary; and that this mortgage was not recorded in the office of the collector of customs where the boat was permanently enrolled. The mortgage to Moore & Co., the appellants, was executed Jan. 3, 1872, and was duly recorded in accordance with the Act of Congress; but when it was taken, Moore & Co. had actual notice of the existence of that to the appellees. Upon this state of facts the court below held

NOTE.—Record of mortgages on vessels of U. S.

The mortgage on a vessel of the United States must be recorded in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled. U. S. R. S., sec. 4192; 9 Stat. at L., 440; Act of July 29, 1850; Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen, 280; Mott v. Ruckman, 3 Blatchf., 378; The Wm. T. Graves, 14 Blatchf., 189; White's Bk. v. Smith, 74 U. S., XIX., 211.

The mortgage on vessel is valid against persons having actual notice of it, although not acknowledged and recorded. Moore v. Simonds, supra; The Parker Mills v. Jacob, 8 Bosw., 161; Cape Fear Steamboat Co. v. Conner, 3 Rich., 335; Hobbs v. The Interchange, 1 W. Va., 57; The John T. Moore, 3 Woods, 61.

The requirement as to record is limited to vessels of the U. S., which have been enrolled and licensed as the statute provides. Act of Dec. 31, 1792; 1 Stat. at L., 287; Act of Feb. 13, 1793; 1 Stat. at L., 305; Weaver v. The S. G. Owens, 1 Wall., Jr., 359; Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen, 280; Best v. Staple, 61 N. Y., 71.

Before a vessel is registered or enrolled, a mortgage of it will be valid if recorded according to the laws of the State where the vessel is at the time. Perkins v. Emerson, 59 Me., 319; Foster v. Perkins, 42 Me., 165.

But after it is registered or enrolled, the laws of the U. S., which supersede state laws, must be complied with. Shaw v. McCandless, 36 Miss., 296; Wood

v. Stockwell, 55 Me., 76; Perkins v. Emerson, 59 Me., 319; Cunningham v. Tucker, 14 Fla., 251; Robinson v. Rice, 3 Mich., 235; Aldrich v. Aetna Ins. Co., 75 U. S., XIX., 473; The Martha Washington, 15 Law Rep. N. S., 22.

The mortgage on a vessel creates no priority over maritime claims of any class for which maritime law gives a lien. If the mortgagee wishes to avoid claims against the mortgaged vessel he should take possession. The Alice Getty, 2 Flippin, 13; The General Burnside, 2 Flippin, 144; Fox v. Holt, 36 Conn., 558; Baldwin v. The Bradish Johnson, 3 Woods, 582; Reeder v. The George's Creek, 3 Am. L. Reg., 252; 3 Hughes, 584; The Desmet, 10 Fed. Rep., 453; The Paragon, 1 Ware, 322; The Hiawatha, 5 Sawy., 160.

If the mortgage permits a vessel to sail, he cannot defeat debts for repairs and supplies on the credit of the vessel, any more than a purchaser. The Alice Getty, 2 Flippin, 13; The Acme, 7 Blackf., 366; 2 Ben., 386; Scott v. Delahunt, 5 Lans., 47; 65 N. Y., 128; The Wm. T. Graves, 8 Ben., 568; 14 Blatchf., 189; The Canada, 7 Sawy., 173; Hatton v. The Melita, 3 Hughes, 494; The Emily Souder, 84 U. S., XXXI., 683; Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S., 417.

It has been held that a duly recorded mortgage upon a vessel is entitled to priority over a claim for supplies and materials furnished in the home port. The Kate Hinchman, 7 Biss., 238; The John T. Moore, 3 Woods, 61; The Skylark, 2 Biss., 251; The Island City, 1 Low. Dec., 875; Hilton v. Miller, 62 Ill., 230.

that the mortgage of the appellants was inferior in lien to that of the appellees; and this was so clearly right that we are not inclined to hear an argument upon the question.

The Act of Congress relied on by the appellants is now found in sections 4192 and 4193 of the Revised Statutes. These, so far as they are material to the present inquiry, are as follows:

"Sec. 4192. No bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation or conveyance of any vessel or part of any vessel, of the United States, shall be valid against any person other than the grantor or mortgagor, his heirs and devisees, and persons having actual notice thereof, unless such bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation or conveyance is recorded in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled.

Sec. 4193. * * * But no bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation or conveyance or discharge of mortgage, or other incumbrance of any vessel, shall be recorded, unless the same is duly acknowledged before a notary public or other officer authorized to take acknowledgment of deeds."

To our minds, there is no doubt that Congress only intended to require that a mortgage on a vessel should be acknowledged for the purpose of authenticating it for record; and that, as between the parties and as against persons having actual notice thereof, it was valid without acknowledgment or record. As this was the decision of the court below, we deny the motion to dismiss, and grant that made under Rule 6, to affirm.

Affirmed.

JOHN C. MULFORD ET AL.

Jurisdiction as to amount—uniting claims.

1. In a suit in equity against two persons, in which there is no pretense of a joint obligation, and in no event can there be a recovery against either of them separately for more than $2,500, this court has no jurisdiction.

2. Neither co-defendants nor co-complainants can unite their separate and distinct interests for the purpose of making up the amount necessary to give this court jurisdiction on an appeal.

Argued Dec. 10, 11, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. A. S. Worthington, for appellants.

Mr. William A. Cook, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in equity brought by the Ballard Paving Company against Michael Mandle, and sundry persons who claimed to be purchaser from Mandle of certain certificates of the Auditor of the Board of Public Works of the District of Columbia, which it was alleged were the property of the Paving Company. Mulford and Campbell, the appellees, were two of the defendants, but they were proceeded against as holders of separate and distinct certificates. Their liability as set forth in the bill was several only. There was no pretense of a joint obligation, and it is conceded that in no event could there be a recovery against either of them separately for more than $2,500. On the hearing, the bill was dismissed as to these defendants, and the Paving Company has appealed.

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court depends on amount; interest cannot be added to give jurisdiction; how value of thing demanded may be shown; what cases reviewable without regard to sum in controversy. See note to Gordon v. Ogden, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 33.

See 10 OTTO.

We think it clear that we have no jurisdiction in this case. Although many defendants have been brought into the suit, the proceeding is, in fact, against each of the several purchasers, to enforce his separate and distinct liability. It is a joinder of distinct causes of action against distinct parties. The same decree is to be entered against each as in case of separate suits. The recovery, if any, must be against each defendant separately for the amount he may personally be found accountable. Such being the case, the value of the matter in dispute with each defendant must be the sum for which he is separately liable. It is well settled that neither co-defendants nor co-complainants can unite their separate and distinct interests for the purpose of making up the amount necessary to give us jurisdiction on an appeal. Seaver v. Bigelow, 5 Wall., 208 [72 U. S., XVIII., 595]; Rich v. Lambert, 12 How., 347; Oliver v. Alexander, 6 Pet., 143; Stratton v. Jarvis, 8 Pet., 4. In such cases the appeal of each separate defendant or complainant must stand or fall according as his own interest in the controversy exceeds or falls short of our jurisdictional amount. The same principle applies here. For the purposes of an appeal, each separate controversy must be treated as a separate suit. Under this appeal, two separate controversies have been brought here, and in neither is the amount involved sufficient to give us jurisdiction.

For this reason the appeal is dismissed.

Argued Dec. 2, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. G. W. & J. T. Kretzinger, H. Crawford and S. P. McConnell, for appellant.
Mr. R. Biddle Roberts, for appellee.

Mr Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The main features of this case, as presented here on appeal, are embodied in the following statement signed by counsel:

"To obviate the necessity of examining a large part of the very voluminous record filed in this cause, the following statement is agreed upon between the counsel of the parties to this branch of the case:

Levi P. Morton et al., the holders of sundry bonds issued by the Gilman, Clinton and Springfield Railroad Company, secured by a deed of trust made to Thomas A. Scott and Hugh J. Jewett, as trustees, filed a bill in the Circuit Court of McLean County, State of Illinois, seeking a foreclosure of the trust-deed and a sale of the property for their benefit.

Shortly prior to the filing of this bill, Joseph J. Kelly had filed a bill as a stockholder of said railroad in the same court, and Francis E. Hinckley, a citizen of Chicago, had been appointed receiver, and continued to discharge the duties of such officer pending the proceedings in both cases along the road.

On June 23, 1875, Thomas A. Scott and Hugh J. Jewett, the trustees named in the deed of trust, came into said Circuit Court of McLean County, and became parties to the said suit of Morton et al. against the railroad; and from that time the litigation was carried on in their names, the receiver still acting in both cases, and reporting to the Circuit Court of McLean County.

On the 13th day of December, 1875, the said cause was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois, under the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 8, 1875.

Prior to this, on August 12, 1875, the property was ordered to be turned over to the trustees under the provisions of the mortgage, by order of the Circuit Court of McLean County, and the receiver directed to settle his accounts up to that date; and his accountability as such receiver ceased from the 28th day of August, 1875, the property having at that time been handed over by him to the agent of the trustees as aforesaid.

The subsequent proceedings in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois aforesaid were carried to completion, the sole parties then in court being the trustees and their cestuis que trust, and the said Gilman, Clinton and Springfield Railroad Company and its receiver, all other parties having been dismissed from the record, the final decree having been had, and the road having been sold by virtue thereof and a deed for the same duly executed and approved by the said court, and no appeal ever having been prayed."

The remainder of the record before us consists solely of the proceedings in the Circuit Court of the United States against Hinckley, as receiver, to bring him to account, resulting in a decree against him for $18,776.25, from which this appeal is taken.

The first appearance of appellant in the Circuit Court of the United States, as far as this record discloses, is by a report made to that court entitled as of the case of Kelly v. R. R. Co. In this paper, after showing a balance of $12,799.78, in his hands as receiver, he proceeds to state sundry liabilities of that fund, for which he asks of the court an order that he may pay them. This report was filed March 23, 1876, and on that day an order was made that he pay the sum so admitted to be in his hands into court. It seems, however, that after this the whole matter of the receiver's account was referred to a master, on whose report, after exceptions by the receiver, the decree was rendered which is now under review.

The chief reliance of counsel in this court for a reversal of the decree is upon the proposition that Hinckley was never receiver of any other court but the McLean Circuit Court of Illinois, in the suit in which Kelly and others were plaintiffs, and that he could be called to account only by the court to which he was responsible in that suit.

But the agreed case shows that, shortly after his appointment as receiver in the Kelly suit, the foreclosure suit of Levi P. Morton and others, bondholders, was commenced in the same court, and afterwards adopted by Scott and Jewett, trustees for said bondholders, and that thereafter "The litigation was carried on in their names, the receiver still acting in both cases, and reporting to the Circuit Court of McLean County."

This is also stated in a previous paragraph.

We can reach no other conclusion from this agreement, in the absence of the record of the McLean Circuit Court on the subject, than that Mr. Hinckley was receiver in the principal case, which was removed into the Federal Court. There is other evidence that it was so understood by Hinckley. The order of removal was made December 13, 1875, and on the 23d of March 1876, we find him reporting, without objection, to that court, and asking for orders in the nature of instructions as to the disposition of the money in his hands. For aught that appears, this report was his own voluntary act, as well as his duty.

Nor does any such objection appear in the exceptions to the master's report, nor was any exception taken to the order of reference.

It does not appear from this record that the Kelly suit was prosecuted any further after the removal of the foreclosure suit into the Federal Court, nor do we know enough of its character to decide whether anything of it was left after the order of removal, or whether its subject-matter was not necessarily removed with the other suit.

No attempt to bring Hinckley to account in the state court is shown.

Being voluntarily in the United States Court, in a suit where the funds in his hands might properly be distributed, at least under supposable circumstances, and having money in his hands as receiver in the suit removed into that court, we can see no want of authority to make him account for these funds.

It is also urged that since the agreed facts show that the road had been finally sold and conveyed under the mortgage, the trustees had no right to the money in the receiver's hands. The sufficient answer to this is, that the decree from which this appeal is taken merely orders the appellant to pay the money into court, and makes no order for its distribution. In that Mr. Hinckley has no interest, and when made it will be for other parties to contest it if they desire.

Two objections are taken by appellant to the statement of the account by the master. The first is, that for nearly two years' service the master allowed him only $10,000, whereas he ought to have allowed him $1,000 per month.

The principal witnesses of appellant to sustain this exception are two gentlemen who were themselves receivers of other roads, and thought they rightfully received $900 in one case and $1,000 in the other, per month. Perhaps they were the best judges of the value of their own services; but such is not always the case, and as there is conflicting testimony, and as this is the first time we have been called on to review the allowance made to railroad receivers by the circuit courts, we do not see that the economical administration of insolvent companies will be promoted, or that justice requires a higher standard of compensation than these courts generally give, to whose discretion the subject must be largely remitted.

Appellant also complains that he is wrongfully charged with $4,300 for the use of the money held by him as receiver. It does not very clearly appear how much of this money he so used, or how long he held it. But it does appear that the money as received was deposited in a bank at Springfield to his account as receiver, and that most of it was drawn from there on his check, and deposited to his private account with a bank in Chicago; and when on his examination as a witness he was asked to give explanations of this matter, and to state what sums he had so deposited, he declined to answer. Appellant was dealing with a trust fund. It was his duty to keep this money separate from his own. And if he used a bank for the custody of it, he should have had the account so kept as to show the fund to which it belonged. It was also his unquestionable duty, when called on in a proper case for accounting, as this was, to give all the information he had on the subject. His refusal to answer proper questions is wholly unjustifiable, and leaves his conduct open to criticism as to his motive.

As he had it in his power to furnish the facts on which a just and true account could be stated, and refused to do so, we do not in this appeal feel authorized to reverse the finding of the master and the decree of the circuit court.

The decree is, therefore, affirmed.

(See "Removal Cases," 10 Otto, 457-482.)

Removal of causes—form of petition—bond—application when made—before trial—failure to remove—mechanics' lien—security.

1. Under the Act of March 3, 1875, when the controversy about which a suit in the state court is brought is between citizens of one or more States on one side, and citizens of other States on the other side, either plaintiffs or defendants may remove the suit to the circuit court.

2. The due form of a petition for removal, considered.

3. Where no objection was made in the state court on account of the petition not being signed, an objection on that account was too late in the circuit court.

4. The Act of Congress does not make it necessary that two persons should sign the bond as sureties. Where no objection was made to the pecuniary responsibility of one of the persons who signed as surety, and he was competent under the laws of the State to do so, it was error for the court to refuse to accept the bond because a second surety was an attorney of the court.

5. In suits pending when the Act was passed, the application was in time, if made at the first term of the court thereafter.

6. The petition must be filed in a way that it may be said to have been presented to the court before the trial is in good faith entered upon. The case must be actually on trial, before the right of removal is gone.

7. If a party fails in his efforts to obtain a removal and is forced to trial, he loses none of his rights by defending against the action.

8. By the laws of Iowa, a mechanics' lien, for work done under a contract, takes precedence of all incumbrances put on the property by mortgage or otherwise after the work was commenced.

9. A clause in a contract between a construction company and a railroad company, that all the money for the work was to be paid from a certain source, does not give the construction company collateral security, and thus vitiate the lien.

Appeals from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

Statement of the case by Mr. Chief Justice Waite.

These cases present the following facts:

On the 6th of August, 1870, the Delaware [Davenport] and St. Paul Railroad Company, an Iowa Corporation, contracted with the Dela-

NOTE.—Removal of causes under Act of 1875; citizenship.

There must be a controversy between citizens of different States when the petition for removal is filed, as well as at the commencement of the suit. The Removal Cases, supra; Chic., St. L. & N. O. One of the parties must be a citizen of the State where the suit is brought; if the plaintiff is an alien, ware Railroad Construction Company, also an Iowa Corporation, for the construction of that part of its railroad lying in Delaware County, Iowa. The contract contained full specifications of the work to be performed and the prices to be paid, and concluded as follows:

"The prices above specified are to be in full compensation for all materials and labor required to put the same into the work herein contracted for, and complete the same in all respects as provided in this contract. In order to enable the contractor to prosecute the work advantageously, the said engineer shall make an estimate from time to time, not oftener than once per month, as the work progresses, both on work done and materials delivered on the line of said railroad. The said party of the second part will pay in current money eighty per cent of the amount of said estimate; twenty (20) per cent of the estimates, as they are made to the party of the first part, may be retained by the party of the second part as damages in case of a forfeiture of this contract; which said (20) twenty per cent, together with the whole amount of this contract, according to the terms thereof, and on the estimate of the engineer, shall be paid to the party of the first part within thirty days after all the work herein contracted for is completed and accepted by the engineer. 'Qualified below.'

The above payments on estimates shall be made every thirty (30) days, at the office of the President of said Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company, in Davenport. The Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company may stop all work at any time, without payment of damages, by giving thirty days' notice.

Whenever five consecutive miles of work from the south line of Delaware County are completed by the party of the first part, and accepted by the party of the second part, the party of the second part shall pay the full amount of the contract price for said work on said five miles within thirty days after said work is accepted, without the deduction of said twenty per cent, and for every additional five consecutive miles of the south end of the work completed by said first party, said second party shall pay in like manner within thirty days after the same has been accepted, and so on through the county from south to north.

Board of Directors of the Delaware Railroad Construction Company.

All the money for the work hereinbefore specified to be paid by the citizens of Delaware County.

H. PRICE,

Prest. Dav. and St. Paul R. R. Co."

The work under this contract was commenced September 29, 1870, and completed October 31, 1872. On the 20th of December, 1872, the Construction Company filed in the office of the clerk of the District Court of Delaware County the statements and accounts required by the laws of Iowa to secure a mechanics' lien on the part of the railroad which had thus been completed. The balance claimed to be due was $71,165.58.

On the 4th of June, 1872, there was filed for record in the office of the recorder of Delaware County a mortgage, bearing date July 1, 1871, but acknowledged May 16, 1872, whereby the Railroad Company conveyed its entire line of railroad, including with the rest that built by the Construction Company, to William Dennison, a citizen of the State of Ohio, and J. Edgar Thompson, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, as trustees, to secure the payment of a proposed issue of bonds, amounting in the aggregate to $6,000,000. Provision was made for the appointment of a new trustee in case of the death of either of those named in the deed.

On the 15th of January, 1874, the Construction Company commenced a suit in equity in the Circuit Court for the County of Delaware, a state court to enforce its mechanic's lien and, in the petition, priority was claimed for this lien over that of the mortgage. In this suit the Railroad Company, Thompson and Dennison as trustees, the Davenport Railway Construction Company, an Iowa corporation, and Lucius Howard, were named as defendants, but process was served only on the Railroad Company. On the 23th of January, the Railroad Company appeared and filed an answer, substantially admitting the allegations in the petition except as to the amount due. Credits were claimed, however, beyond those acknowledged by the Construction Company, and a reference was asked for a statement of the accounts. To this answer a reply was filed January 30. On the 6th of February the Construction Company and the Railroad Company appeared by their respective counsel, and a motion by the Railroad Company for a reference being overruled, the court proceeded to receive evidence in the cause. In this state of the case, it was agreed between the parties then appearing, to wit: the Construction Company and the Railroad Company, as follows:

and accepts the appointment of referee, with power to examine witnesses, books and papers and accounts, and upon the findings of said referee being reported to the Judge of this court, a judgment, by agreement of said parties in open court, is to be entered for the amount due, and a decree for a mechanics' lien to be made establishing such lien, the hearing to commence on Monday morning, February 9, 1874, at nine o'clock A. M., at the office of said Harger in Delhi, Iowa, and to continue from day to day until completed.

And by said agreement of said parties the judgment is to be entered as of the last day of this January Term, 1874, of this court, and the cause is by order of court continued as to all the defendants except said Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company."

The referee proceeded to the hearing and presented his report, which was approved by the Circuit Judge on the 13th of February, and the Judge at the same time directed the clerk to enter a judgment in accordance with the finding as of February 6, the last day of the preceding Term. On the 14th of February the referee filed his report and the indorsement of the Judge thereon with the clerk, and the clerk entered a judgment in favor of the Construction Company for $51,930.54, with interest at six per cent. from February 6, and establishing a lien upon the railroad in the county to secure the payment. A special execution for the sale of the property in accordance with this judgment was also ordered. On the 17th of February, such an execution was issued, and on the 4th of May the property was sold by the sheriff to the Construction Company for $53,000, and a conveyance made to its treasurer in trust. Afterwards the property was conveyed by the treasurer to the Delaware County Railroad Company, an Iowa Corporation created and organized for the purpose of taking the conveyance and holding the property. This new Corporation was composed of substantially the same stockholders as the Construction Company.

On the 6th of April, 1874, an affidavit was made and filed in the suit by the attorney of the Construction Company, to the effect "That personal service of original notice in said suit cannot be made upon the defendants, J. Edgar Thompson and William Dennison, trustees of certain bondholders of said railroad, within the State of Iowa, and they are non-residents of said State of Iowa." The next day a supplemental petition was filed in the cause, as follows:

"And now comes the plaintiff in this suit and states that since the commencement of this suit, to wit: on the 6th day of February, A. D. 1874, a decree has been rendered by this court against the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company, a copy of said decree being hereto annexed, and made a part of this supplemental petition, by which judgment was rendered against said Railroad Company in favor of said plaintiff for the sum of $51,930.54, besides costs of suit, and the mechanic's lien claimed in the original petition in this suit was established as claimed in said petition.

Wherefore plaintiff asks that the remaining defendants be foreclosed of all rights of redemption of the property described in said original petition; that said lien be established against the remaining defendants in said suit; that it be declared paramount to all claims of said defendant, and that plaintiff have such other and further relief as may be equitable."

Notice to these defendants of the pendency of the original and supplemental petitions was published in the Delhi Monitor, a newspaper published weekly at Delhi, Delaware County, four successive weeks, commencing April 9 and ending April 30, requiring them to appear and answer before the 19th of May then next, or default would be entered against them, and judgment and decree rendered as prayed for. On the 22d of May, proof of the publication of this notice having been made, a decree was entered on default, granting the relief asked for, and foreclosing the defendants, Thompson and Dennison, "From all right of redemption of, in or to the said property, and every part thereof," and declaring that the rights of the Construction Company were "superior and paramount to any and all claims or rights of said defendants to the same or any part thereof." At the same time the cause was dismissed as to the defendant Lucius Howard. The Davenport Railway Construction Company never appeared in the suit, and it nowhere appears what its interest in the controversy was.

Thompson, one of the trustees, died May 23, the next day after this decree was entered, and on the 26th of January, 1875, the following proceedings were had in the cause on the application of Dennison:

"Now, on this 26th day of January, 1875, comes William Dennison, the surviving trustee for certain bondholders of the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company, who were defendants in the above entitled cause, and files with the clerk of this court a motion for a new trial in this cause, on behalf of the said William Dennison, surviving trustee as aforesaid, and brings into court a bond for security for costs of retrial of said cause, as required by the statute in such cases made and provided, and offers to be filed the answer of the said surviving trustee, William Dennison. Whereupon, it appearing to the court that the service upon the said surviving trustee was by publication only, and that he and those whom he represents are entitled to a new trial under the law; and it further appearing to the court that the said surviving trustee has furnished security for the costs of new trial herein satisfactory to the said plaintiff, it is ordered by the court that a new trial in this cause be granted to the said surviving trustee, William Dennison, that the answer offered by the said defendant be filed, and that this cause stand continued to the next Term of this court."

On the 2d of February, the Construction Company filed a motion in the cause, to strike the answer of Dennison from the files because it was not verified. This motion was granted at the next Term of the court, on the 17th of May, and the Construction Company thereupon asked for a judgment by default, but on the 19th of May an amended answer was filed on leave, in which a defense was set up against the priority of the lien of the Construction Company. On the same day, Lewis H. Meyer, a citizen of the State of New York, claiming to have been appointed a trustee under the mortgage in the place of Thompson, moved the court to be substituted for Thompson as a party to the suit.

On the same day, and during the regular Term of the court, Meyer and Dennison filed with the clerk a petition as follows:

"In the Circuit Court of Delaware County, Iowa.

THE DELAWARE RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION Co.

LEWIS H. MEYER and WM. DENNISON, Trustees.

Now come your petitioners, Lewis H. Meyer and Wm. Dennison, trustees, and state:

That the Delaware Railroad Construction Company and all persons who have come in as interveners in the above entitled cause are citizens of the State of Iowa; that Lewis H. Meyer is a citizen of the State of New York, and William Dennison a citizen of the State of Ohio.

That they have reason to believe and do believe that, from prejudice or local influence, they will not be able to secure justice, by reason of such prejudice or local influence,

That said cause can be fully and finally determined in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Iowa.

That the amount in controversy in said cause amounts to more than the sum of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, and they make and file in this court a bond, with good and sufficient security, for their entering in such circuit court, on the first day of its next session, a copy of the records in said suit, and for paying all costs that may be awarded by said circuit court, if said court shall hold that said suit shall be wrongfully or improperly transferred thereto, and also for the appearing and entering special bail in such suit, if special bail was originally requisite therein, and they pray of said court to accept said petition and bond, and order the transfer of the said cause to the said Circuit Court of the United States."

This petition was not signed or sworn to, but was accompanied by a bond as follows:

"In the Circuit Court of Delaware County, Iowa.

Know all men by these presents, that we, Lewis H. Meyer and Wm. Dennison, principals, and John E. Henry and Charles Whitaker, as sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the Delaware Railroad Construction Company, and all other persons whom it may concern, in the penal sum of one thousand dollars, to which payment we bind ourselves and each of us by these presents. Given under our hands this 15th day of May, 1875.

The conditions of this obligation are these: the said Lewis H. Meyer and Wm. Dennison have applied to the Circuit Court of said county to remove a certain cause pending in said court, wherein the Delaware Railroad Construction Company are plaintiffs, and the said Lewis H. Meyer, trustee, successor to John Edgar Thompson, and William Dennison, trustees, and many others are defendants, from the said circuit court to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa:

Now, if said Meyer and Dennison shall enter in the said Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa, on the first day of the next Term thereof, a copy of the record of said suit, and shall pay all the costs that may accrue or be awarded by said circuit court if it shall hold that said suit was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto, and shall also appear and enter special bail in said circuit court in said suit if special bail was originally required therein, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise in full force.

WM. DENNISON and L. H. MEYER, Trustees.

By GRANT and SMITH, Their Attys.

C. WHITAKER,

JOHN E. HENRY, Sureties."

Whitaker, one of the sureties, made affidavit that he was a citizen of Iowa and worth double the amount of the bond over and above all debts, and had property subject to execution. The further proceedings in the state court are thus described in the decree:

"And now, further, on the 21st day of May, 1875, this cause coming on for further hearing, comes Lewis H. Meyer, by Grant & Smith and L. M. Fisher, and asks to be made a party defendant in this cause, and calls up his motion for that purpose, filed in this cause on the 19th day of May, 1875, whereupon plaintiff, by its attorney, objects to said Meyer being made a party defendant in this cause, for the reason that no evidence of the appointment of said Meyer as trustee is before this court, and said motion and the objections thereto having been duly considered by the court, it is ordered that the application of said Meyer to be made a party defendant be refused, and the objections thereto be, and they are, sustained; to which ruling of the court said Meyer, by his counsel, excepts, and asks that his exceptions in this behalf be made a matter of record in this cause, which is accordingly done. Plaintiff now offers in evidence the contract sued on in this cause, whereupon the defendant, William Dennison, trustee, asks leave to file an amended petition and bond for the transfer of this cause to the United States Circuit Court, a petition and bond for that purpose appearing to have been filed with the clerk of this court on the 20th day of May, 1875, one of the regular days of the present Term of court, to wit: on the 20th day of May, 1875, aforesaid; but no notice of the filing of the same having been brought to the court, plaintiff, by its attorney, objects that the bond is insufficient, one surety being an attorney, and not eligible as a surety on a bond in court under the law; and further, that the application to transfer this cause is too late, the cause being now reached for trial, and the trial of the same commenced; whereupon the court sustained the objections of plaintiff in this behalf, to which ruling of the court the defendant, William Dennison, trustee, by his counsel, excepts, and asks that his exception be made a matter of record, which is accordingly done, when, pending further proceedings in said cause, court adjourns to May 22, 1875.

And now, on this 22d day of May, 1875, it being one of the days of the regular May Term, 1875, of said court, the court proceeds with the further hearing of said cause, whereupon defendant William Dennison, trustee, now moves the court to proceed no further with the trial of said cause, and asks that said defendant be allowed to file a new bond for the transfer of said cause to the U. S. Circuit Court, or to deposit money for costs of the same. Plaintiff objects on the ground that the cause is now on trial on its merits. Objection sustained, and said defendant, by his counsel, excepts and asks that this, his exception, be made a matter of record, which is accordingly done; whereupon plaintiff, by his counsel, asks leave to file reply, to the filing of which, defendant, Dennison, by his counsel, objects. Objection overruled, and defendant, Dennison, by his counsel, excepts and asks that this, his exception, be made a matter of record, which is accordingly done; whereupon plaintiff files reply, and thereupon defendant, Dennison, by his counsel, asks leave and files his amended answer, and the court now proceeds with the trial of said cause on the issues joined therein; and, after full hearing and argument of counsel, the same is duly submitted to the court, and by consent of parties the court takes the same under advisement, with the understanding that judgment shall be rendered by the court in vacation, and entered as of the last day of this Term. And the court finds the issues in favor of plaintiff, and files and renders his decision that plaintiff's lien is paramount to that of defendant, and orders judgment in favor of said plaintiff.

It is, therefore, ordered and adjudged and decreed that the lien of said plaintiff is paramount to that of the defendant, William Dennison, trustee, etc.; and it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the former decree and judgment of this court, rendered at the May Term, A. D. 1874, be confirmed, and that the plaintiff's claim for a mechanic's lien, as prayed in his petitions, be established as against the said defendants, upon the property described in the decree in this suit at the February Term of this court, A. D. 1874, and as therein established, against the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company, and that the defendants be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all right of redemption of, in, or to said property, and every part thereof; and that the rights of plaintiff be declared to be superior and paramount to any and all claims and rights of said defendants to the same or any part thereof; and that the defendant, William Dennison, trustee, etc., pay the costs of the retrial of this suit. Thus ordered, adjudged and decreed, this 14th day of October, A. D. 1875."

From this decree Dennison appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, and there contended, among other things, that the court below lost its jurisdiction by the filing of his petition and bond for the removal of the cause to the circuit court. The court, however, decided otherwise and affirmed the decree below. To reverse this judgment of the Supreme Court a writ of error has been sued out to this court, and that cause is the first of those mentioned in the title, and No. 260 on the docket of the Term.

After the refusal of the state court to withhold further proceedings in the cause, Meyer and Dennison obtained from the clerk of that court a copy of the record, and on the 9th of October filed it in the clerk's office of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa. This was the second day of the next session of that court after the petition for removal, but the delay in filing was explained by an affidavit of the clerk of the state court exonerating the defendants from all blame. The cause was thereupon docketed in the Circuit Court of the United States. On the 13th of October, 1875, the Construction Company moved that court to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction. This motion was overruled, and on the 14th of January, 1876, the parties stipulated that the case should stand "As it stood at the time of the trial in the court below after the filing of the petition for removal, but with Lewis H. Meyer, a defendant, joining in the answer of Dennison," this agreement, however, "not to be regarded as a waiver of the plaintiff's objections to the right of this court to try this cause." Some further amendments were made in the pleadings, and some further stipulations entered into by the parties to speed the cause, and on the 8th of June, 1876, after hearing both parties, a decree was rendered annulling the decrees of the state court and establishing the lien of the mortgage over that of the Construction Company. From that decree the Construction Company appealed to this court, and that appeal is the second of the causes named in the title, and No. 30 on the docket of the Term.

On the 4th of May, 1875, proceedings were commenced by Meyer and Dennison in the Circuit Court of the United States for the foreclosure of their mortgage. To this suit the Railroad Company, the Construction Company, and the Delaware County Railroad Company, with others, were defendants. In an answer the Construction Company asserted the priority of its lien, and the Delaware County Railroad Company claimed title to the railroad in Delaware County under the sheriff's sale in the suit in the state court, free of the lien of the mortgage. On the 8th of June, 1876, this part of the controversy in the Meyer and Dennison suit was heard in the circuit court, and resulted in a decree establishing the superiority of the mortgage lien over that of the Construction Company and the setting aside of the decrees of the state court against Thompson and Dennison, as well as the sheriff's sale and deed under which the Delaware County Railroad Company claimed. From this decree the Construction Company and the Delaware County Railroad Company appealed, and that appeal is the last of the suits mentioned in the title, and No. 29 on the docket of the Term. No other part of the suit commenced by Meyer and Dennison has been brought up on this appeal, except that which relates to the priority of liens and the title of the Delaware County Railroad Company.

Messrs. Geo. G. Wright, M. W. Tyler, and John M. Brayton, for appellants in 29 and 30, and defendant in error in 260.

Messrs. Grant & Grant, Charles F. Southmayd, Joseph H. Choate, William M. Everts and James S. Stearns, for appellees and plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Three principal questions are presented by these cases. They are:

1. Was the suit, pending in the state court, one which could by law be removed to the Circuit Court of the United States?

2. If it could, was the application for removal made in time, and was it sufficient in form to effect a transfer? and,

3. If the transfer was lawfully made, are the decrees of the circuit court, giving the mortgage priority over the mechanics' lien and the title of the Delaware County Railroad Company, right?

These will be considered in their order.

1. As to the right of removal.

The Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 470, was in force when the application for removal was made, but not when the new trial was granted to Dennison. The 2d section of that Act contains, among others, the following provision: "That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, now pending * * * in any state court, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of five hundred dollars, * * * in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States, * * * either party may remove said suit into the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district."

This we understand to mean that when the controversy about which a suit in the state court is brought, is between citizens of one or more States on one side, and citizens of other States on the other side, either party to the controversy may remove the suit to the circuit court, without regard to the position they occupy in the pleadings as plaintiffs or defendants. For the purposes of a removal the matter in dispute may be ascertained, and the parties to the suit arranged on opposite sides of that dispute. If in such arrangement it appears that those on one side are all citizens of different States from those on the other, the suit may be removed. Under the old law the pleadings only were looked at, and the rights of the parties in respect to a removal were determined solely according to the position they occupied as plaintiffs or defendants in the suit. Coal Co. v. Blatchford, 11 Wall., 174 [78 U. S., XX., 180]. Under the new law the mere form of the pleadings may be put aside, and the parties placed on different sides of the matter in dispute according to the facts. This being done, when all those on one side desire a removal, it may be had, if the necessary citizenship exists.

In the present case, it appears that the suit was originally brought, by a citizen of Iowa, against another citizen of Iowa and citizens of Pennsylvania and Ohio. There were, then, according to the pleadings, two matters about which there might be dispute: one between the Construction Company and the Railroad Company, both citizens of Iowa, as to the amount due the Construction Company and the actual existence of a mechanics' lien, and the other between the Construction Company and the trustees of the mortgage, citizens of different States, as to the priority of the mortgage over the mechanics' lien. But before the trustees of the mortgage were actually brought into court by service of process, the dispute between the Construction Company and the Railroad Company had been finally disposed of. The amount due the Construction Company had been ascertained so far as that Company and the Railroad Company were concerned, the mechanics' lien established, and the property sold under the lien to pay the debt. There was after that nothing left of the suit except that part which related solely and exclusively to the priority of the mortgage lien, and as to this the controversy was between the Construction Company on the one side, and the mortgage trustees on the other. If the Railroad Company still continued a party to the suit, it was a nominal party only, and its interests were in no way whatever connected with those of the trustees. It did not, therefore, occupy a position in the controversy on the same side with them. This being the case, it is apparent that in the then condition of the suit the only controversy to be settled was between the mortgage trustees, citizens of Pennsylvania and Ohio, on one side, and the Construction Company and Railroad Company, citizens of Iowa, on the other. As such, under the construction we have given this provision of the statute, the suit was removable by reason of that provision. This makes it unnecessary to give an interpretation to that part of the same section of the Act of 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 470, which, for the purposes of statement, may be read as follows:

"That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, now pending or hereafter brought in any state court, when the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, * * * in which there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district."

We reserve the consideration of this provision until a case requiring it arises. This suit, when the petition for removal was filed, was one in which the only controversy to be decided was between citizens of different States and, therefore, provided for in the first clause. Necessarily a removal would take the whole suit to the circuit court, because, in its then condition, the suit related to a single controversy only. Whether, as argued, a removal could also have been had under the last clause, we do not decide.

2. As to the removal.

The 3d section of the Act of 1875, so far as it is applicable to this case, reads as follows:

"That, whenever either party, * * * entitled to remove any suit mentioned in the next preceding section, shall desire to remove such suit from a state court to the Circuit Court of the United States, he or they may make and file a petition in such suit in such state court before or at the Term at which said cause could be first tried, and before the trial thereof for the removal of such suit into the circuit court, to be held in the district where such suit is pending, and shall make and file therewith a bond, with good and sufficient surety, for his or their entering in such circuit court, on the first day of its then next session, a copy of the record in such suit, and for paying all costs that may be awarded by the said circuit court, if said court shall hold that such suit was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto, and also for their appearing and entering special bail in such suit, if special bail was originally requisite therein, it shall then be the duty of the state court to accept said petition and bond, and proceed no further in such suit, and any bail that may have been originally taken shall be discharged; and the said copy being entered as aforesaid in said Circuit Court of the United States, the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in said circuit court."

The petition filed in this case was sufficient in form. Enough appeared on its face to entitle the petitioner to his removal. While it included a statement of belief that, from prejudice or local influence, justice could not be secured by a trial in the state court, no affidavit to that effect was filed; and this statement could be rejected as surplusage, leaving still good cause for the removal on account of the citizenship of the parties. Although Meyer's name was included as a petitioner, that of Dennison was included also; and as Meyer was not a party to the suit, his name could be rejected as surplusage, and the petition left to stand as that of Dennison alone. The paper was evidently drafted and put on file under the belief that Meyer would be substituted for Thompson as a party to the suit. This having been unexpectedly refused, it was presented to the court by the counsel of Dennison, without amendment, as in legal effect the petition of Dennison alone. This, we think, might lawfully be done. Under the circumstances, it was the duty of the court to treat the application as coming from Dennison only.

The petition was not signed. No objection was made on this account in the state court; and it came too late in the circuit court. If it had been made in the state court, the defect, if in fact there was one, would, no doubt, have been cured at once by the signature of counsel. The petition was in writing. On its face, it purported to be the petition of Meyer and Dennison; and it was, in fact, the petition of Dennison. This the court knew, because it was actually presented by the counsel of Dennison, and was accompanied by a bond purporting also to be signed in the name of Meyer and Dennison. In short, everything in the whole proceeding showed that it was, in fact, what, under the circumstances, it purported to be, the application of Dennison, made in good faith, for the removal of the cause.

The bond was sufficient in form. The condition was such as the statute required. There was no special bail in the case. Nothing was, therefore, to be secured by the bond but the filing of the transcript in the circuit court, on the first day of its then next Term, and the payment of any costs that might be awarded by that court, in case it should hold that the suit had been wrongfully or improperly removed. No objection was made to the sufficiency of the surety. The only complaint seems to have been that one of the persons who signed the bond as a surety was an attorney of the court, which was forbidden by the laws of Iowa and the practice of the state court. Without determining whether this would have justified the court in not accepting the bond, if he had been the only surety, it is sufficient to say that the Act of Congress does not make it necessary that two persons should sign the bond as sureties. "Good and sufficient surety" is all that is required; and this is satisfied if there is one surety able to respond to the condition of the bond. The question here is, not whether the court below had the right to pass upon the sufficiency of the surety, but whether, upon the facts as they appear in this record, it was justified in refusing to accept this bond. We are now examining the case, after judgment below, in reference to errors which are alleged to have occurred in the progress of the cause. If the state court refuses to accept a bond offered by a petitioner for removal which has "good and sufficient surety" in law, it is error that may be reviewed here. That court has no discretion in such a matter. Its action is governed by fixed rules. Here, as no objection was made to the pecuniary responsibility of the one person who signed as surety, and was competent under the laws of Iowa to do so, it was clearly error for the court to refuse to accept the bond because a second surety was an attorney of the court. Such being the case, we are clearly of the opinion that, so far as the form of the application was concerned, the state court was not justified in refusing to accept the petition and bond, and in proceeding further in the cause.

We think also the application was made in time. It is conceded that the petition was filed during the first term of the court at which the suit could be tried, after the Act of 1875 went into operation. It has, so far, as we know, been uniformly held on the circuit, and to our minds correctly, that, in suits pending when the Act was passed, the application was in time, if made at the first term of the court thereafter. Baker v. Peterson, 4 Dill., 562; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 3 Sawy., 553; Andrews v. Garrett, 2 Cent. L. J., 797; Bk. v. Wheeler, 13 Blatchf., 218; Crane v. Reeder, 15 Alb. L. J., 103. This disposes of one objection made to the time when the petition was filed.

It has, however, been argued, with great earnestness, that the petition for removal was not actually presented to the court "before trial." We agree that, as a general rule, the petition must be filed in a way that it may be said to have been in law presented to the court before the trial is in good faith entered upon. There may be exceptions to this rule; but we think it clear that Congress did not intend, by the expression "before trial," to allow a party to experiment on his case in the state court, and if he met with unexpected difficulties, stop the proceedings, and take his suit to another tribunal. But, to bar the right of removal, it must appear that the trial had actually begun and was in progress in the orderly course of proceeding when the application was made. No mere attempt of one party to get himself on the record as having begun the trial will be enough. The case must be actually on trial by the court, all parties acting in good faith, before the right of removal is gone.

Upon the facts in this case it is apparent, to our minds, that the trial had in no sense begun when Dennison presented his petition formally to the court for a removal. It is equally apparent that the counsel for the Construction Company attempted to get up a race of diligence with his adversary, in which he should come out ahead. As soon as the court decided not to admit Meyer as a party to the suit, he seems to have offered the contract sued on in evidence; but, unfortunately for him, in so doing he did not keep himself inside the orderly course of proceedings. It is evident that at that time the cause was not up for hearing on its merits; and it nowhere appears that the court accepted then the offer of the counsel to put in his evidence. Before any action was taken by the court on that subject, Dennison presented his petition, which had been on file ready to be presented, as soon as the motion of Meyer was decided. Immediately after the application of Dennison was disposed of, the court adjourned until the next day; and, when it again met, Dennison renewed his application. This being refused, the Construction Company asked leave to file a reply, which up to that time had not been done, and which was necessary to complete the pleadings, and make up the issues for trial. That being done, and a motion by Dennison for leave to amend his answer overruled, the court proceeded "with the trial of said cause on the issues joined therein." A statement of these facts is sufficient to show that, when Dennison presented his petition in form to the court, the trial had in no just sense begun. As in the case of Yulee v. Vose [ante, 355], "The most that can be said is, that preparations were being made for trial."

It is further claimed that the citizenship of Dennison in Ohio was not proved. As in the case of the sufficiency of the bond, the question here is not whether, if the statements of the petitioner in that particular had been denied, it would have been competent for the state court to institute an inquiry on that subject, but whether, on the facts as they appear on the face of this record, which also shows how they should have appeared to the court below, that court was justified in proceeding further in the suit. We fully recognize the principle heretofore asserted in many cases, that the state court is not required to let go its jurisdiction until a case is made which, upon its face, shows that the petitioner can remove the cause as a matter of right. But here, to say nothing of the statements in the petition which were not disputed, the record is full of evidence that Dennison was a citizen of Ohio. In the mortgage, Thompson is described as of Pennsylvania, and Dennison as of Ohio. In addition to this, in order to bring them into court, the affidavit of the counsel for the Construction Company was put on file, in which it is directly stated, under date of April 6, 1874, that personal service of process could not be made on them within the State, and that they were non-residents. Under these circumstances, it was certainly error for the state court to retain the cause because it was not shown that the citizenship of the adverse parties was in different States. The citizenship of the two corporations in Iowa is averred by the Construction Company in its own pleadings.

It is still further claimed that even though the lower court ought to have accepted the petition and bond and withheld all further proceedings in the suit, that error was waived by the subsequent appearance of Dennison and going to a hearing, and that for this reason it was right for the Supreme Court not to reverse the judgment because of the original fault. This question is settled by the case of Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall., 214 [86 U.S., XXII., 68], where it is distinctly held that if a party failed in his efforts to obtain a removal and was forced to trial, he lost none of his rights by defending against the action. This record is full of protests on the part of Dennison against going on with the suit, and of exceptions to the ruling which kept him in court. Indeed, it is difficult to see what more he could have done than he did do to get out of court and take his suit with him. He remained simply because he was forced to remain, and is certainly now in a condition to have the original error of which he complained corrected in any court having jurisdiction for that purpose. In addition to this, we now know that he did take his suit to the circuit court, and carried his adversaries with him. It is true, by reason of the fault of the clerk of the state court, he was unable to file his transcript of the record in the circuit court on the first day of the Term, but he did so on the second, and had the cause regularly docketed, after which a trial was had, all parties appearing. It is also true that the Construction Company objected to the delay, but that objection was, as we think, properly overruled. While the Act of Congress requires security that the transcript shall be filed on the first day, it nowhere appears that the circuit court is to be deprived of its jurisdiction if, by accident, the party is delayed until a later day in the term. If the circuit court, for good cause shown, accepts the transfer after the day and during the term, its jurisdiction will, as a general rule, be complete and the removal properly effected.

We must, therefore, hold that the Supreme Court of the State erred in not reversing the judgment of the circuit court of the county and sending the cause back with instructions to that court to proceed no further with the suit.

3. As to the priority of liens.

It is conceded that, by the laws of Iowa, a mechanics' lien for work done under a contract takes precedence of all incumbrances put on the property by mortgage or otherwise after the work was commenced. Such has been the uniform course of decisions by the highest court of the State.

It is also conceded that, by a statute of the State Code, 1873, section 385, there can be no mechanics' lien in favor of one who takes collateral security on the contract under which he does his work.

Such being the law, it is clear that, as the mortgage was not recorded until June 4, 1872, and work under the contract of the Construction Company was commenced September 29, 1870, the mechanics' lien must have precedence, unless the Construction Company took collateral security on their contract, or something equivalent was done.

It is contended that the words, "All the money for the work hereinbefore specified to be paid by the citizens of Delaware County," which appear above the signature of the President of the Railroad Company to the contract, give the Construction Company collateral security, and thus vitiate the lien. We cannot so interpret the contract. In the body of the instrument the obligation of the Railroad Company, to pay, is absolute and unconditional. The additional clause does not purport to transfer to the Construction Company the moneys that are due or that may become due from the citizens of Delaware County. No control is given the Construction Company over these moneys. The most that can be said of the clause is that it contains an implied obligation on the part of the Railroad Company to use the money which came into its hands from the citizens of Delaware County to discharge its obligations under the contract, and a corresponding obligation on the part of the Construction Company to wait a reasonable time for the collection of these moneys before putting the Railroad Company in default for non-payment.

In Christmas v. Russell, 14 Wall., 69 [81 U.S., XX., 762], we said: "An agreement to pay out of a particular fund, however clear its terms, is not an equitable assignment; a covenant in the most solemn form has no greater effect. * * * The assignor must not retain any control over the fund, any power to collect, or any power of revocation. If he do, it is fatal to the claim of the assignee." It seems to us that this is conclusive of the present case. The Railroad Company has nowhere by its agreement given the Construction Company any power to collect. The amount due is nowhere specified; neither does it appear from the instrument itself what was the nature of the obligations the citizens of Delaware County were under to make the payment. It is not even said that the payments thus to be made grew out of any obligations of the citizens of Delaware County to the Railroad Company. According to the construction claimed, the addition of these somewhat indefinite words at the end of the contract, and after a part of the signatures had been affixed, must have the effect of changing the whole tenor of the contract as set out in the body of the instrument, and substituting the citizens of Delaware County as obligors and bound absolutely for the payment of the work to be performed, instead of the Railroad Company. Such we cannot believe was the intention of the parties, and everything which occurred afterwards is entirely inconsistent with any such idea. It now appears from the evidence that there had been very considerable subscriptions to the capital stock of the Railroad Company by the citizens of Delaware County, and that taxes had been levied by the county, or some of the townships in the county, to aid in the construction of the railroad. It also appears that all of this money was collected by and paid to the Railroad Company. In no single instance, so far as we can discover, was it paid to the Construction Company. The full amount subscribed and levied was not sufficient to pay all that was due that Company. Much of it was paid over, but all of it was not. Of the amount paid the Construction Company by the Railroad Company a very considerable portion was collected from other sources.

Without pursuing the subject further, it is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, the Construction Company has done nothing to waive or deprive it of the right to assert a mechanics' lien, and that the decrees of the circuit court establishing the superiority of the lien of the mortgage were wrong and must be reversed. As the sale under the execution from the state court, by which the Delaware County Railroad Company now holds and claims title, was made in a suit to which the trustees of the mortgage were not at the time parties served with process, the sale did not cut off their interest as mortgagees of the property sold. Neither are they bound by the decree in the state court finding the amount due the Construction Company. The Delaware County Railroad Company took by its purchase only such title as the Construction Company had to convey, and as the interest of the mortgagees was not cut off by the sale to the Construction Company, it is not cut off by the transfer to the Delaware County Company.

We, therefore, order and adjudge as follows:

1. That the judgment of the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of Meyer v. R. R. Construction Co. (No. 260), be reversed with costs, and that the cause be remanded, with instructions to reverse the decree of the Circuit Court of

U. S., Book 25.

Delaware County, and direct that court to proceed no further with the suit.

2. That the decree of the Circuit Court of the United States in the case of The Delaware Railroad Construction Company v. Meyer and Dennison (No. 30), be reversed, with costs, and that the cause be remanded with instructions to ascertain the amount due the Construction Company under its contract, and to enter a decree establishing the lien of that Company as prior in right to that of the mortgage, and in default of payment of the amount due by a day to be named, directing the sale of that part of the Railroad Company which lies in Delaware County, to pay the debt. Such provision for redemption is to be made as is allowed in such cases by the laws of Iowa."

3. The decree of the circuit court in the case of the Delaware County Railroad Company and the Delaware Railroad Construction Company v. Meyer and Dennison (No. 29), is also reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded with instructions to enter a decree establishing the lien of the Construction Company as superior to that of the mortgage, and declaring the title of the Delaware County Railroad Company, by reason of the sheriff's sale in the state court, to be invalid and not sufficient to pass title as against the lien of the mortgage, and for such other proceedings as justice requires.

Copy, foregoing statement and opinion, duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Strong, J. I concur in the judgment, but not in the construction given by the majority of the court to the 2d section of the Act of 1875, respecting removals from state courts.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the following opinion, concurring in the judgment of the court:

I concur in the judgment in these cases, but dissent from so much of the opinion as seems to assume that one condition of federal jurisdiction, in the removal of a cause from a state court, under the first clause of section 2, Act of 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 470, is, that each party on one side of the controversy must be a citizen of a different State from that of which either of the parties on the other side is a citizen. This portion of the Act gives the right of removal to either party, in any suit in which there is "A controversy between citizens of different States." In my judgment, a controversy is such, as that expression is used in the Constitution and in the law, when any of the parties on one side thereof are citizens of a different State or States from that of which any of the parties on the other side are citizens. It is true, if there are other parties on opposite sides of the controversy who are citizens of a common State, it may also be a controversy between citizens of the same State. In other words, a controversy may be, at the same time, both a controversy between citizens of the same State and between citizens of different States. But the fact that it is both, does not take away the federal jurisdiction. Neither the Constitution, nor the law, declares that there shall not be such jurisdiction if any of the contestants on opposite sides of the controversy are citizens of the same State; but they do declare that there shall be such jurisdiction if the controversy is between citizens of different States. The gift of judicial power by the Constitution, and the gift of jurisdiction by the law, are in affirmative terms; and those terms include as well the case when only part of the contestants opposed to each other are citizens of different States, as that in which they are all of different States. And I see no good reason why both the Constitution and the law should not receive a construction as broad as that of the terms which they employ. On the contrary, I think there is just reason for giving to those terms their full effect. The object of extending the judicial power to controversies between citizens of different States was, to establish a common and impartial tribunal, equally related to both parties, for the purpose of deciding between them. This object would be defeated in many cases, if the fact that a single one of many contestants on one side of a controversy being a citizen of the same State with one or more of the contestants on the other side should have the effect of depriving the Federal Courts of jurisdiction. This absurdity became so glaring under the construction formerly given by this court to the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 73, in the case of corporations, when every stockholder was held to be a party, that the court was at length impelled to regard a corporation as a citizen of the State which created it, without regard to the citizenship of its members; thus getting rid of the troublesome stockholder who happened to be a citizen of the same State with the opposite party, and who almost always appeared in the case.

If we give the same construction to the present law which was given to the Judiciary Act, we shall certainly meet with like embarrassment and difficulty in exercising the fair and proper jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. No cases are more appropriate to this jurisdiction, or more urgently call for its exercise, than those which relate to the foreclosure and sale of railroads extending into two or more States, and winding up the affairs of the companies that own them; since, in addition to the convenience of a single jurisdiction having cognizance of the whole matter (which could readily be conferred, if it is not so) the local tribunals in such cases, however upright and pure, are naturally more or less favorably affected towards the interests of their own citizens; and yet, it is almost always essential, in order to do complete justice in these cases, to call before the court some parties on opposite sides of the controversy who are citizens of the same State. If this fact is to deprive the Federal Courts of jurisdiction, without regard to the numerous and important contestants on opposite sides who are citizens of different States, the value of the institution of National Courts, for taking cognizance of controversies between citizens of different States, will be greatly impaired.

But it seems to me clear that, in construing the present law, we are not bound by the construction given to the old Judiciary Act. The words of that Act, conferring jurisdiction upon the circuit courts in respect of citizenship, were not the same as those used by the present law or by the Constitution. It only conferred jurisdiction when "The suit is between a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State." The singular number only was used; and the courts, in applying the law to cases in which there was a plurality of plaintiffs or defendants, construed it, perhaps justly, as requiring that each plaintiff and each defendant should have the citizenship required by the law. But now it is not so. The present law follows the words of the Constitution, and gives jurisdiction to the circuit courts in the broadest terms, namely: whenever, in any suit, there is "A controversy between citizens of different States;" and this broad and general expression, as I think I have shown, gives jurisdiction where any of the contestants on opposite sides of the controversy are citizens of different States.

The only objection to this construction which has been seriously pressed, is drawn from the argument ab inconvenientie, namely: that if in a controversy where the contestants are numerous, a single case of diverse citizenship between opposite parties should give federal jurisdiction, the Courts of the United States would be overwhelmed with business; litigants would be unnecessarily drawn away from the domestic tribunals, and the intent of the Constitution would be subverted. Now, whilst I am satisfied that the apprehended inconveniences are greatly exaggerated, the inconveniences which would result from a contrary interpretation to that contended for would be at least equally great in depriving the Federal Courts of jurisdiction by a single case of common citizenship between opposite parties, though a large majority of the opposing litigants are citizens of different States; and, thus, one inconvenience would balance the other, and we should still be left to seek the true construction of the Constitution and the law, from the words which they use. But the inconveniences would not be equal. To deprive the Federal Courts of jurisdiction by a partial community of citizenship between the opposite parties would, in many instances, actually defeat the very object which the Constitution and the law have in view.

Even if it should happen that, upon the construction contended for, many cases might be brought into the Federal Courts in which a partial community of citizenship did exist between the opposing parties, what harm would ensue? Ought it not to be presumed that the courts, which are courts of the common country of all the parties, will as well do equal and exact justice between them as the state courts could do? If the judicial force is not sufficient to meet the exigency, let it be increased. If the courts are not held at sufficiently convenient places, that difficulty can easily be remedied. The phrase in question, "controversies between citizens of different States," is a constitutional one; and the construction which we may give to it will affect the judicial powers of the Federal Government for all time; and any temporary inconvenience arising from existing arrangements, which can be remedied by legislation, ought not to stand in the way of a fair construction of the organic law.

But it is not necessary to pass upon this question in this case. The present controversy is wholly between citizens of different States; and we are all agreed as to the decision that ought to be made. When the question does come squarely before us and it becomes necessary to decide it, it is to be hoped that it may receive the fullest consideration.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Swayne concurs with me in this opinion.

ALBERT G. MOORE.

Title of alien—new petition—trial of issues of fact.

*1. A sale of land in Texas, previous to her separation from Mexico, by a citizen of the State to a non-resident alien, passed the title from the vendor, and the purchaser acquired a defeasible estate in the land, which he could hold until deprived of the property by the supreme authority upon an official ascertainment of the fact of his non-residence and alienage, or upon the denouncement of a private citizen.

2. The allowance of the court below to the plaintiff, to file a new petition in the case in place of the original, which was lost, approved, the loss being without the fault of the plaintiff and the new petition not differing from the original in any substantial particular.

3. The concluding clause of the 3d section of the Act of March 3d, 1875, "to Determine the Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States and to Regulate the Removal of Causes from State Courts, and for Other Purposes" (18 Stat. 471), does not repeal the provision of the Revised Statutes authorizing a trial by the court of issues of fact without the intervention of a jury, upon the stipulation of parties.

Submitted Nov. 7, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. P. Ballinger and George Quinan, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Daniel D. Atchison, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover the possession of one fourth of a league of land, situated in the County of Wharton, in the State of Texas. The plaintiff claims the land under a grant of the State of Coahuila and Texas, made in April, 1833, to one John Dinsmore, a colonist, under the contract with the Empresario, Stephen Austin. The defendants assert title to it under a previous grant from that State, made in August, 1824, to one Bartlett Sims, a similar colonist. No question is raised as to the genuineness or validity of this grant to Sims, which was for one league; but, in May, 1828, he sold one fourth of it, constituting the property in controversy, to one Kinchen Holliman, a resident and citizen of Mississippi, who never became a resident or citizen of Mexico or Texas. In 1833, Dinsmore presented a petition to the commissioner of the State appointed to distribute lands to the colonists, and to issue titles to them, in which he denounced the tract thus sold as vacant land, by reason of the non-residence and alienage of Holliman, and prayed a grant of it to himself. Upon reference of the petition to the agent of the Empresario and to the alcalde of the place, the sale of the premises to Holliman and his alienage and non-residence were officially established, and their opinion obtained that he could not, under the laws, retain a right to the tract. The commissioner thereupon declared the land to be vacant and conceded it to the petitioner, and directed that a survey be made of it, preparatory to the issue of the title. Such survey having been made, a formal document, as evidence of the transfer of the title, was issued to the petitioner, by which the commissioner, in the name of the State of Coahuila and Texas, granted to him the property in question. The validity of this grant is the principal question presented for our determination.

The contention of the defendants is, that the sale of Sims to Holliman was invalid by reason of the latter's alienage and non-residence, and as a consequence that the title did not pass to him, but remained in Sims, and the tract sold was not subject to be regranted as vacant land.

There is some conflict of opinion in the decisions of the Supreme Court of Texas as to the effect upon the title, of a sale of real property to a non-resident alien. Language properly applicable to grants to aliens under the colonization laws, and the instructions to the commissioner under the contract with the Empresario, Austin, has sometimes been used with reference to sales to them by private parties. Such grants to non-resident aliens were inhibited by positive statutory provisions, and for the obvious reason that the object of the colonization laws was to induce a settlement of the country by the introduction of persons who would cultivate the lands and become permanent residents; and this object would have been defeated, if such residence and cultivation had not been essential conditions upon which the bounty of the government was bestowed. For a similar reason, an abandonment of the country by the settler, after receiving his grant, without previous alienation of it, worked a forfeiture of the property, which immediately reverted to the mass of the public domain. The settler, after the performance of certain conditions, could, however, alienate his land, subject to some restrictions. In the early cases, particularly in Holliman v. Peebles, 1 Tex., 673, an opinion was expressed, that under the laws of Spain, which remained in force in Mexico after her independence, and those subsequently enacted by her, an alien could not acquire real property in that Republic. And in Clay v. Clay, in the 26th of Texas 24, the invalidity of a sale of land to a non-resident alien was expressly adjudged. But in the later case of Barrett v. Kelly, in the 31st of Texas 476, where land had been sold, in 1833, to citizens of the United States, then non-resident aliens, it was held that, unless there was an adjudication by some court or political authority upon their alienage, while it existed, their rights were not divested. The decision proceeded upon the ground that the title had passed to the grantees, notwithstanding their alienage, though subject to be divested upon an official determination of that fact.

According to this decision, considered with reference to the general prohibitory language of the laws of Mexico, respecting the acquisition of real property by aliens, in force in Texas previous to the latter's independence, the rule which there obtained may be stated to have been substantially this: that a non-resident alien could not acquire, under a sale by a citizen, such an interest in land as to be able to hold it against the government, or to prevent it being denounced and adjudged to be vacant land, subject to be regranted; but that the title would pass out of the vendor, so as to denude him of all estate in the land and consequent dominion over it; and the purchaser would take the title and hold it until, in some official way, the fact of non-residence and alienage was authoritatively established, when the general law would come into operation, and restore the property to the public domain. Certain it is that, by the sale to the alien, the right of the vendor was deemed to be divested; and, so far as the present case is concerned, it is immaterial whether the title be considered as thereupon at once vesting in the government by reason of the attempted transfer of the property to a person incapable of taking it, or be deemed to pass to the alien, to be held until the government, upon its own motion or the denouncement of a private citizen, should determine to claim the property. We are led to the latter view as the more reasonable one, and as being in harmony with the general doctrine obtaining in other cases, that a forfeiture incurred is inoperative to defeat a title until the party authorized to enforce it claims its benefit.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice Field.

This conclusion is strengthened by the Act of the Mexican Congress of March 12, 1828, in relation to passports and the mode of acquiring property by foreigners. Its 6th article provides that foreigners, introduced and established in the country in conformity to prescribed regulations, shall be protected by the laws, and enjoy the same rights conferred upon Mexicans, with the exception of acquiring landed property, which, by existing law, unnaturalized persons cannot hold. But yet the 11th article of the same Act declares that property acquired by unnaturalized foreigners, in fraud of the law, may be denounced by any Mexican, to whom it will be adjudged as soon as such fraud is proved. It would thus seem that, notwithstanding the prohibitory language of the 6th article, title may pass to a foreigner not naturalized, though it be one which is defeasible, upon the denouncement of a private citizen.

The Supreme Court of California, on the question as to the validity of a conveyance of land in Mexico, by a private citizen to an alien, held, after a full and elaborate consideration, that the conveyance was not absolutely void, but that the grantor by it was divested of the property which he had undertaken to convey, and the grantee invested with a defeasible estate therein, which he would hold until divested by the supreme authority, or by an inquisition had upon its denouncement. Merlev v. Matthews, 26 Cal., 456.

By the common law, an alien cannot acquire real property by operation of law, but may take it by act of the grantor, and hold it until office found; that is, until the fact of alienage is authoritatively established by a public officer, upon an inquest held at the instance of the government. The proceeding which contains the finding of the fact upon the inquest of the officer is technically designated in the books of law as "office found." It removes the fact, upon the existence of which the law divests the estate and transfers it to the government, from the region of uncertainty and makes it a matter of record. It was devised, according to the old law writers, as an authentic means to give the King his right by solemn matter of record, without which he, in general, could neither take nor part with anything; for it was deemed "A part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the King may not enter upon or seize any man's possessions upon bare surmises, without the intervention of a jury."

By the civil law, some proceeding, equivalent in its substantive features, was also essential to take the fact of alienage from being a matter of mere surmise and conjecture, and to make it a matter of record. Such a proceeding was usually had before the local magistrate or council, and might be taken at the instance of the government, or upon the denouncement of a private citizen. The course pursued in the present case seems to have been in conformity with common usage. The fact of alienage and non-residence was thus officially established; it became matter of record, and the subsequent declaration of the commissioner that the land was vacant, was the judgment which the law prescribed in such cases. The land was then subject to be regranted by the commissioner, as fully as though no previous grant to Sims had ever been made.

It remains to consider the objections urged to the order of the court, allowing a new petition to be filed in place of the original, which was lost, and to the trial of the case by the court, without the intervention of a jury. We do not consider either of these objections to be well taken. It was not only proper to allow the filing of a new petition, when the original was lost, and no copy was to be had, but it would have been the subject of just complaint had this allowance been refused. The affidavit states that the loss was without the fault of the plaintiff, and there is no pretense that the fact was otherwise. The original petition was in the ordinary form in use in actions of trespass to try the title to land and was for the recovery of one fourth of a league; and there is no suggestion that the new petition differs from it in any substantial particular.

As to the trial by the court, it is sufficient to observe that a jury was waived by stipulation of the parties, filed with the clerk under the Act of Congress. R. S., sec. 649. The concluding clause of the 3d section of the Act of March 3d, 1875, "To Determine the Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States, and to Regulate the Removal of Causes from State Courts, and for Other Purposes," does not repeal the previous law, authorizing a trial by the court, without the intervention of a jury, upon such stipulation. It was only intended to conserve to parties, in the cases removed to the circuit courts, the same right of jury trial which parties possess in cases brought originally in those courts, not to prevent the waiver of a jury by consent. The provision is similar to the one in the Judiciary Act of 1879. 1 Stat. at L., 73; 18 Stat. at L., 471; Kearney v. Case, 12 Wall., 281 [79 U. S., XX., 396].

Supersedeas—when vacated—correction of transcript.

1. This court will vacate the supersedeas, when the approval of the supersedeas bond, by the justice of this court who allowed the appeal, was obtained by fraud and perjury. In a case of this kind, fraud is always open to inquiry.

2. Where the supersedeas is vacated for such reasons, this court will refuse to accept a new bond.

3. Where the appellant selected such of the papers and proofs used on the hearing below as he thought were necessary, and had them copied into the transcript, the court will order that he file in this court, as part of the record, copies of such papers omitted as the appellee deems necessary, or the appeal will be dismissed.

Argued Dec. 9, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida.

Motions, stated by the court.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. S. F. Phillips, James M. Baker, P. Phillips, W. A. Maury and J. B. Stewart, for appellant.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter, C. D. Willard and Wayne MacVeagh, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the appellees have moved:

1. To vacate the supersedeas, because the approval of the supersedeas bond by the justice of this court, who allowed the appeal, was obtained by fraud and perjury; and,

2. To dismiss the appeal, because the transcript of the record which has been filed in this court is not complete, and is not properly certified.

The appellants, also, have moved for leave to file a new bond in case the old one shall be set aside.

1. As to the vacation of the supersedeas.

That the approval of the bond was brought about by gross fraud and perjury is so conclusively shown that no attempt has been made to deny it. The evidence also shows with equal certainty that the bond was obtained in the most irregular way. A lawyer who, to say the least, was an entire stranger to all the parties in interest, was employed to procure, within thirty-six or forty-eight hours, sureties for the appellants sufficient to secure the payment of $100,000. He was to be paid for his services six bonds of $1,000 each of the appellant Corporation, which were then of no marketable value. In due time he produced the requisite number of persons to sign as sureties. When they came, the "usual form of justification of about four lines in length" was "ignored," and a full affidavit was drawn for each surety, wherein was set forth "The name and residence of the surety, the amount of his real estate, its location, its value, whether or not incumbered, if so, to what amount; next, the amount of his personal property, its character, whether or not incumbered, and if so, to what amount; next, whether or not the surety was upon any other bond; next, whether or not there were any judgments against the surety; and finally summing up that he owned so much over all his debts and liabilities, naming the sum. Each of these questions each surety answered favorably, and swore to. The justifications were extraordinary in their minuteness, as the affidavits will show."

This being done, a bond sufficient in form was signed by the "procured" sureties. One of the persons who signed, said to be a "very wealthy man," was paid $125 for what he did. Another, "the son of a former Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York," received $12.50; another, a colored porter in a lawyer's office, $10; another was paid $10; and another was promised $50, but actually paid nothing. They were all irresponsible pecuniarily, and known to or suspected by the police of the City of New York as "purchasable sureties." The money to pay them for their fraudulent work was furnished by an agent of the appellant Company under the form of buying back one of the worthless bonds promised, as a reward for what was done.

After the bond was executed by the sureties thus obtained, the president of the appellant Corporation was called in. He signed officially the name of the Corporation, and affixed the corporate seal, but did not see or ask to see any of the persons who had become bound with his Company. Neither he nor any other person actually interested in the litigation became in any manner personally bound.

With such a bond, procured in such a way, the president of the Corporation presented himself at the last moment to the Justice of this court, who heard the cause in the circuit court at his summer residence in Vermont, and asked that the bond be approved. On its presentation, as we are informed by the testimony of the president himself, the Justice read and seemed to be impressed "with the fullness and particularity of the justifications." He said: "This seems to be a good bond." The reply was: "Yes, Judge, I believe it to be a very good bond." He then asked as to one of the parties whose name appeared, and the reply was: "I am informed that he is the son of a former Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York of that name," adding that another of the signers, "I am advised, is a very wealthy man."

Under these circumstances, the bond was approved. To allow it to stand and to operate as a stay of execution upon an important decree until the case can be reached in its order on our crowded docket, would be a reproach upon the administration of justice. We are aware that in Jerome v. McCarter, 21 Wall., 17 [88 U. S., XXII., 515], we said, "That upon facts existing at the time the security was accepted, the action of the Justice, within the statute and within the rules of practice adopted for his guidance, is final," and that we would "presume that when he acted, every fact was presented to him that could have been." We are not inclined to depart from that rule, but, in a case of this kind, fraud is always open to inquiry. When discovered, justice requires that summary relief should be afforded, whenever and wherever it may be done consistently with the forms of orderly judicial procedure. This bond is as much false as if it had been forged. The persons who signed it are not in fact what they were represented to be. We have no hesitation in setting aside the approval of the bond.

2. As to the acceptance of a new bond in the place of the old one.

This application is addressed to our judicial discretion, and is based on the alleged ignorance of the officers and agents of the appellant Corporation as to the character of the bond they got accepted. They insist in the most positive manner that they were deceived, and that they actually believed the security they offered was ample. The character of the president is vouched for under oath by many persons occupying high positions in public and private life, and they all say "They do not believe he would knowingly countenance or in any way participate in or suffer an attempt to impose on the Supreme Court of the United States, or any justice thereof, a fraudulent or worthless bond;" but the fact still remains that he did present such a bond, and if he was ignorant of the wrong that was being done, the other agents of the company were not. Taking the whole case together, we think it quite as incumbent on us to refuse to accept a new bond as it is to set aside the old one.

The motion to vacate the supersedeas is granted.

3. As to dismissing the appeal.

The evidence shows that after the bond was accepted the president of the Railroad Company went with his own copyists to the office of the clerk of the circuit court and, in the absence of the principal clerk, selected such of the papers and proofs used on the hearing below as he thought were necessary, and had them copied into the transcript. This being done, he caused a certificate to be added, signed in the name of the clerk by a deputy, and sealed with the seal of the court, to the effect that the transcript annexed contained copies of such entries, papers and proofs as were "necessary on the hearing of the appeal prayed and allowed in the said cause." It is now alleged that many important papers and documents used on the hearing below, and necessary for the proper determination of the cause here, have been omitted from the transcript as filed.

While we desire to encourage in every proper way all attempts made in good faith to exclude immaterial matter from the transcripts brought here on appeals or writs of error, it will not do to permit the appellant or plaintiff in error to make up a record to suit himself, without any regard to the wishes of his opponents or the rules and practice of the court. We, therefore, order:

That the appellees file with the clerk of this court and with the counsel for the appellants, on or before the first day of February next, a statement of the papers, documents and proofs used on the hearing below, and omitted in the transcript now on file, which they deem necessary for the proper presentation of the cause; and that unless the appellees shall, on or before the 15th day of March, file in this court as part of the record copies of such papers, duly certified by the clerk of the circuit court or his deputy, under the seal of the court, this appeal be dismissed.

If in this way unnecessary papers are brought up, we will, on application, make such order in respect to costs as may under the circumstances be proper.

MATILDA J. BOWIE ET AL.,

Jurisdiction over state judgments—abandoned question.

1. This court may look into the opinions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, for the purpose of determining whether a federal question was raised and decided in a case coming from that court.

2. Where this court finds that the only federal question there is in the record was not presented to the Supreme Court either in brief or in oral argument, and that court says it presumes the question was abandoned, this is not such a decision of the question as will give this court jurisdiction.

Motion Submitted Nov. 3, 1879. Motion to postpone to merits, Nov. 10, 1879. Motion re-submitted Nov. 17, 1879. Decided, Jan. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana.

On motion to dismiss.

This was a petitory action commenced by the defendants in error in the Thirteenth Judicial Court for the Parish of Tensas, in the State of Louisiana, to recover a certain tract of land which they alleged John R. Weatherly, plaintiff in error, had illegally taken possession of.

The plaintiff in error presented a petition to remove the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States. The Judge granted an order of removal; but, on motion of the defendants in error, this order was rescinded. The cause was tried in the district court, and judgment rendered for the plaintiffs in that court. This judgment was affirmed on appeal by the Supreme Court of the State. The opinion of that court contains the following:

"On the petition of Weatherly the court ordered the case to be remanded into the Circuit Court of the United States under the Act of Congress approved 3d of March, 1875, which order was afterwards rescinded on motion of plaintiffs. In his petition for removal Weatherly states that he is a citizen of the State of Mississippi. All the plaintiffs are citizens of the State of Mississippi except one, who is a citizen of the State of Louisiana. It is manifest, therefore, that the circuit court could not have taken jurisdiction. Act of 3d March, 1875; Sewing-Machine Cas., 18 Wall., 553 (85 U. S., XXI., 914). We presume the idea of removal was abandoned, as the question was not raised in this court, either in brief or in oral argument."

Mr. John H. Kennard, for defendants in error.

Messrs. Thos. J. Semmes and Jas. Lowndes, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We may look into the opinions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana for the purpose of determining whether a federal question was raised and decided in a case coming up from that court. Armstrong v. Treas. Athens Co., 16 Pet., 285; Cousin v. Labatut, 19 How., 207 [60 U. S., XV., 604].

To give us jurisdiction in a writ of error to a state court, a federal question must not only exist in the record, but it must have been decided against the party who sues out the writ. Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall., 626 [87 U. S., XXII., 441].

"Only such questions as either have been or ought to have been passed upon by that court in the regular course of its proceedings, can be considered by us upon error." Fashnacht v. Frank, 23 Wall., 416 [90 U. S., XXIII., 81].

On looking into the opinion in this case, we find that the only federal question there is in the record was not presented to the Supreme court, "either in brief or oral argument." The Court also say they presume the question was abandoned, and as one of their reasons for that presumption they say: "It is manifest that the circuit court could not have taken jurisdiction." We think this is not such a decision of the question as will give us jurisdiction.

Dismissed.

THOMAS RUSSELL, LATE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Cross-examination of witness—order of evidence—question of fact.

1. A party has no right to cross-examine a witness, without leave of the court, as to any facts and circumstances not connected with matters stated in his direct examination, except to show bias or prejudice in the witness, or to lay the foundation to admit evidence of prior contradictory statements.

2. The order and time of introducing evidence are matters belonging very largely to the practice of the court where the case is tried, and if the court refuse to enforce this rule, it will not be error, unless it appears that it worked serious injury to the opposite party.

3. Where, in an action to recover back duties paid under protest on an importation of "jute rejections," the court instructed the jury that it was for them to find whether or not jute rejections were of a class of non-enumerated substances similar to the enumerated articles in the Act under which they were imported; held, that the instruction was correct, as the question was one of fact.

Argued Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Charles L. Woodbury, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty.-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Five dollars per ton import duties were, by the Act of the 14th of July, 1862, levied on jute, Sisal grass, sun hemp, coir, and other vegetable substances not enumerated, except flax, tow of flax, Russia and Manilla hemp, and codilla or tow of hemp. 12 Stat. at L., 554.

By the prior Act, jute, Sisal grass, sun hemp, coir and other vegetable substances, if not enumerated and used for cordage, were subject to a specific duty of $10 per ton. Jute butts paid $5 per ton, and codilla or tow of hemp paid the same duty as non-enumerated vegetable substances used for cordage. Pages of the volume are filled with the enumerated list; but the 24th section provides that all articles, raw and unmanufactured, not therein enumerated or otherwise taxed, shall pay a duty of ten per centum ad valorem. 12 Stat. at L., 188, 196.

Products called jute rejections, to the amount of one hundred and twenty-five bales, were imported by the plaintiffs from Calcutta. Due entry of the importation for consumption was made by the importers, and the collector assessed an import duty on the goods of ten per centum ad valorem and a specific duty of $5 per ton. 12 Stat. at L., 196, 554.

Pursuant to the requirement of law in such cases, the plaintiffs filed a written protest, objecting to the levy of the specific duty, in which they claimed that the products imported should be classed as non-enumerated articles, raw and unmanufactured, and be subject to a duty of ten per centum ad valorem and no more; or, if regarded as partially manufactured, that the importation should be subjected to a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem, and no more.

Payment of the amount exacted was made by the plaintiffs to obtain possession of the goods, and redress being refused, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit to recover back the amount and lawful interest. Service was made; and, the defendant having appeared, the parties went to trial, and verdict and judgment were in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs excepted and sued out the present writ of error.

Six errors are assigned here, as follows: (1) That the court erred in permitting a witness for the plaintiffs to be cross-examined on a matter not within his testimony in chief. (2) That the court erred in refusing to permit the plaintiffs to introduce evidence to prove that jute rejections were not and could not be used for cordage, and that jute and the other vegetable substances mentioned in the Act of Congress were used for that purpose. (3) That the court erred in permitting the defendant to introduce evidence to prove that jute rejections were one of the vegetable substances referred to in the Act of Congress. (4) That the court erred in refusing each of the four prayers for instruction presented by the plaintiffs. (5) That the court erred in instructing the jury that it was for them to determine whether or not jute rejections were of a class of non-enumerated vegetable substances similar to the articles enumerated in the 11th section of the Act, under which the importation was made. (6) That the court erred in not defining in what the required similarity would consist to bring the importation in question within the Act of Congress.

Testimony was introduced by the plaintiffs to prove that they paid the duties, and they read the protest in evidence to show that they had complied with that condition precedent to a right to recover back the amount paid. Witnesses were called by them to prove payment and protest; and one of them having testified to the payment of the duties, and to the fact of protest and appeal, the defendant claimed the right to cross-examine him as to whether jute rejections were a vegetable substance similar to the articles enumerated in the second clause of the 11th section of the Tariff Act, under which the duties were exacted. Objection was made by the plaintiffs; but the court overruled the objection and admitted the evidence. Exception was taken by the plaintiffs to the ruling of the court, and that exception constitutes the basis of the first assignment of error.

Authorities of the highest character show that the established rule of practice in the Federal Courts and in most other jurisdictions in this country is, that a party has no right to cross-examine a witness, without leave of the court, as to any facts and circumstances not connected with matters stated in his direct examination, subject to two necessary exceptions. He may ask questions to show bias or prejudice in the witness, or to lay the foundation to admit evidence of prior contradictory statements. Subject to those exceptions, the general rule is, that if the party wishes to examine the witness as to other matters, he must, in general, do so by making him his own witness and calling him as such in the subsequent progress of the cause. R. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet., 448, 459; Houghton v. Jones, 1 Wall., 702, 706 [68 U. S., XVII., 503, 505]; 1 Greenl. Ev., 12th ed., sec. 445-447; 1 Whart. Ev., sec. 529.

It has been twice so ruled by this court, and is, undoubtedly, a valuable rule of practice, and one well calculated to promote regularity and logical order in jury trials; but it is equally well settled by the same authorities that the mode of conducting trials, and the order of introducing evidence, and the time when it is to be introduced, are matters properly belonging very largely to the practice of the court where the matters of fact are tried by a jury. Both of the cases referred to by the plaintiffs show that the judgment will not be reversed merely because it appears that the rule limiting the cross examination to the matters opened by the examination in chief was applied and enforced; but those cases do not decide the converse of the proposition, nor is attention called to any case where it is held that the judgment will be reversed because the court trying the issue of fact relaxed the rule and allowed the cross examination to extend to other matters pertinent to the issue.

Cases not infrequently arise where the convenience of the witness or of the court or the party producing the witness will be promoted by a relaxation of the rule, to enable the witness to be discharged from further attendance; and if the court in such a case should refuse to enforce the rule, it clearly would not be a ground of error, unless it appeared that it worked serious injury to the opposite party. Nothing of the kind is shown or pretended in this case. Instead of that, it is conceded that the ruling of the court did not work any injury to the plaintiffs, and in that view the first assignment of error is overruled. Jackson v. Litch, 62 Pa. St., 451, 455.

Enough appears to show that the importation in this case was made under the Tariff Act temporarily increasing the duties on imports, which imposes a duty of $5 per ton in addition to the duties theretofore imposed on the articles therein enumerated, and other vegetable substances not enumerated, except flax, tow of flax, hemp of two descriptions, and codilla or tow of hemp. Products such as those imported, called jute rejections, it is admitted, are vegetable products, and that the article or product is not enumerated in that Tariff Act; but it is contended by the plaintiffs that the words "used for cordage," found in the 15th section of the former Act must be implied, to come in after the word "enumerated," as used in the said section of the antecedent Act. Grant that, and it would follow that the plaintiffs must prevail, as the evidence shows that jute rejections are not used for cordage.

Hemp, under the prior Act, unmanufactured, paid a duty of $37 per ton, and Manila and other hems of India paid a duty of $15 per ton. Jute, Sisal grass, sun hemp and coir were enumerated articles in that Tariff Act, and they, with other vegetable substances not enumerated, if used for cordage, paid a duty of $10 per ton, and codilla or tow of hemp paid a duty of the same amount.

None of these suggestions are controverted, nor can it be controverted that jute, Sisal grass, sun hemp, coir and other vegetable substances are required in terms by the new Act increasing the duties on imports to pay $5 per ton in addition to the duties previously imposed by law. All that is conceded; still the plaintiffs contend that the words "used for cordage," found in the prior Act, should, by implication, be incorporated, as before explained, into the subsequent Act increasing import duties; but the court is not able to adopt that construction of the new provision, for several reasons: (1) Because there is nothing in either Act, or in the two when read together, to justify such a construction, or even to indicate that such was the intention of Congress. (2) Because nothing short of legislation would justify such a conclusion. (3) Because the exceptions contained in the new provision afford satisfactory proof that such was not the intention of Congress.

Attempt is made to support the theory of the plaintiffs by the fact that the words "used for cordage" are restored in the Revised Statutes; but the court is of the opinion that no aid can be drawn from that provision in favor of the views of the plaintiffs, as it imposes a duty of $15 per ton on the articles named, including other vegetable substances not enumerated. Sec. 2504, sched. C, entitled, Hemp, Jute and Flax Goods.

Evidently the provision in the Revised Statutes referred to was borrowed from a later Act, and cannot in any sense be regarded as a legislative construction of the clause in the Tariff Act under consideration. 16 Stat. at L., 264.

Three of the prayers for instruction presented by the plaintiffs are covered by the preceding suggestions, and nothing need be added to show that they were properly rejected. Their fourth prayer was also rejected; but the court instructed the jury in its stead that it was for them to find whether or not jute rejections were of a class of non-enumerated vegetable substances similar to the enumerated articles in section 11 of the Act under which the same were imported; adding, that if they were, then the duty was properly assessed; that if they were not, then their verdict should be for the plaintiffs.

New products or articles of importation frequently appear, and hence it is that Congress finds it necessary to impose duties by some general designation, in order that non-enumerated articles may not escape from their just share of the public burden. Non-enumerated articles under the first Act in question were subjected to a duty of ten per centum ad valorem, but the Act increasing import duties included some of those articles in the enumerated list, and imposed on them a duty of $5 per ton in addition to the duties previously imposed by the prior Act. Appended to the class so enumerated in the clause of the second Act under consideration was the phrase, "and other vegetable substances not enumerated," which were by the same clause made subject to the same additional specific duty.

Both the appraisers and the collector as well as the commissioner regarded the products imported as vegetable substances similar to the articles enumerated in the preceding part of the same clause; and if their theory is correct, then it was immaterial whether the jute rejections were or were not used for cordage, as those words, though incorporated into the corresponding clause in the prior Act, were left out of the clause in the subsequent Act increasing import duties.

It is the theory of the plaintiffs that the clause in the second Act means the same thing as the clause in the antecedent Act, but the circuit court held otherwise; and the court here fully concurs in the view of the circuit court, that the duties were properly assessed if the products imported were of a class of non-enumerated vegetable substances similar to the enumerated articles mentioned in the clause of section 11, which imposes the duty in question.

Plainly the question was one of fact; and the court is of the opinion that it was properly submitted to the jury in connection with the converse of the proposition, that if the products were not of that class, then their verdict should be for the plaintiffs.

Complaint is also made by the plaintiffs that when they offered evidence to show that jute rejections were never used for cordage, the court rejected the evidence as immaterial; but the court here is of the opinion that the ruling was correct, as it is clear that the words "used for cordage" is no part of the clause of section 11, under which the duties were assessed.

Dissatisfaction is expressed by the plaintiffs that the Circuit Judge did not give the jury some better standard to guide them in the performance of their duty; but it is not perceived that there is any just ground for that complaint, as he gave them the very criterion which the Tariff Act prescribes; that if the importation was of an article non-enumerated and of a class of vegetable substances similar to the enumerated articles preceding that phrase in the same clause, then the duty was properly assessed, but, if not, then the plaintiffs were entitled to the verdict.

For these reasons the court is of the opinion that there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

KENTUCKY IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Pf. in Err.,

v.

CHARLES W. SLACK, COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Railroad company, what is.

An improvement company, with authority to construct a railroad, which it did construct and use, is, within the meaning of the Act of Congress of July 13, 1868, a railroad company, and liable to the tax of five per cent. imposed by such Act on coupons of bonds issued for its indebtedness.

Argued Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Francis W. Palfrey, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Moneys involuntarily paid for internal revenue taxes illegally exacted may be recovered back from the collector in an action of assumpsit.

Taxes of the kind to the amount of $750, were paid to the collector by the plaintiffs, after an unsuccessful appeal to the Commissioner. Redress being refused, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit in the state court, where the defendant appeared and removed the cause into the circuit court for the same district. Subsequently both parties appeared in the circuit court and submitted the cause to the circuit court upon the agreed statement of facts exhibited in the transcript.

Bonds with coupons annexed, it appears, were issued by the plaintiff Company in the sum of $500,000, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent payable semi-annually. Sufficient appears also to show that the tax in question was a tax of five per cent upon $15,000 of those coupons which fell due at the time specified in the agreed statement. Payment of the tax was resisted, upon the ground that the plaintiffs were not a railroad company, and the claim to recover back the money paid for the tax, with interest, is made upon the same ground. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant in the circuit court, and the plaintiffs sued out the present writ of error.

Errors assigned in this court are as follows: (1) That the circuit court erred in rendering judgment for the defendant. (2) That the court erred in finding that the plaintiffs were a railroad company. (3) That the court erred in holding that the plaintiffs were not protected from paying the tax by the provision in the amendatory Act. 14 Stat. at L., 139.

I. When first organized under their original charter, it is, doubtless, true that the plaintiffs were a mining and manufacturing company, covering a very large field of operations, and with some quite extraordinary powers; as, for example, they might lock and dam Little Sandy River up to their mines and property, and for that purpose they might exercise the same power in condemning lands and property as was authorized by law for the condemnation of mill-sites.

Had the case stopped there, the question would be attended with difficulty, and perhaps would require a reversal of the judgment; but it does not stop there. Instead of that, the agreed statement shows that the name of the Company was subsequently changed to that of the Kentucky Improvement Company, and the powers and privileges of the Company were not only greatly enlarged, but were extended to objects and purposes other than those relating to mining and manufacturing. Authority is given to the Company by the 4th section of the new Act to construct one or more rail tracks from any lands owned or improved by the Corporation to convenient points on the Ohio or Little Sandy River, or both, or to connect with other railways, and to maintain said track or tracks, and to draw cars over the same by any suitable motive power.

Under the enlarged power conferred by the new Act, the Company may not only construct railway tracks and connect with other railways, but they may condemn and appropriate such lands and materials as may be necessary for the construction and convenient and proper use and maintenance of such railroad, without any limitation except that the same proceedings shall be had in effecting such condemnation as are required by law for the condemnation of lands and materials for turnpikes and plank roads, and that the lands condemned for any railroad track shall not exceed in width one hundred feet.

Tested by the terms of the charter, it is clear that the powers granted were more comprehensive than are usually found in railroad charters, both in respect to the routes it may establish and the lands and materials the Company may condemn and appropriate to such uses. For aught that appears to the contrary, they might construct an indefinite number of tracks in any direction from their own lands, and might connect with every other railroad in the State; and in constructing such tracks or making such connections they might, without limit, condemn and appropriate all such lands and materials as might be necessary and convenient in constructing and maintaining the same, provided the width for the railroad track did not exceed one hundred feet.

Confirmation of the proposition that the plaintiffs are a railroad company is also derived from the evidence reported, which shows that the plaintiffs, after their road was constructed and equipped with rolling stock, used it not only to transport their own products and manufactures, but as a public highway for the conveyance of freight and passengers.

Two suggestions are made by the plaintiffs in explanation of the evidence introduced to prove that the railroad was used for the public accommodation: (1) That the annual receipt from that source of employment was less than that derived from mining and manufacturing; but it is a sufficient answer to that suggestion to say that it does not appear that they did not accommodate all shippers and passengers who applied for any such services.

II. That the charter does not, in terms, authorize the Company to convey freight or passengers for hire. Suppose that is so; still it remains that power is given to the plaintiffs to construct a railroad and, if so, it must be inferred that the builders and owners of it have a right to use it, and to charge a reasonable price for its use.

Ample power to lock and dam Little Sandy River and flow the water to their property was given by the Act of incorporation, nor is there any ground to suppose that that power was taken away or withdrawn by the amendatory charter, as the latter provides that if the Company shall lock and dam that river they shall build two bridges over the river, sufficient for the accommodation of the public, at the points specified in the 8th section of the Act, which warrants the conclusion that the power to construct railroads and to lock and dam the river named are both included in the charter as amended. Enough appears to show that the plaintiffs adopted the Act changing their corporate name, and that the Company was duly organized under the new charter, and that they continued operations under it until the Company ceased to exist.

Meetings were held by the stockholders, and at an adjourned meeting they resolved to authorize the building of a railroad, and to provide locomotives, cars and other facilities for the transportation of coal and other productions to market from the canal openings to a certain landing on the Ohio River. What that distance is the resolution does not state, but it is supposed to be about twenty miles.

They also resolved that a sum not exceeding $500,000 be raised for the purpose of building and equipping said railroad, and to afford facilities for transportation to market for the mineral and other productions of the Company's property. Officers had previously been elected, and the shareholders also empowered the president and directors to issue bonds for the amount raised, to be secured by mortgage of all their landed property and improvements, the bonds bearing six per cent interest, payable semi-annually. Bonds to that amount were accordingly issued and were secured as indicated, and it appears that the coupons taxed in this case were a part of the coupons attached to those bonds.

Two years later, the railroad was finished and opened for business, and it appears that the Company within one year and eight months transported passengers and freight over its railroad for hire to the amount of $8,700 in addition to their own freight and passengers not paying fare.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is so clear that the plaintiffs are a railroad company and that their road is a railroad, that it is not deemed necessary further to pursue the argument.

Grant that; and still it is insisted by the plaintiffs that the tax was illegally exacted, because the Company of the plaintiffs was not a railroad company indebted for any money for which bonds had been issued.

Congress enacted to the effect that any railroad indebted for any money for which bonds or other evidences of indebtedness have been issued, subject to interest, or with coupons representing interest, shall pay a tax of five per centum on the amount of all such interest or coupons. 14 Stat. at L., 138; Barnes v. The Railroads 17 Wall., 294-299 [84 U. S., XXI., 544, 545].

Express authority was given to the plaintiffs as an improvement Company to construct one or more rail tracks as before explained, or to connect with other railways, and to maintain said track or tracks and draw cars over the same, by any suitable motive power, before the plaintiffs as such improvement Company resolved to build said railroad and to provide locomotives, cars and other facilities for the purposes antecedently mentioned; and it was for the purpose of constructing and equipping that railroad that the shareholders of the Company resolved to raise the said sum of $500,000, and to issue the coupon bonds for the amount. Coupon bonds were accordingly issued, and the record shows that the tax in question was assessed on $15,000 of such coupons.

Examined in the light of these suggestions, as the case should be, and it follows that the Company of the plaintiffs was a railroad company indebted for money for which bonds had been issued.

III. Concede both of the preceding conclusions, and still the plaintiffs contend that they should recover, because they insist that the receipts of the Company derived from the public use of their railroad were insufficient to pay the semi-annual interest of the bonds, and that they are protected from such a tax by the proviso added by the 22d section of the amendatory Act. 14 Stat. at L., 139.

Nothing is shown in support of the theory of fact assumed in the proposition, except what is found in the table exhibited in the transcript. Even suppose that that is correct; it by no means follows that it will avail the plaintiffs in the present case, for several reasons: (1) Because, if the interest was, in fact, paid by the plaintiffs, it is of no consequence where they obtained the money, it being clear that in order to raise the question there must be an actual failure to make the payment. (2) Where the interest is paid, the presumption is conclusive that every other circumstance existed to justify the assessment of the tax. (3) Proof to show that the interest has never been paid is not exhibited, nor is the table referred to of a character to satisfy the court that it shows the whole amount of the pecuniary advantage which the plaintiffs derived from their railroad. Without more, these remarks are sufficient to show that each of the assignments of error must be overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case. The construction of the short railway by the Company for its own use, to carry the products of its mine to the Ohio River, did not, in my opinion, convert the Improvement Company, which was organized to mine for coal, iron and other materials, into a railroad company, so as to bring it within the statute providing for a tax upon the coupons of bonds issued by such companies, and I am authorized to state that Mr. Chief Justice Waite and Mr. Justice Harlan concur with me in this opinion.

Argued Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. F. W. Palfrey, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips Solicitor Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Statutory authority was given to the plaintiff as a Railway Company to purchase, acquire and hold any line of railway, finished or unfinished, lying on or near their line or crossing the same or between the termini of their railway, and to make payment for such purchase or acquisition on such terms as should be agreed between the parties. Pursuant to that authority, the plaintiffs purchased all the property of the Kentucky Improvement Company, real, personal and mixed, including their franchise, subject, however, to the mortgage previously made by the grantors of their lands and improvements to secure a certain issue of bonds, amounting to $500,000, as therein more fully set forth. Due conveyance of the same was made to it by deed dated February 28, 1870, as appears by the agreed statement of facts.

Coupons were attached to the bonds, and it appears that an internal revenue tax of two and a half per cent. was assessed thereon by the official assessor. Payment of the tax, after an unsuccessful appeal to the Commissioner, was made by the plaintiffs; and they instituted the present suit to recover back the amount paid, with interest, as having been illegally exacted. Service was made; and the parties appeared, and, having consented to the agreed statement of facts exhibited in the record, submitted the cause to the court without a jury. Hearing was had; and the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs removed the cause into this court.

Two errors are assigned: (1) That the court erred in finding that the grantors of the plaintiffs were a railroad company, and liable to the tax assessed upon the coupons attached to their bonds. (2) That the court erred in finding that the plaintiffs were liable for the tax assessed.

I. Railroad companies were by law made subject to an internal revenue tax for the year 1871 of two and a half per cent. on the amount of all interest or coupons paid on bonds or other evidences of debt issued and payable in one or more years after date. 16 Stat. at L., 260.

Such taxes for the year specified in the Act cited were assessed against the plaintiffs, and the present suit was instituted to recover back the amount paid with lawful interest.

It appears by the Act of incorporation that the plaintiffs were created a body politic and corporate for the purpose of constructing a railroad with a single or double track, with all the privileges and rights usual to such corporations. Power to make the purchase of the line of railroad constructed by the Improvement Company, as described in the opinion just read, is admitted. Nor is it necessary to enter into any explanation as to the circumstances under which the bonds of the Improvement Company were issued, as it is admitted in the agreed statement of facts filed in this case, that those circumstances are fully shown in the agreed statement of facts filed in that case.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is quite clear that any discussion of the question presented in the first assignment of errors is unnecessary, except to refer to the decision in the former case, and the reasons there given for the conclusion that the Company in that case was a railroad company.

II. Suppose that is so; then it is conceded by the plaintiffs in this case that they cannot sustain their second assignment of errors which is all that need be said upon the subject.

Judgment affirmed.

Who are co-employees or co-servants within the rule that a master is not responsible for injuries to a servant occasioned by the negligence of a co-servant.

"To constitute fellow-laborers, within the meaning of the doctrine which protects the master from responsibility for injuries sustained by one servant through the wrongful act or carelessness of another, it is not necessary that the servant causing and the servant sustaining the injury shall both be engaged in precisely the same, or even similar acts; nor need their rank be the same. The negligent servant may be superior to the injured servant, in his grade of employment. Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq., 295; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 67 Me., 60; S. C., 35 Am. fining exceptions, one of which arises from the obligation of the master, whether a natural person or a corporation, not to expose the servant, when conducting the master's business, to perils or hazards against which he may be guarded by proper diligence upon the part of the master.

3. To that end the master, whether a natural person or a corporation, although not to be held as guaranteeing the absolute safety or perfection of machinery or other apparatus provided for the servant, is bound to observe all the care which the exigencies of the situation reasonably require, in furnishing instrumentalities adequately safe for use.

4. Those, at least, in the organization of a railroad corporation who are invested with a controlling or superior duty in that regard, represent its personality; their negligence from which the injury results is the negligence of the corporation.

5. If the servant, having knowledge of a defect in machinery, gives notice thereof to the proper officer, and is promised that such defect shall be remedied, his subsequent use of the machinery, in the belief, well grounded, that it will be put in proper condition within a reasonable time, does not, necessarily, or as matter of law, make him guilty of contributory negligence. It is for the jury to say whether he was in the exercise of due care, in relying upon such promise, and in using the machinery, after knowledge of its defective or insufficient condition. The burden of proof, in such a case, is upon the company to show contributory negligence.

Submitted Nov. 21, 1879. Decided Jan. 12, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas.

This action was commenced in the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, by the plaintiff in error, to recover damages for the death of her husband, while he was in the employ of the defendant. The cause was removed to the court below, where judgment was rendered for the defendant.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. James Turner and W. S. Herndon, for plaintiff in error:

In case of a railway company, that does all its business through agents and servants, the one above and superior to another, those superior being charged with all the powers of the master, fellow-servants are those employed under him, who obey his orders, move at his commands, and who can be removed and discharged conveying him. Kan. Pac. R. R. Co. v. Salmon, 11 Kan., 83; Gilshannon v. Stony Brook R. R. Co., 10 Cush., 298; Seaver v. Boston & Me. R. R. Co., 14 Gray, 466; Tunney v. Midland R. R. Co., 1 L. R. C. P., 291; Russell v. Hudson R. R. Co., 17 N. Y., 134.

A fellow-servant is anyone who serves and is controlled by the same master. Common employment is service of such kind that, in the exercise of ordinary sagacity, all who engage in it may be able to foresee, when accepting it, that through the carelessness of fellow-servants, it may probably expose them to injury. McAndrews v. Burns, 30 N. J. L., 117.

A proper test is, whether the negligence of one servant was likely to inflict injury on another. Valdez v. O. & M. Ry. Co., 85 Ill., 500; Chic. & A. R. R. Co. v. Murphy, 53 Ill., 336; S. C., 5 Am. Rep., 48.

In Illinois it is held that when servants are not associated together in the discharge of their duties, where their employment does not require co-operation, and does not result in mutual contact or bring them together in such relation that they may exercise upon each other an influence promotive of safety or caution, the reason of the rule making those in different departments co-employees does not apply. C. & N. W. R. R. Co. v. Swett, 45 Ill., 197; S. C., 14 Am. Rep., 32; Ryan v. C. & N. W. R. R. Co., 60 Ill., 171; T. W. & W. R. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 77 Ill., 391; C. & N. W. R. R. Co. v. Moranda, 93 Ill., 302; S. C., 34 Am. Rep., 168.

A carpenter, working as such for a railway company, while being conveyed to or from his work, is at his pleasure, we maintain that the chief of a department, exercising such necessary control over his inferiors, is the representative of the master, and that his negligence is the negligence of the master.

Hough was, in no sense of the word, a fellow-servant of any person employed by the defendant in its machine or repair shop, and in no sense of the word was he a fellow-servant of the master mechanics of defendant's road, or of the foreman of its roundhouse. The Judge was in error when he charged the jury that they were fellow-servants.

If Hough knew of the defective condition of the engine and reported the defect, but continued to run it under the promise of the master mechanic that it should be repaired, he was not guilty of such contributory negligence as would prevent a recovery here.

Messrs. Jno. C. Brown and Casey Young, for defendant in error:

The plaintiff's counsel insists that the master mechanic, being in charge of the motive power of the road and of its repair, and having the right to control and discharge the engineers who run the locomotives, and power to determine what engineer and what engine shall do a particular service, and when and how it shall be done, with the right to determine whether an engine needs repairs, and to order what repairs shall be made and how made; that such master mechanic is, in no sense, a fellow servant or co-employed with an engineer, and that, therefore, any negligence of the master mechanic is the negligence of the Company.

One or two of the authorities cited by the learned counsel sustain his general proposition, but the preponderance of American authority, as well as English, is against it.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs in error, the widow and child of W. C. Hough, deceased, seek in this action to recover against the Texas and Pacific Railway Company damages, compensatory and exemplary, on account of his death, which occurred in 1874, while he was in its employment as an engineer.

In substance, the case is this:

The evidence in behalf of the plaintiffs tended to show that the engine of which deceased had charge, coming in contact with an animal, was thrown from the track, over an embankment, whereby the whistle, fastened to the boiler, was blown or knocked out, and from the opening not a fellow-servant of the employees running the train or repairing the track. O'Donnell v. Allegheny Val. R. R. Co., 59 Pa. St., 239.

A conductor being conveyed on his employers' railroad, under instructions to proceed to a certain point and there take charge of a train, is a fellow-servant of those who have the management of the cars in which he is riding. Manville v. C. & T. R. R. Co., 11 Ohio, 417. St.

thus made hot water and steam issued; scalding the deceased to death; that the engine was thrown from the track because the cow-catcher or pilot was defective, and the whistle blown or knocked out because it was insecurely fastened to the boiler; that these defects were owing to the negligence of the Company's master mechanic, and of the foreman of the roundhouse at Marshall; that to the former was committed the exclusive management of the motive power of defendant's line, with full control over all engineers, and with unrestricted power to employ, direct, control and discharge them at pleasure; that all engineers were required to report for orders to those officers, and under their directions alone could engines go out upon the road; that deceased knew of the defective condition of the cow-catcher or pilot, and, having complained thereof to both the master mechanic and foreman of the roundhouse, he was promised a number of times that the defect should be remedied, but such promises were not kept; that a new pilot was made, but, by reason of the negligence of those officers, it was not put on the engine.

The evidence in behalf of the Company concluded to show that the engine was not defective; that due care had been exercised, as well in its purchase as in the selection of the officers charged with the duty of keeping it in proper condition; that the defective cow-catcher or pilot was not the cause of the engine being thrown from the track; that the whistle was securely fastened, and did not blow out, but the cab being torn away, the safety-valve was opened, whereby the deceased was scalded; that if any of the alleged defects existed, it was because of the negligence of the master mechanic and the foreman of the roundhouse, for which negligence the Company claims that it was not responsible.

The principal question arising upon the assignments of error requires the consideration, in some of its aspects, of the general rule exempting the common master from liability to one servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in the same employment.

"The general rule," said Chief Justice Shaw, in Farwell v. R. Co., 4 Met., 49, "resulting from considerations as well of justice as of policy, is, that he who engages in the employment of another for the performance of specified duties and services, for compensation, takes upon himself the natural and ordinary risks and perils incident to the performance of such services; and, in legal contemplation, the compensation is adjusted accordingly. And we are not aware of any principle which should except the perils arising from the carelessness and negligence of those who are in the same employment. These are perils which the servant is as likely to know, and against which he can as effectually guard, as the master. They are perils incident to the service, and which can be as distinctly foreseen and provided for in the rate of compensation as any other."

To prevent misapprehension as to the scope of the decision, it was deemed necessary, in a subsequent portion of his opinion, to add: "We are far from intending to say that there are no implied warranties and undertakings arising out of the relation of master and servant. Whether, for instance, the employer would be responsible to an engineer for the loss arising from a defective or ill-constructed steam-engine; whether this would depend upon an implied warranty of its goodness and sufficiency, or upon the fact of willful misconduct or gross negligence on the part of the employer, if a natural person, or of the superintendent or immediate representative and managing agent, in case of an incorporated company, are questions on which we give no opinion."

As to the general doctrine to which we have adverted, very little conflict of opinion is to be found in the adjudged cases, where the court has been at liberty to consider it upon principle, uncontrolled by statutory regulations. The difficulty has been in its practical application in the special circumstances of particular cases. What are the natural and ordinary risks incident to the work in which the servant engages; what are the perils which, in legal contemplation, are presumed to be adjusted in the stipulated compensation; who, within the true sense of the rule, or upon grounds of public policy, are to be deemed fellow-servants in the same common

A train hand is not a fellow-servant of a person who was engineer, conductor, superintendent and master of a gravel and material train, and had entire charge of that branch of the business on a section, with power to employ and discharge men. Dobbin v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 81 N. C., 446; S. C., 31 Am. Rep., 512.

When the servant, by whose negligence other servants of the common employer have received injury, is the alter ego of the master and to whom everything has been left, his negligence is the negligence of the employer, for which the latter is liable. *Malone v. adventure or undertaking, are questions in reference to which much contrariety of opinion exists in the courts of the several States. Many of the cases are very wide apart in the solution of those questions.

It would far exceed the limits to be observed in this opinion, and it is not essential in this case to enter upon an elaborate or critical review of the authorities upon those several points. Nor shall we attempt to lay down any general rule applicable to all cases involving the liability of the common employer to one employé for the negligence of a co-employé in the same service. It is sufficient to say, that, while the general doctrine, as stated by Chief Justice Shaw, is sustained by elementary writers of high authority, and by numerous adjudications of the American and English courts, there are well defined exceptions, which, resting as they clearly do upon principles of justice, expediency and public policy, have become too firmly established in our jurisprudence to be now disregarded or shaken.

One and, perhaps, the most important of those exceptions arises from the obligation of the master, whether a natural person or a corporate body, not to expose the servant, when conducting the master's business, to perils or hazards against which he may be guarded by proper diligence upon the part of the master. To that end the master is bound to observe all the care which prudence and the exigencies of the situation require, in providing the servant with machinery or other instrumentalities adequately safe for use by the latter. It is implied in the contract between the parties that the servant risks the dangers which ordinarily attend or are incident to the business in which he voluntarily engages for compensation; among which is the carelessness of those, at least in the same work or employment, with whose habits, conduct and capacity he has, in the course of his duties, an opportunity to become acquainted, and against whose neglect or incompetency he may himself take such precautions as his inclination or judgment may suggest. But it is equally implied in the same contract that the master shall supply the physical means and agencies for the conduct of his business. It is also implied, and public policy requires, that in selecting such means he shall not be wanting in proper care. His negligence in that regard is not a hazard usually or necessarily attendant upon the business. Nor is it one which the servant, in legal contemplation, is presumed to risk, for the obvious reason that the servant who is to use the instrumentalities provided by the master has, ordinarily, no connection with their purchase in the first instance, or with their preservation or maintenance in suitable condition after they have been supplied by the master.

In considering what dangers the servant is presumed to risk, the court, in R. R. Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall., 553, 557 [84 U. S., XXI., 739, 740], said: "But this presumption cannot arise where the risk is not within the contract of service, and the servant had no reason to believe he would have to encounter it. If it were otherwise, principals would be released from all obligations to make reparations to an employé in a subordinate position for any injury caused by the wrongful conduct of the persons placed over him, whether they were fellow-servants in the same common service or not. Such a doctrine would be subversive of all just ideas of the obligations arising out of the contract of service, and withdraw all protection from the subordinate employés of railroad corporations. These corporations, instead of being required to conduct their business so as not to endanger life, would, so far as this class of persons were concerned, be relieved of all pecuniary responsibility in case they fail to do it. A doctrine that leads to such results is unsupported by reason, and cannot receive our sanction."

A railroad corporation may be controlled by competent, watchful and prudent directors, who exercise the greatest caution in the selection of a superintendent or general manager, under whose supervision and orders its affairs and business, in all of its departments, are conducted. The latter, in turn, may observe the same caution in the appointment of subordinates at the head of the several branches or departments of the Company's service. But the obligation still remains to provide and maintain, in suitable condition, the machinery and apparatus to be used by its employés, an obligation the more important, and the degree of diligence in its performance the greater, in proportion to the dangers which may be encountered. Those, at least, in the organization of the corporation, who are invested with controlling or superior authority in that regard represent its legal personality; their negligence, from which injury results, is the negligence of the corporation. The latter cannot, in respect of such matters, interpose between it and the servant, who has been injured, without fault on his part, the personal responsibility of an agent who, in exercising the master's authority, has violated the duty he owes, as well to the servant as to the corporation.

To guard against misapplication of these principles, we should say that the Corporation is not to be held as guarantying or warranting the absolute safety, under all circumstances, or the perfection in all of its parts, of the machinery or apparatus which may be provided for the use of employés. Its duty in that respect to its employés is discharged when, but only when, its agents whose business it is to supply such instrumentalities exercise due care as well in their purchase originally, as in keeping and maintaining them in such condition as to be reasonably and adequately safe for use by employés.

The principles we have announced are sustained by the great weight of authority in this country as an examination of adjudged cases and elementary treatises will abundantly show.

A leading case is Ford v. R. R. Co., 110 Mass., 241. That was an action by an engineer to recover damages for injuries caused by the explosion of his engine, which was old and out of repair. His right to recover was disputed, upon the ground that the want of repair of the engine was due to the negligence of fellow-servants in the department of repairs.

But the court said: "The rule of law which exempted the master from responsibility to the servant for injuries received from the ordinary risks of his employment, including the negligence of his fellow-servants, does not excuse the exercise of ordinary care in supplying and maintaining proper instrumentalities for the performance of the work required. One who enters the employment of another has a right to count on this duty, and is not required to assume the risks of the master's negligence in this respect. The fact that it is a duty which must always be discharged, when the employer is a corporation, by officers and agents, does not relieve the corporation from that obligation. The agents who are charged with the duty of supplying safe machinery are not, in the true sense of the rule relied on, to be regarded as fellow-servants of those who are engaged in operating it. They are charged with the master's duty to his servant. They are employed in distinct and independent departments of service, and there is no difficulty in distinguishing them, even when the same person renders service by turns in each, as the convenience of the employer may require." In a subsequent portion of the same opinion, the court said: "The corporation is equally chargeable, whether the negligence was in originally failing to provide, or in afterwards failing to keep, its machinery in safe condition."

The same views, substantially, are expressed by Mr. Wharton in his treatise on the Law of Negligence. The author (sec. 211) says: "The question is that of duty; and, without making the unnecessary and inadequate assumption of implied warranty, it is sufficient for the purposes of justice to assert that it is the duty of an employer inviting employees to use his structure and machinery, to use proper care and diligence to make such structure and machinery fit for use." Again (sec. 212): "At the same time we must remember that where a master, personally or through his representatives, exercises due care in the purchase or construction of buildings and machinery, and in their repair, he cannot be made liable for injuries which arise from casualties against which such care would not protect. It is otherwise if there be a lack in such care, either by himself or his representatives. The duty of repairing is his own; and, as we shall hereafter see, the better opinion is, that he is directly liable for the negligence of agents when acting in this respect in his behalf. If the master 'knows, or, in the exercise of due care, might have known,' that * * * his structures or engines were insufficient, either at the time of procuring them or at any subsequent time, he fails in his duty." Still further, in reference to the obligation upon the master to supply suitable machinery for working use (sec. 232 a): "It has sometimes been said that a corporation is obliged to act always by servants, and that it is unjust to impute to it personal negligence in cases in which it is impossible for it to be negligent personally. But if this be true, it would relieve corporations from all liability to servants. The true view is, that, as the corporation can act only through superintending officers, the negligences of those officers, in respect to other servants, are the negligences of the corporation."

The current of decisions in this country is in the same direction; as will be seen from an examination of the authorities, some of which are cited in the note at the end of this opinion.

It is, however, insisted that the defense is sustained by the settled course of decisions in the English courts. It is, undoubtedly, true that the general doctrine of the immunity of the master from responsibility for injuries received by his servant from a fellow-servant in the same employment has, in some cases, been carried much further by the English than by the American courts. But we cannot see that, upon the precise question we have been considering, there is any substantial conflict between them. That question was not, as is supposed, involved, it certainly was not decided, in Priestley v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W., 1. The decision there was placed by Lord Abinger partly upon the ground that, in the "sort of employment especially described in the declaration [transporting goods of the master by one servant, in a van, conducted by another of his servants], * * * the plaintiff must have known as well as the master, and probably better, whether the van was sufficient, whether it was overloaded, and whether it was likely to carry him safely." But even in that case, although the court declared it was not called upon to decide how far knowledge upon the part of the master of vices or imperfections in the carriage used by the servant injured would make him liable, it was said: "He (the master) is, no doubt, bound to provide for the safety of the servant in the course of his employment, to the best of his judgment, information and belief."

The question came before the House of Lords in Patterson v. Wallace, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas., 748, and again, in 1858, in Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas., 266. In the last named case, Lord Cranworth said that it was a principle, established by many preceding cases, "That when a master employs his servant in a work of danger, he is bound to exercise due care in order to have his tackle and machinery in a safe and proper condition, so as to protect the servant against unnecessary risks." This he held to be the law in both Scotland and England. At the same sitting of the House of Lords, Coal Co. v. McGuire, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas., 307, was determined. In that case, Lord Chancellor Chelmsford delivered the principal opinion, concurring in what was said in the Reid case. After referring to the general doctrine as announced in Priestley v. Fowler, and recognized subsequently in other cases in the English courts, he said: "In the consideration of these cases it did not become necessary to define with any great precision what was meant by the words 'common service,' or 'common employment,' and, perhaps, it might be difficult beforehand to suggest any exact definition of them. It is necessary, however, in each particular case to ascertain whether the fellow-servants are fellow-laborers in the same work, because although a servant may be taken to have engaged to encounter all risks which are incident to the service which he undertakes, yet he cannot be expected to anticipate those which may happen to him on occasions foreign to his employment. Where servants, therefore, are engaged in different departments of duty, an injury committed by one servant upon the other, by carelessness or negligence in the course of his peculiar work, is not within the exception, and the master's liability attaches in that case in the same manner as if the injured servant stood in no such relation to him."

Upon the same occasion, Lord Brougham, referring to the remark of a Scotch Judge, to the effect that an absolute and inflexible rule, releasing the master from responsibility in every case where one servant is injured by the fault of another, was utterly unknown to the law of Scotland, said: "But, my Lords, it is utterly unknown to the laws of England also. To bring the case within the exemption, there must be this most material qualification, that the two servants shall be men in the same common employment, and engaged in the same common work under that employment." Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas., 313.

An instructive case is Clarke v. Holmes, decided in 1862, in the Exchequer Chamber, upon appeal from the Court of Exchequer, 7 Hurl. & N., 937. There, the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to oil dangerous machinery, and he was injured in consequence of its remaining unfenced. He had complained of the condition of the machinery, and the manager of the defendant, in the latter's presence, promised that the fencing should be restored. In the course of the argument, counsel for the defendant relied upon Priestley v. Fowler, claiming it to have decided that whenever a servant accepts a dangerous occupation he must bear the risk. He was, however, interrupted by Cockburn, C. J., with the remark, "That is, whatever is fairly within the scope of the occupation, including the negligence of fellow-servants; here, it is the negligence of the master." Crompton, J., also said: "It cannot be made part of the contract, that the master shall not be liable for his own negligence."

In the opinion delivered by Cockburn, C. J., it was said: "I consider the doctrine laid down by the House of Lords, in the case of Coal Co. v. Reid, as the law of Scotland with reference to the duty of a master, as applicable to the law of England also, namely: that when a servant is employed on machinery from the use of which danger may arise, it is the duty of the master to take due care, and to use all reasonable means to guard against and prevent any defects from which increased and unnecessary danger may occur." Again, in the same opinion: "The rule I am laying down goes only to this, that the danger contemplated on entering into the contract shall not be aggravated by any omission on the part of the master to keep the machinery in the condition in which, from the terms of the contract, or the nature of the employment, the servant had a right to expect that it would be kept."

Byles, J.: "But I think the master liable on the broader ground, to wit: that the owner of dangerous machinery is bound to exercise due care that it is in a safe and proper condition. * * * The master is neither, on the one hand, at liberty to neglect all care; nor, on the other, is he to insure safety, but he is to use due and reasonable care. * * * Why may not the master be guilty of negligence by his manager or agent, whose employment may be so distinct from that of the injured servant that they cannot with propriety be deemed fellow-servants? And if a master's personal knowledge of defects in his machinery be necessary to his liability, the more a master neglects his business and abandons it to others the less will he be liable."

To the same effect is the recent case of Murphy v. Phillips, decided in 1876 in the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice, 35 L. Times (N. S.), 477.

U. S., Book 25.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the jury were not correctly informed by the court below as to the legal principles governing this case. It is impossible to reconcile the general charge or the specific instructions with the rules which we have laid down. They were, taken together, equivalent to a peremptory instruction to find for the Company. The jury may have believed, from the evidence, that the defects complained of constituted the efficient proximate cause of the death of the engineer; that such defects would not have existed had the master mechanic and foreman of the roundhouse exercised reasonable care and diligence in the discharge of their respective duties touching the machinery and physical appliances supplied to employés engaged in running trains; and that the deceased was not chargeable with contributory negligence; yet, consistently with any fair interpretation of the charge, and the specific instructions, they were precluded from finding a verdict against the Company.

One other question, arising upon the instructions, and which has been discussed with some fullness by counsel, deserves notice at our hands. It is contended by counsel that the engineer was guilty of such contributory negligence as to prevent the plaintiffs from recovering. The instruction upon that branch of the case was misleading and erroneous.

The defect in the engine, of which the engineer had knowledge, was that which existed in the cow-catcher or pilot. It is not claimed that he was aware of the insufficient fastening of the whistle, or that the defect, if any, in that respect, was of such a character that he should have become advised of it while using the engine on the road. But he did have knowledge of the defective condition of the cow-catcher or pilot, and complained thereof to both the master mechanic and the foreman of the roundhouse. They promised that it should be promptly remedied, and it may be that he continued to use the engine in the belief that the defect would be removed. The court below seem to attach no consequence to the complaint made by the engineer, followed, as it was, by explicit assurances that the defect should be remedied. According to the instructions, if the engineer used the engine with knowledge of the defect, the jury should find for the Company, although he may have been justified in relying upon those assurances.

If the engineer, after discovering or recognizing the defective condition of the cow-catcher or pilot, had continued to use the engine, without giving notice thereof to the proper officers of the Company, he would, undoubtedly, have been guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar a recovery, so far as such defect was found to have been the efficient cause of the death. He would be held, in that case, to have himself risked the dangers which might result from the use of the engine in such defective condition. But "There can be no doubt that, where a master has expressly promised to repair a defect, the servant can recover for an injury caused thereby, within such a period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance and, as we think, for an injury suffered within any period which would not preclude all reasonable expectation that the promise might be kept." Shearman & R. Negl., sec. 96; Conroy v. Iron Works, 62 Mo., 35; Patterson v. R. R. Co., 76 Pa., 389; LeClair v. R. R. Co., 20 Minn., 9; Brabbits v. R. W. Co., 38 Mo., 289; Ford v. Fitchburg R. R. Co. 110 Mass., 240. "If the servant," says Mr. Cooley, in his work on Torts, 559, "having a right to abandon the service because it is dangerous, refrains from doing so in consequence of assurances that the danger shall be removed, the duty to remove the danger is manifest and imperative, and the master is not in the exercise of ordinary care unless or until he makes his assurances good. Moreover, the assurances remove all ground for the argument that the servant by continuing the employment engages to assume the risks."

And such seems to be the rule recognized in the English courts. Holmes v. Worthington, 2 Fos. & F., 533; Holmes v. Clarke, 6 Hurls. & N., 349; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurls. & N., 937. We may add, that it was for the jury to say whether the defect in the cow-catcher or pilot was such that none but a reckless engineer, utterly careless of his safety, would have used the engine without it being removed. If, under all the circumstances and in view of the promises to remedy the defect, the engineer was not wanting in due care in continuing to use the engine, then the Company will not be excused for the omission to supply proper machinery, upon the ground of contributory negligence. That the engineer knew of the alleged defect was not, under the circumstances and as matter of law, absolutely conclusive of want of due care on his part. Ford v. R. R. Co., 110 Mass., 261; Lanning v. R. R. Co., 49 N.Y., 521. In such a case as that here presented, the burden of proof to show contributory negligence was upon the defendant. R. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall., 401 [82 U. S., XXI., 114]; Whart. Negl., sec. 423, and authorities there cited in n. 1; R. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S., 291 [XXIII., 898].

Our attention has been called to two cases determined in the Supreme Court of Texas and which, it is urged, sustain the principles announced in the court below. After a careful consideration of those cases, we are of opinion that they do not necessarily conflict with the conclusions we have reached. Be this as it may, the questions before us, in the absence of positive statute, depend upon principles of general law, and in their determination we are not required to follow the decisions of the state courts.

*The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and award a new trial, and for such other proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

ORLANDO B. DICKERSON, Survivor, Plff.

in Err.,

v.

CALVIN COLGROVE ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 578-584.)

Estoppel—by letter—legal defense—quitclaim.

1. He who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted.

2. An estoppel in pais in regard to real estate may be created by letter, disavowing all intention to claim the same.

3. Such defense is available at law, as well as in equity.

4. A grantee by deed of quitclaim is not a bona fide holder.

Argued Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 12, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. George W. Lawton, Edward Bacon and J. B. Fitzgerald, for plaintiff in error:

If there is no more than an equitable estoppel, it is without effect in this action of ejectment; but there is not even an equitable estoppel here.

Oaksmith's Lessee v. Johnston, 92 U. S., 343 (XXIII., 682); Brant v. Va. Coal & Iron Co., 93 U. S., 327 (XXIII., 927); Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich., 384; Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall., 41 (84 U. S., XXI., 569); Morgan v. R. R. Co., 96 U. S., 716 (XXIV., 743); Conrad v. Long, 33 Mich., 80; Walker v. Walker, 9 Wall., 755 (76 U. S., XIX., 819).

Messrs. Hughes, O'Brien & Smiley, for defendants in error:

The letter of April 1, 1867, operates as an estoppel upon Chauncey and his grantee, the plaintiff.

Faxon v. Faxon, 28 Mich., 159; Harkness v. Toulmin, 25 Mich., 80; Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich., 117; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall., 281 (68 U. S., XVII., 537); Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall., 273 (76 U. S., XIX., 560); Stowe v. U. S., 19 Wall., 14 (86 U. S., XXII., 144); Lyon v. Pollock, No. 78, Oct. Term, 1878 (ante, 265).

If Edwin Chauncey cannot assert this title against the defendants, his grantee cannot.

First. For the reason that the plaintiff, his grantee, took by quitclaim deed, and one who purchases by quitclaim cannot be a bona fide purchaser, but takes with notice of any equity that exists against the land in favor of other persons.

Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall., 339 (79 U. S., XX., 410); May v. LeClaire, 11 Wall., 232 (78 U. S., XX., 53); Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How., 363.

Second. The defendants were in possession of this property, and that was sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry as to all the rights and equities which the defendants had in the property.

Russell v. Sweezey, 22 Mich., 236.

This matter of estoppel may be taken advantage of in law as well as in equity.

Durham v. Alden, 20 Me., 228; Rangeley v.

Wheeler*, 17 Conn., 345; Barham v. Turbeville, 1 Swan, 437.

The authorities which object to the doctrine, place their objection upon the ground that the Statute of Frauds requires conveyances to be by deed or in writing.

See, Hayes v. Livingstone, 34 Mich., 384; Big Est., 534, 535, 2d ed.

This objection cannot apply to this case, as here the matter relied upon rests in writing.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of ejectment prosecuted in the court below by the plaintiff in error and a co-complainant who died during the progress of the suit. The parties agreed, in writing, to submit the case to the court without the intervention of a jury. The court found the facts. So far as it is necessary to state them, they may be thus summarized: Micajah Chauncey owned the land in controversy. He died on the — day of February, 1853, leaving two children, Edmund Chauncey and Sarah Kline. They were his only heirs at law. He is the common source of title of all the parties in this litigation. On the 3d of March, 1853, John Kline and Sarah, his wife, conveyed by warranty deed the entire premises to Lowell Morton. The deed was duly recorded on the 6th of March, 1854, and on the 1st of April, 1854, Lowell Morton entered into possession of the premises. He and the defendants have ever since been in actual possession, claiming to own and hold the property as tenants in common. The latter were in possession at the commencement of this suit, claiming title through conveyances from Lowell Morton. Prior to the 1st of April, 1856, Lowell Morton learned that Edmund Chauncey was one of the children of Micajah Chauncey, and that he lived in California. Whereupon Lowell Morton procured Eleazer Morton to write to Edmund Chauncey to learn whether he made any claim to the premises. On the 1st of April, 1856, Edmund Chauncey, still living in California, addressed a letter to his sister, Sarah Kline, then living in Michigan, wherein he disavowed, in strong terms, the intention ever to assert such a claim.

The contents of this letter subsequently came to the knowledge of Lowell Morton, who thereafter conveyed to the defendants by warranty deeds. Under these deeds they have since held and claimed title, and have occupied and improved the property. On the 9th of July, 1865, Edmund Chauncey conveyed the undivided half of the premises, by quitclaim deed, to Orlando B. Dickerson and James Witherell. On the 1st of May, 1868, Witherell conveyed all his right, title and interest to William W. Wheeler, one of the original plaintiffs, who died since the commencement of this action. The suit was instituted on the 6th of March, 1873. Lowell Morton and the defendants had then been in possession eighteen years and eleven months. The court below held, as conclusions of law, that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations of Michigan of 1863, and by an estoppel in pais, and gave judgment accordingly. The plaintiff thereupon sued out this writ of error.

Both the conclusions of law are relied upon as errors for the reversal of the judgment. Our remarks will be confined to the point of estoppel.

This defense is founded upon the letter of Edmund Chauncey. The contents of the letter of Morton to which it refers, are not given in the finding of facts, but the subject of that letter and the inquiry which it made appear clearly in the letter of Chauncey. He said: "Mr. Morton wrote me a letter. He wanted to know if I intended to claim any of the Conger farm," meaning the premises in controversy. "You can tell Mr. Morton for me, he need not fear anything from me. Thank God, I am well off here, and you can claim all there. This letter will be enough for him. I intended to give you and yours all my property there, and more if you need it." The phrase, "I intended to give," etc., implies that he knew his half of the farm had already been sold to Morton, and that he could not, therefore, give his sister, to whom the letter was addressed, any part of that property. It does not appear that there was any other property held by them as coparceners. He says further, that he intended to give her more if she needed it. All this was communicated to Lowell Morton. What was the effect upon him? He was lulled into security. He took no measures to perfect his title, nor to procure any redress from the Klines, who had conveyed and been paid for the whole of the property while they owned but the half. On the contrary, he gave thereafter deeds of warranty to all the defendants—who are sixty-two in number—and he and they occupied and improved the premises down to the commencement of this suit. Between that time and the date of the letter was a period of nearly seventeen years. What improvements were made and how far the property had risen in value are not disclosed, nor does it appear what stimulated Chauncey to violate his promise and commence this attack on the defendants.

The estoppel here relied upon is known as an equitable estoppel, or estoppel in pais. The law upon the subject is well settled. The vital principle is, that he who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden. It involves fraud and falsehood, and the law abhors both. This remedy is always so applied as to promote the ends of justice. It is available only for protection, and cannot be used as a weapon of assault. It accomplishes that which ought to be done between man and man, and is not permitted to go beyond this limit. It is akin to the principle involved in the limitation of actions, and does its work of justice and repose where the statute cannot be invoked. Here, according to the finding of the court, the time of adverse possession lacked but a year and a month of being twenty years, when, it is conceded the statutory bar would have been complete.

In Faxon v. Faxon, 28 Mich., 159, a mortgage, holding several mortgages, prevailed on a son of the deceased mortgagor, then intending to remove to a distance, to remain on the premises and support the family, by assuring him that the mortgages should never be enforced. The son supported the family, and the property grew in value under his tillage. After the lapse of several years the mortgagee proceeded to foreclose. He was held to be estopped by his assurances upon which the son had acted. The court said: "The complainant may have estopped himself without any positive agreement, if he intentionally led the defendants to do or abstain from doing anything involving labor or expenditure to any considerable amount, by giving them to understand they should be relieved from the burden of the mortgages. In Harkness v. Toulmin, 25 Mich., 80 and Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich., 117, this principle was applied; in the former case, to the extent of destroying a chattel mortgage; and in the latter, of forfeiting rights under a land contract, where parties were led to believe they were abandoned. There is no rule more necessary to enforce good faith than that which compels a person to abstain from asserting claims which he has induced others to suppose he would not rely on. The rule does not rest on the assumption that he has obtained any personal gain or advantage, but on the fact that he has induced others to act in such a manner that they will be seriously prejudiced if he is allowed to fail in carrying out what he has encouraged them to expect." Cooley, Justice, was inclined to doubt the sufficiency of the proof, but said, finally: "His (the mortgagee's) assurances have undoubtedly been relied upon and acted upon by the defendants, and, considering the great lapse of time without any claim under the mortgages on the part of the complainant, I am not disposed to dissent from the conclusion of my brethren." The case before us arose, also, in Michigan. In Evans v. Snyder, 64 Mo., 516, the heirs assailed an administrator's sale. No order of sale could be found. This was held to be a fatal defect. But the Supreme Court of the State held that where they stand silently by for years, while the occupant was making valuable and lasting improvements on the property, and redeeming it from the lien of the ancestor's debts, his heirs would be estopped from afterwards asserting their claim. Here, as by Judge Cooley, stress is laid upon the lapse of time. This is also a feature of the case in hand.

Other authorities to the same effect are very numerous. They may be readily found. It is unnecessary to extend this opinion by referring to them.

We think the facts disclosed in the record make a complete case of estoppel in pais.

But it is said this objection to the plaintiff's claim is not available at law, and must be set up in equity.

"This is certainly not the common law. Littleton says: 'And so a man can see one thing in this case, that a man shall be estopped by matter of fact, though there be no writing, by deed or otherwise.'" Lord Coke, commenting hereon, gives an instance of estoppel by matter in fact—this very case of partition. Co. Litt., 356, sec. 667. And such an award has been held sufficient to estop a party against whom ejectment was brought. Doe v. Rosser, 3 East, 15." Brown v. Wheeler, 17 Conn., 345, 353.

In Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet., 431, the proprietors of the city plat, in 1789, dedicated the ground between Front Street and the Ohio River to the public for commercial and other purposes. The legal title had not then emanated from the Government of the United States. In this state of things the Statute of Limitations does not run. White long subsequently acquired the legal title and brought ejectment for the premises. This court said (p. 441): "This is a possessory action, and the plaintiff, to entitle himself to recover, must have the right of possession, and whatever takes away this right of possession will deprive him of the remedy by ejectment. Adams, Ej., 32; Stark., part 4, 505-507." This is the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, in Atkyns v. Horde, 1 Burr., 119. "Ejectment," says he, "is a possessory remedy, and only competent where the lessor of the plaintiff may enter, and every plaintiff in ejectment must show a right of possession as well as of property." If the plaintiff in the present case was not entitled to possession, how, according to this authority, could he recover? If he had recovered, and a court of equity would have enjoined him from executing the judgment by a writ of possession, we ask, again, how could he recover in this action? Is not the concession that relief could be had in equity fatal to the proposition we are considering? In Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How., 284, it was said by this court: "On a title by estoppel, an action of ejectment can be maintained." We do not overlook the fact that a land claim had been conveyed before it was confirmed by an Act of Congress to the assignor and his legal representatives. It was held that on such confirmation the legal title became vested in the former, "and inured, by way of estoppel, to his grantee and those who claimed by deed under him." In that case, as in this, there was no formal transfer of the title. The transfer was made, as under a Statute of Limitations, when the bar is complete, by operation of law. Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 [67 U. S., XVII., 261]. Why may not a like transfer be held to have been made in this case? The reason given for the rule of inurement and estoppel by virtue of conveyances is, that it avoids circuitry of action. Does not the same consideration apply, with equal force, in cases of estoppel in pais? Why is it necessary to go into equity in one case and not in the other?

It has never been held that the Statute of Frauds applies to cases of inurement, and it has been conceded that it does not affect cases of dedication. Where is the difference in principle in this respect between those cases and the one before us? But here this point cannot arise, because the promise relied upon was in writing. In Cincinnati v. White [supra], this court speaking of the dedication there in question, said: "The law considers it in the nature of an estoppel in pais, which precludes the original owner from revoking such dedication," and that a grant might have been presumed, "if that had been necessary, and the fee might be considered in abeyance until a competent grantee appeared to receive it; which was as early as the year 1802, when the city was incorporated." Here there was a grantee capable of taking the fee all the time from the date of the letter. The common law is reason dealing by the light of experience with human affairs. One of its merits is that it has the capacity to reach the ends of justice by the shortest paths.

The passage of a title by inurement and estoppel is its work without the help of legislation. We think no sound reason can be given why the same thing should not follow in cases of estoppel in pais where land is concerned.

This subject has been carefully examined in Bigelow on Estoppel, pp. 603, 606, 607. The learned author comes to no final conclusion whether in cases like this the defense may be made at law, or whether a resort to equity is necessary. Such is our view. Whether the title passed or not, it was fatal to the action, that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession of the premises.

Chauncey conveyed to the plaintiff in error by deed of quitclaim. He is not, therefore, a bona fide purchaser. Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How., 333; May v. Le Claire, 11 Wall., 217 [78 U. S., XX., 50]. Morton and the defendants were in possession. For both these reasons, he took whatever title he acquired subject to all the rights, legal and equitable, of Morton and of the defendants, who deraigned their titles from the latter.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM H. WARD.

Attorney at law, liability of.

*1. Attorneys, employed by the purchaser of real estate to examine the title to the same prior to the conveyance, impliedly contract with their employer to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the undertaking.

2. Reasonable care and skill is also required by law, of an attorney, when employed to investigate the title to real estate with a view to ascertain whether it is a safe and sufficient security for a loan of money, and in either case if the attorney is negligent or fails to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the service, and loss ensues to his employer from such negligence or want of care and skill, he may be held liable to his employer for the consequences of such negligence.

3. When a person adopts the legal profession and assumes to exercise its duties in behalf of another, for hire, he must be understood as promising to employ a reasonable degree of care and skill in the performance of such duties, and if injury results to the client from the want of such care and skill, the attorney may be held to respond in damages to his client for the injury sustained.

4. Proof of employment and the want of reasonable care and skill in the performance of the stipulated service are prerequisites to the maintenance of the action, and those matters must be alleged and proved.

5. Legal advice often becomes necessary in purchasing and conveying real estate, and it is well settled law that an attorney may be held liable to his client for negligence or want of reasonable care and skill in making such an investigation, whether the client be the purchaser or the grantor.

6. Where there is neither fraud, falsehood nor collusion, the obligation of the attorney to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the designated service is to the client and not to a third party; the rule being that the attorney, where no such wrongful elements exist, is not liable for the want of reasonable care and skill at the suit of anyone between whom and himself the relation of attorney and client does not in some manner exist.

7. Cases where fraud and collusion are alleged and proved constitute a well recognized exception to the general rule; but where the cause of action consists merely in the charge of the want of reasonable care and skill in the performance of a professional duty, the attorney is only liable to his client.

8. Actions for negligence, where the act of negligence imputed is one immediately dangerous to the lives of others, stand upon a different footing, and the rule in such cases is that the wrong-doer may be liable to the injured party whether there be any privity of contract between them or not.

9. Apothecaries, who compound or sell medicines, if they carelessly label a poison as a harmless medicine, and send it so labeled into the market, become liable to all persons who without fault on their part are injured by using it, as such medicine, in consequence of the false label.

10. Surgeons who treat a patient unskillfully may be liable to the injured party as wrong-doers, even though it was the father or some friend or third person who contracted with the surgeon to perform the service.

11. Liabilities of the kind are not infrequent, but where the wrongful act is not of a dangerous character, and was not performed pursuant to a legal duty, the negligent party is in general liable only to the person with whom he contracted, and upon the ground that negligence is a breach of the contract.

12. Decided cases, in great numbers, fully sustain these several propositions.

13. None of these, however, give any support to such an action where it appears, as in this case, that the plaintiffs never employed the defendant to investigate the title or make the report, and that he never performed any such service at their request or in their behalf. Instead of that, he was employed by the claimant of the lot, and was paid for his services by his employer.

14. Some evidence of usage was introduced, but the court held that usage will not make a contract where none was made by the parties, and that the ruling of the court below in that regard is correct.

Argued Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Jan. 19, 1880.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. R. Ross Perry, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Joseph H. Bradley and John J. Johnson, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Attorneys, employed by the purchasers of real property to investigate the title of the grantor, prior to the purchase, impliedly contract to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the undertaking, and if they are negligent, or fail to exercise such reasonable care and skill in the discharge of the stipulated service, they are responsible to their employers for the loss occasioned by such neglect or want of care and skill. Add. Cont., 6th ed., 400.

Like care and skill are also required of attorneys when employed to investigate titles to real estate, to ascertain whether it is a safe or sufficient security for a loan of money, the rule being that if the attorney is negligent or fails to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the service, and a loss results to his employers from such neglect or want of care and skill, he shall be responsible to them for the consequences of such loss. Add. Torts, Wood's ed., 615.

Pursuant to that rule of law the plaintiffs sued the defendant, and alleged as the cause of action that they retained and employed him to examine and ascertain the title of the possessor of the premises described in the declaration, and to report to them the nature and extent of his title to the same; and they allege that he, the defendant, accepted the employment, and reported to them that the title of the possessor of the premises was good and unincumbered.

Their theory, as alleged in the declaration, is that they procured that report with a view to the making of a loan, and they allege that upon the faith and credit of it they loaned the sum of $3,500 to the pretended owner of the premises, and accepted as security for the same a trust-deed of the property, whereas the borrower of the money was insolvent and had no title whatever to the premises, as fully and explicitly appears by a prior deed of conveyance duly recorded.

Process was duly served, and the defendant appeared and pleaded the general issue, which was duly joined by the plaintiffs. Continuance followed, and at the opening of the next Term the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the defendant. Exceptions were filed by the plaintiffs, and they sued out the present writ of error.

Six errors are assigned in this court, of which three will be separately examined. They are as follows: (1) That the court erred in ruling that some privity of contract, arising from an actual employment of the defendant by the plaintiffs, is necessary to enable the latter to maintain the action. (2) That the court erred in holding that the evidence introduced did not establish such a privity of contract between the parties as entitled the plaintiffs to recover. (3) That the court erred in instructing the jury that upon the whole evidence the verdict should be for the defendant.

Evidence was introduced by the plaintiffs tending to prove that the defendant is an attorney at law doing business in the city, and that he held himself out to the public as a person skilled in the examination of titles to real estate situated in the District. That the claimant of the lot described in the transcript employed the defendant, in his professional character, to examine his title to that lot, and to report to him the condition of the same, and that the defendant, pursuant to that employment, reported to his employer that his title to the lot is good and that the property is unincumbered, the report being signed by the defendant and his son.

It is not pretended by the plaintiffs that they ever employed the defendant to examine the title to the lot, and it appears that the report was made at the sole request of the claimant of the lot, without any knowledge on the part of the defendant as to the purpose for which it was obtained. All that is conceded by the plaintiffs; but they gave evidence to show that the claimant of the lot presented the certificate to certain brokers, and employed them to negotiate a loan upon the property in his favor for $3,500, on the faith of that certificate. Detailed statement is given in the transcript, of the steps taken by the brokers to obtain the required loan, the substance of which is, that they required the party to give a negotiable note for the amount, payable in one year, with ten per cent. interest, and that he and his wife should execute a trust deed of the lot to them as trustees to secure the payment of the note when due.

Preliminaries being arranged, the brokers applied to the plaintiffs for the loan and obtained the same, giving the note and deed of trust with the certificate as security for the payment. Before accepting the papers, the plaintiffs, through their agent, required the brokers to sign the name of the borrower to the formal application for the loan, as exhibited in the transcript, and that the certificate as to the title should be continued to the date of the transaction.

Throughout, the negotiation for the loan was conducted entirely by the brokers with the plaintiffs, and it was the borrower who procured the second certificate from the defendant; the evidence showing that the defendant never came in contact either with the plaintiffs or the brokers.

Payment of the note was not made at maturity, and when it was attempted to sell the premises under the trust-deed, it was discovered that the certificates were untrue, and that the grantors, on the 13th of March previous, had conveyed the premises in fee simple, by deed duly executed and recorded.

Attorneys at law are officers of the court, admitted as such by its order; but it is a mistake to suppose that they are officers of the United States, as they are neither elected or appointed in the manner prescribed by the Constitution for the election or appointment of such officers. Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333, 378 [71 U. S., XVIII., 366, 370].

When a person adopts the legal profession, and assumes to exercise its duties in behalf of another for hire, he must be understood as promising to employ a reasonable degree of care and skill in the performance of such duties; and if injury results to the client from a want of such a degree of reasonable care and skill, the attorney may be held to respond in damages to the extent of the injury sustained. Proof of employment and the want of reasonable care and skill are prerequisites to the maintenance of the action; but it must not be understood that an attorney is liable for every mistake that may occur in practice, or that he may be held responsible to his client for every error of judgment in the conduct of his client's cause. Instead of that, the rule is, that if he acts with a proper degree of skill and with reasonable care and to the best of his knowledge, he will not be held responsible. Bowman v. Tallman, 27 How. Pr., 212.

If he fails in any of these respects he may, and sometimes does, not only forfeit all claim for compensation, but may also render himself liable to his client for any damage he may sustain from such neglect. Such liabilities frequently arise, and an attorney may also be liable to his client for the consequences of his want of reasonable care or skill in matters not in litigation. Business men not infrequently seek legal advice in making or receiving conveyances of real property, and it is well settled that an attorney may be liable to his client for negligence or want of reasonable care and skill in examining titles in such cases, whether the error occurs in respect to the title of property purchased or in the covenants in the instrument of conveyance, where the property is sold.

Where the relation of attorney and client exists, there is seldom any serious difficulty in determining whether the client has or has not a cause of action, or its nature and extent if one exists. Criteria of standard character are established in legal decisions by which every such controversy may be determined; but in the case before the court, the defendant was never retained or employed by the plaintiffs, nor did they ever pay him anything for making the certificates, nor did he ever perform any service at their request or in their behalf.

Neither fraud nor collusion is alleged or proved; and it is conceded that the certificates were made by the defendant at the request of the applicant for the loan, without any knowledge on the part of the defendant what use was to be made of the same or to whom they were to be presented. None of those matters are controverted; but the plaintiffs contend that an attorney in such a case is liable to the immediate sufferer for negligence in the examination of such a title, although he, the sufferer, did not employ the defendant, and the case shows that the service was performed for a third person without any knowledge that the certificate was to be used to procure a loan from the injured party.

Persons acting professionally in legal formalities, negotiations or proceedings by the warrant or authority of their clients may be regarded as attorneys at law within the meaning of that designation as used in this country; and all such, when they undertake to conduct legal controversies or transactions, profess themselves to be reasonably well acquainted with the law and the rules and practice of the courts, and they are bound to exercise in such proceedings a reasonable degree of care, prudence, diligence and skill. Authorities everywhere support that proposition; but attorneys do not profess to know all the law or to be incapable of error or mistake in applying it to the facts of every case, as even the most skillful of the profession would hardly be able to come up to that standard. Unless the client is injured by the deficiencies of his attorney, he cannot maintain any action for damages; but if he is injured, the true rule is that the attorney is liable for the want of such skill, care and diligence as men of the legal profession commonly possess and exercise in such matters of professional employment.

Both parties concur in these suggestions; but the defendant insists that, in order that such a liability may arise, there must be some privity of contract between the parties to enable the plaintiffs to maintain the action; that, inasmuch as the defendant was never retained or employed by the plaintiffs, and never rendered any service at their request or in their behalf, he cannot be held liable to them for any negligence or want of reasonable care, skill or diligence in giving to a third party the certificates in question.

Beyond all doubt, the general rule is that the obligation of the attorney is to his client and not to a third party, and unless there is something in the circumstances of this case to take it out of that general rule, it seems clear that the proposition of the defendant must be sustained. Sher. & Redf. Negl., sec. 215. Conclusive support to that rule is found in several cases of high authority. Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. (N. S.), 194.

Argument, to show that the direct question was involved in that case, is unnecessary, as the affirmative of the proposition sufficiently appears in the head note, which is as follows: That an attorney is not liable to an action for negligence, at the suit of one between whom and himself the relation of attorney and client does not exist, for giving, in answer to a casual inquiry, erroneous information as to the contents of the deed.

Although the inquiry was addressed directly to the defendant, and the case shows that the answer was given to the person making it, the court held, Erie, C. J., giving the opinion, that that there was no relation between the parties from which any contract could be implied, nor any relation between the parties from which any duty could arise. Mention is then made of the fact that the defendant was the solicitor of the trustees of a certain estate, and that the plaintiff was a workman in the employ of the trustees; from which the court deduced the conclusion that the parties did not stand in such a relation to each other as to make it any part of the duty of the defendant to give the plaintiff any professional advice. His answer was entirely erroneous; but the court decided that he could not be held responsible, unless it could be shown that at the time he made it he knew it to be false.

Sufficient appears, even in that case alone, to show that the ruling of the subordinate court is correct, but it is a mistake to suppose that the proposition is without other support than what is derived from the reasons there assigned for the conclusion. Prior to that, the same question was decided by the highest court of the same country in the same way. Application to an insurance company was made by a certain party for a loan of money, which the company agreed to make if the party would insure his life, and assign to them the policy and give sureties for the payment of interest on the loan. It appears that the plaintiffs became sureties for the applicant, and that the defendant, a law agent employed by the principal who applied for the loan, drew up the papers in the transaction, among which was one intended for the security of the sureties, which proved to be incomplete. Loss was sustained by the sureties, and they brought suit against the law agent, charging that the loss was occasioned by his negligence and want of skill and other fault. Appearance was entered by the defendant, and he denied the alleged employment. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs in the lower court, and the defendant appealed to the House of Lords, where the appeal was argued by very able counsel. Opinions seriatim were delivered by the law Lords. In substance and effect, Lord Campbell said that he never had any doubt of the soundness of the proposition that would maintain the action in such a case, and added, that there must be a privity of contract between the parties, which was not proved in that case.

No attempt was made by the appellee to controvert that proposition, but his counsel contended that the law of Scotland was different; that, by the law of the latter country, a law agent, in respect of damage occasioned by his neglects, is responsible to those who suffer by his default, although there may not have subsisted the relation of principal and agent between them. It was Lord Cranworth who responded to that proposition, and in the course of his judgment he commented upon all the authorities cited in support of the same, and showed that they failed to establish it.

Emphatic concurrence in the conclusion announced by the Chancellor was expressed by Lord Wensleydale, to the effect following: that "He only who, by himself or another as his agent, employs the attorney to do the particular act in which the alleged neglect has taken place, can sue him for that neglect, and that that employment must be affirmed in the declaration of the suit in distinct terms."

By the law of England the right of action depends entirely upon the question between whom the relation of principal and agent, client and attorney, subsists. Nothing more decisive of the question need be sought; and we have the authority of that great magistrate to say that it is impossible to support, by a single case in that country, so extraordinary a proposition as that persons who were not, by themselves or their agents, employers of law agents to do an act, could have remedy against such agents for the negligent performance of it.

Speaking to the same point, Lord Chelmsford said, it is clear that this general proposition, abstracted from the facts of the case, cannot be maintained to its full extent, as it would apply to cases where there is no privity of contract between the parties, when it is conceded that no liability would arise. Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Macq. H. of L. Cas., 167, 209.

Analogous cases involving the same principle are quite numerous, a few of which only will be noticed. They show to a demonstration that it is not everyone who suffers a loss from the negligence of another that can maintain a suit on such grounds. On the contrary, the limit of the doctrine relating to actionable negligence, says Beasley, Ch. J., is, that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining such loss. Such a restriction on the right to sue for a want of care in the exercise of employments or the transaction of business is plainly necessary to restrain the remedy from being pushed to an impracticable extreme. There would be no bounds to actions and litigious intricacies if the ill effects of the negligence of men may be followed down the chain of results to the final effect. Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L., 5, 8.

Injury was received by the driver of a mail-coach, which broke down from defects in its construction. He brought suit against the constructor of the coach who sold the same to the owner of the line in whose employment the plaintiff was engaged when the accident happened. Held, by the whole court, that the action would not lie, as there is no privity of contract between the parties. Unless we confine the operation of such contracts as this to the parties who entered into them, said Lord Abinger, the most absurd consequences, to which no limit can be seen, will ensue; and Baron Alderson remarked, if we hold that the plaintiff can sue in such a case, there is no point at which such actions will stop. The only safe rule is to confine the right to recover to those who enter into the contract; if we go one step beyond that, there is no reason why we should not go fifty. Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W., 109, 115.

Cases where fraud and collusion are alleged and proved constitute exceptions to that rule, and Parke, B., very properly admits, in the following case, that other exceptions to it exist which are as sound in principle as the judgments which establish the rule. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch., 761-767.

Examples of the kind are given in that case, two of which deserve to be noticed, as they have been urged in argument to disprove the rule; but they cannot have any such effect, for the plain reason that they stand, in many respects, upon a different footing. These cases, say the court in that opinion, occur where there has been a wrong done to the person, for which he would have a right of action, though no such contract had been made; and the court gives as an illustration the patient injured by improper medicines prepared by an apothecary, or one unskillfully treated by a surgeon, where both would be liable to the injured party even if the father or friend of the patient contracted with the wrong doer. Reported cases of the kind are cited by the plaintiffs, but it is obvious that they have no proper application to the case before the court. Pippin and Wife v. Sheppard, 11 Price, 400; Gladwell v. Steggall, 5 Bing. (N. C.), 733; George v. Skivington, L. R., 5 Exch., 1; R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How., 468, 484.

Many judicial decisions in this country besides those cited also adopt the same rule and fully recognize the same class of exceptions.

Pharmacists or apothecaries who compound or sell medicines, if they carelessly label a poison as a harmless medicine, and send it so labeled into the market, are liable to all persons who, without fault on their part, are injured by using it as such medicine, in consequence of the false label; the rule being that the liability in such a case arises, not out of any contract or direct privity between the wrong-doer and the person injured, but out of the duty which the law imposes on him to avoid acts in their nature dangerous to the lives of others. He is liable, therefore, though the poisonous drug with the label may have passed through many intermediate sales before it reached the hands of the person injured. Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y., 397, 410.

Such an act of negligence being imminently dangerous to the lives of others, the wrong-doer is liable to the injured party, whether there be any contract between them or not. Where the wrongful act is not immediately dangerous to the lives of others, the negligent party, unless he be a public agent in the performance of some duty, is in general liable only to the party with whom he contracted, and on the ground that negligence is a breach of the contract. Collis v. Selden, L. R., 3 C. P., 496.

Builders of a public work are answerable only to their employers for any want of reasonable care and skill in executing their contract, and they are not liable to third persons for accidents or injuries which may happen to them from imperfections of the structure after the same is completed and has been accepted by the employers. Albany v. Cunkiff, 2 N. Y., 165, 174.

Misfortune to third persons, not parties to the contract, would not be a natural and necessary consequence of the builder's negligence, and such negligence is not an act imminently dangerous to human life. Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y., 351-358.

So where the manufacturer of a steam boiler sold it to a paper company, it was held that the seller was only liable to the purchaser for defective materials, or for want of care and skill in its construction; and if, after delivery to and acceptance by the purchaser and while in use by him, an explosion occurs in consequence of such defective construction, to the injury of third persons, the latter will have no cause of action against the manufacturer. Loose v. Clute, 51 N. Y., 494-496.

Exactly the same rule prevails in the State of Pennsylvania, independent of any statutory regulation upon the subject, the Supreme Court of the State holding that the liability of the recorder in such a case is to the party who asks and pays for the certificate, and not to his assigns or alienee. Houseman v. Building & Loan Assn., 81 Pa., 256.

Satisfactory proof is exhibited that the defendant was duly employed by the pretended owner of the lot to examine his title to the same; and it is conceded that he did so, or that his son made the search for him, and that he made and signed the certificates in question, and that he was paid for his services by his employer; nor is it questioned that the title was defective as alleged. Concede that, and it follows as an implication of law that the defendant assumed to possess the requisite knowledge and experience to perform the stipulated service, and that he contracted with his employer that he would use reasonable care and skill in the performance of the duties. For a failure in either of these respects, if it resulted in damage to his employer, he, the employer, is entitled to recover compensation. Chase v. Heaney, 70 Ill., 268.

Decisions of the courts, of the highest authority, support that proposition; but the difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs is that they never employed the defendant to search the records, examine the title or make the report, and it clearly appears that he never performed any such service at their request or in their behalf, and that they never paid him anything for the service he did perform in respect to that transaction; nor is there any evidence tending to show any privity of contract between them and the defendant, within the meaning of the law as expounded by the decisions of the court.

Every imputation of fraud is disclaimed, and it is clear that the transaction is not one immediately dangerous to the lives of others. Where there is fraud or collusion, the party will be held liable, even though there is no privity of contract; but where there is neither fraud or collusion nor privity of contract, the party will not be held liable, unless the act is one imminently dangerous to the lives of others, or is an act performed in pursuance of some legal duty. Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W., 519, 530.

We agree, said Lord Denman, C. J., and affirm the judgment, on the ground stated by Parke, B., that as there is fraud and damage the result of that fraud, not from an act remote and consequential, but one contemplated by the defendant at the time as one of the results, the party guilty of the fraud is responsible to the party injured. Levy v. Langridge, 4 Mees. & W., 337.

Abstracts of titles and certificates of the same are frequently if not usually made by recorders, prothonotaries or clerks, and in some States See 10 OTTO.

their liability is prescribed and regulated by statute. Sess. L. (Pa.), 1872, 1040.

By that Act those officers are declared liable for all loss or damage which may happen by reason of any false or erroneous certificate of search, not only to the person or persons to, for, or upon whose order the said certificate of search is made or given, but also to any person or persons claiming title through, from or under such person or persons, or who may suffer loss by reason of the making or giving of any such false or erroneous certificate. But it is unnecessary to enter into any discussion of such regulations, as it is clear that there are none such in this District which can have any application in this case.

Testimony was introduced at the trial, tending to show that there is a local usage in the District that the attorney examining the title of such an applicant for a loan shall be considered as also acting for the lender of the money, and complaint is made that the court below did not submit that evidence to the jury, with proper instructions. Evidence of usage is not admissible to contradict or vary what is clear and unambiguous, or to restrict or enlarge what requires no explanation. Omissions may be supplied in some cases by such proof, but it cannot prevail over or nullify the express provisions of the contract. So, where there is no contract, proof of usage will not make one, and it can only be admitted either to interpret the meaning of the language employed by the parties, or where the meaning is equivocal or obscure. Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall., 663, 679 [72 U. S., XVIII., 704, 707].

Suffice it to say these parties never met, and there was no communication of any kind between the defendant and the brokers, or the lenders of the money. Nothing of the kind is pretended, the only suggestion in that direction being that it may be held that the applicant for the loan, when he employed the defendant, may be regarded as the agent of the plaintiffs. Such suggestion being entirely without evidence to support it, is entitled to no weight, especially as it appears that the principal certificate was procured several days before any interview upon the subject of the loan took place between the brokers and the plaintiffs.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite, dissenting:

I am unable to agree to the judgment in this case. I think if a lawyer, employed to examine and certify to the recorded title of real property, gives his client a certificate which he knows or ought to know is to be used by the client in some business transaction with another person as evidence of the facts certified to, he is liable to such other person relying on his certificate for any loss resulting from his failure to find on record a conveyance affecting the title, which, by the use of ordinary professional care and skill, he might have found. That, as it seems to me, is this case. Ward was employed by Chapman to examine and certify to the title to a certain lot in Washington. The circumstances were such as ought to have satisfied him that his certificate was to be used by Chapman in some transaction with another person as evidence of the facts certified to. In examining the records he overlooked a deed, in all respects properly recorded, which showed on its face that Chapman had conveyed the lot away in fee simple, and certified as follows: "Lot 55, in Chapman's subdivision of lots, in square 364. The title of Leonard S. Chapman to the above lot is good and the property is unincumbered. Wm. H. Ward." The National Savings Bank, relying on this certificate as true, loaned Chapman $3,500, taking for security a deed of trust of the lot. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, Ward is liable to the Bank for any loss it may sustain by reason of his erroneous certificate.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Bradley concur in this dissent.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, JOHN H. BAIRD ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 251-257.)

San Francisco lands—conveyance of—preemption right.

*1. The history of the title of San Francisco to her municipal lands stated.

2. The Act of Congress of March 8, 1866, "To quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the City of San Francisco," having confirmed the claim of the City in trust that certain lands should be disposed of and conveyed to parties in the bona fide actual possession thereof, by themselves or tenants, on the passage of the Act; held, that parties who were at that time in possession of land as intruders and trespassers upon the prior possession of others, and who were afterwards, by legal proceedings, ejected from the premises were not entitled to a conveyance from the City as beneficiaries under the Act; but that the prior possessors who recovered the possession were such beneficiaries.

3. A preemption right under the laws of the United States cannot be acquired by intrusion and trespass upon lands in the actual possession of others, nor to lands in California, a claim to which, under a foreign title, was at the time pending before the tribunals of the United States for confirmation.

Argued Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Jan. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. W. Foote and Walter Van Dyke, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. S. M. Wilson, E. L. Goold and Edward Janin, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to charge the defendants as trustees of certain land in the City of San Francisco, and to compel a conveyance of the legal title to the plaintiff. The case is free from difficulty, but to understand the positions of the plaintiff it will be necessary to state briefly the history of the titles to lands in that City.

NOTE.—Preemption rights. See note to U. S. v. Fitzgerald, 40 U. S. (15 Pet.), 407.

At the time of the conquest of California by the forces of the United States, on the 7th of July, 1846, there was a Mexican pueblo at the site of the present City of San Francisco. This term "pueblo," in its original signification, means people or population, but is used in the sense of the English word "town." It has the indefiniteness of that term and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place, a settlement or village, as well as to a regularly organized municipality. Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall., 363 [73 U. S., XVIII., 863]. The pueblo at San Francisco was a small settlement, but it was of sufficient importance, as early as 1835, to have an ayuntamiento, composed of alcaldes and other officers; and it was under their government for some years. At the time of the conquest, and for some time afterwards, it was under the government of justices of the peace, or alcaldes.

By the laws of Mexico, in force in California on the acquisition of the country, pueblos or towns, when once recognized by public authority, became entitled, for their benefit and that of their inhabitants, to the use of the land embracing the site of such pueblos or towns and adjoining territory within the limits of four square leagues, to be measured and assigned to them by the officers of the government. Under those laws the pueblo of San Francisco asserted a claim to four square leagues, to be measured off from the northern portion of the peninsula upon which the present City is situated.

The alcaldes of a pueblo exercised the power of distributing the lands of the town in small parcels to its inhabitants for building, cultivation or other uses, the remainder being generally retained for commons or other public purposes.

When the Town of San Francisco was occupied by our forces, citizens of the United States were appointed by the military or the naval commanders to act as alcaldes in the place of the Mexican officers. Upon the sudden increase of population at that place, following the discovery of gold, the alcaldes were called upon for building lots in great numbers, and those officers distributed them with a generous liberality usually attending the grant of other people's property. Numerous persons, however, arriving at the town were not disposed to recognize the authority in this respect of the American magistrates, and finding it less troublesome to appropriate what land they needed than to apply to the magistrates for it, they asserted that the land on which the pueblo was situated belonged to the United States and, as evidence of the sincerity of their convictions, immediately proceeded to take as much of it for themselves as they could conveniently inclose and hold. Thus the town was soon filled with an active and restless population, making large and expensive improvements upon lands held in some instances under grants from the alcaldes, and in others by the right of prior possession. Sometimes the same parcel was claimed by different parties; by one party as a settler, and by another as the holder of an alcalde grant. Disputes, both in and out of the courts, the natural consequence of this difference in the origin of the titles of the claimants, were greatly increased in bitterness by the enormous value which in a short period the lands acquired.

In April, 1850, soon after the organization of the State Government, San Francisco was incorporated as a City by the Legislature. She at once made claim to the lands of the pueblo, as its successor; and, when the Board of Land Commissioners was created under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1851, 9 Stat. at L., 631, she presented the claim for confirmation. In December, 1854, the Board confirmed the claim for only a portion of the four square leagues. Dissatisfied with the limitation of the claim, the City appealed from the decree of the Commissioners to the District Court of the United States. The government also appealed, though subsequently it withdrew its appeal. The case remained in the district court undetermined until September, 1864, a period of nearly ten years, when, under the authority of an Act of Congress, that court transferred the case to the circuit court, where it was decided in the following October. The decree, finally settled and entered May 18, 1865, confirmed the claim to a tract of land embracing so much of the upper portion of the peninsula upon which the City is situated, above the ordinary high water-mark of 1846, as would contain an area of four square leagues; the tract being bounded on the north and east by the Bay of San Francisco, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by a due east and west line, drawn so as to include the area designated, subject to certain deductions, which it is unnecessary to mention here. The lands were confirmed to San Francisco in trust for the benefit of lot holders under grants from the pueblo, town or city, or other competent authority, and as to any residue, in trust for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the City. As already stated, the City was incorporated in April, 1850. The charter she then received was repealed, and a new charter granted in April, 1851. The limits of the City, as defined by this latter charter, embraced an area of over two miles square. The lands lying outside of these charter limits are designated in the subsequent legislation of the City and State and frequently in the decisions of the courts, as outside lands.

Pending the appeal of the pueblo claim in the district court, the City passed an ordinance, known in its history, from the name of its author, as the Van Ness Ordinance, the object of which was to settle and quiet the title of persons holding land in the City. It relinquished and granted all the right and claim of the City to land within the corporate limits as defined by the charter of 1851, with certain exceptions, to parties in the actual possession thereof, by themselves or tenants, on or before the 1st of January, 1855, provided such possession was continued up to the time of the introduction of the ordinance into the Common Council, or if interrupted by an intruder or trespasser, had been or might be recovered by legal process; and it declared that, for all the purposes contemplated by the ordinance, persons should be deemed possessors who held titles to lands within those limits by virtue of a grant made by any ayuntamiento, town council, alcalde or justice of the peace of the former pueblo, before the 7th of July, 1846, or by virtue of a grant subsequently made by those authorities, within certain limits of the City, previous to its incorporation by the State, provided the grant, or a See 10 OTTO.

material portion of it, had been recorded in a proper book of records in the control of the recorder of the County previous to April 3, 1851. In March, 1858, the Legislature ratified and confirmed this ordinance; and on the 1st of July, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 332, Congress relinquished and granted to the City all the interest of the United States to the lands within the corporate limits of 1851, in trust for the uses and purposes of the ordinance. Thus the contention of the different claimants to land within those limits was settled, their titles secured, and the usual result of quieting titles, progress and prosperity, followed.

But appeals were prosecuted to the Supreme Court, both by the United States and by the City, by the United States from the whole decree, and by the City from so much of it as included the reservations in the estimate of the quantity of land confirmed. Whilst these appeals were pending, and on the 8th of March, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 4, Congress passed an Act to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the City. At this time, the limits had been extended so as to be coincident with those of the County, and embraced the whole of the four square leagues confirmed. By this Act, all the right and title of the United States to the land covered by the decree of the circuit court were relinquished and granted to the City, and the claim to the land was confirmed; subject, however, to certain reservations and exceptions, and upon trust that all the land not previously granted to the City should be disposed of and conveyed by the City to the parties in the bona fide actual possession thereof, by themselves or tenants, on the passage of the Act, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the Legislature of the State of California might prescribe, except such parcels thereof as might be reserved and set apart by ordinance of the City for public uses. The appeals to the Supreme Court were accordingly dismissed. Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wall., 326 [72 U. S., XVIII., 547]. The title of the City to the land within the four square leagues rests, therefore, upon the decree of the circuit court, as entered on the 18th of May, 1865, and this confirmatory Act of Congress. By this Act, the government expressed its will with respect to the claim of the City, and the conditions upon which it should be recognized and confirmed. As was said by this court, in Grisar v. McDowell, "In the execution of its treaty obligations with respect to property claimed under Mexican laws, the government may adopt such modes of procedure as it may deem expedient. It may act by legislation directly upon the claims preferred, or it may provide a special Board for their determination, or it may require their submission to the ordinary tribunals. It is the sole judge of the propriety of the mode; and, having the plenary power of confirmation, it may annex any conditions to the confirmation of a claim resting upon an imperfect right which it may choose. It may declare the action of the special Board final; it may make it subject to appeal; it may require the appeal to go through one or more courts; and it may arrest the action of Board or courts at any stage. 6 Wall., 379 [73 U. S., XVIII., 867].

The title of the City being thus settled, its authorities proceeded under the provisions of the confirmatory Act, and reserved and set apart grounds for parks and other public purposes. But, as these grounds were in many instances occupied, the City passed an ordinance known as No. 800, subsequently ratified by the Legislature, by which a general assessment was levied upon all the lands conveyed to occupants as a condition of receiving deeds from the City, the money thus raised to be applied towards compensating those whose lands were thus taken for public purposes.

Some of the defendants, and parties through whom the others claim, had been in the actual possession of the land in controversy here before the passage of the Act of 1866; but their possession had been intruded upon by violence and they driven from the land by parties through whom the plaintiff claims. One of the intruding parties afterwards set up a claim that he entered as a preemptor under the laws of the United States. Subsequently, the excluded parties recovered possession by suit; and the judgment in their favor was affirmed on appeal by the Supreme Court of the State. They then transferred the property, for the sake of convenience and expedition in securing the title, to one of their number, who applied to the city authorities and obtained a deed of the premises, first paying the assessment levied upon it and the taxes due. Under this deed the defendants hold the property. The plaintiff, representing the claims of the intruding and subsequently ejected parties, and insisting that they were beneficiaries under the Act of Congress, because upon its passage they were in the actual possession of the property, brought the present suit to charge the defendants as trustees of the legal title for his benefit. The District Court and the Supreme Court of the State were of opinion that, upon his own showing, his grantors, the intruders mentioned, were never in the bona fide possession of the property, within the meaning of the Act of Congress; and we agree with them in this respect. The claim of one of the intruders as a preemptor was equally unfounded: 1st, because the right of preemption, under the laws of the United States cannot be acquired by intrusion and trespass upon lands in the actual possession of others; 2d, because the lands were claimed under a foreign title, that of the pueblo from Mexico, the claim to which was then pending before the tribunals of the United States.

The possession obtained by the intrusion and trespass of the plaintiff's grantors constitutes no ground for equitable relief against the holders of the city title; and the assertion of a possession thus obtained has as little merit as the lawless and unjustifiable conduct of the intruders in seizing the property.

Judgment affirmed.

Alien—real estate in Virginia—limitations—Treaty, construction of—authority of.

1. Where a citizen of Switzerland removed thence to Virginia, and there is no proof that he denationalized himself or ceased to be a citizen and subject of Switzerland, his original citizenship is to be presumed to have continued.

2. Where such citizen leaves real estate in Virginia, his heirs, citizens of Switzerland, have, by the Treaty between the United States and the Swiss Confederation, of the 25th of November, 1850, the absolute right to sell said property, and to withdraw and export the proceeds thereof within such time as the laws of Virginia permit.

3. Where there is no statute of limitations applicable to the case, there can be no default arising from lapse of time.

4. Where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive as to the rights that may be claimed under it, and the other liberal, the latter is to be preferred.

5. Every treaty made by the authority of the United States is superior to the Constitution and laws of any individual State. If the law of a State is contrary to a treaty, it is void.

Argued Dec. 24, 1879. Decided Jan. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of Virginia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Wm. L. Royall and Bradley A. Johnson, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. J. G. Field, Atty-Gen. of Virginia, and J. A. Lynham, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

Solomon Hauenstein died in the City of Richmond in the year 1861 or 1862, intestate, unmarried and without children. The precise date of his death is not material. At that time, he owned and held considerable real estate in the City of Richmond. An inquisition of escheat was prosecuted by the escheator for that district. A verdict and judgment were rendered in his favor. When he was about to sell the property, the plaintiffs in error, pursuant to a law of the State, filed their petition, setting forth that they were the heirs at law of the deceased, and praying that the proceeds of the sale of the property should be paid over to them. Testimony was taken to prove their heirship as alleged, but the court was of opinion that, conceding that fact to be established, they could have no valid claim, and dismissed the petition. They removed the case to the Court of Appeals. That court, entertaining the same views as the court below, affirmed the judgment. They thereupon sued out this writ of error.

The plaintiffs in error are all citizens of Switzerland. The deceased was also a citizen of that country, and removed thence to Virginia, where he lived and acquired the property to which this controversy relates, and where he died. The validity of his title is not questioned. There is no proof that he denationalized himself or ceased to be a citizen and subject of Switzerland. His original citizenship is, therefore, to be presumed to have continued. Best on Presumptions, 186. According to the record his domicile, not his citizenship, was changed. The testimony as to the heirship of the plaintiffs in error is entirely satisfactory. There was no controversy on this subject in the argument here. The parties were at one as to all the facts. Their controversy was rested entirely upon legal grounds.

The common law as to aliens, except so far as it has been modified by her Legislature, is the local law of Virginia. 2 Tucker's Bl., App., note c. By that law "Aliens are incapable of taking by descent or inheritance, for they are not allowed to have any inheritable blood in them." 2 Bl. Com., 249. But they may take by grant or devise though not by descent. In other words, they may take by the act of a party, but not by operation of law; and they may convey or devise to another, but such a title is always liable to be divested at the pleasure of the sovereign by office found. In such cases the sovereign, until entitled by office found or its equivalent, cannot pass the title to a grantee. In these respects there is no difference between an alien friend and an alien enemy. Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 603.

The law of nations recognizes the liberty of every government to give to foreigners only such rights, touching immovable property within its territory, as it may see fit to concede. Vattel, B. 2, ch. 8, sec. 114. In our country, this authority is primarily in the States where the property is situated.

The Revised Code of Virginia of 1860, ch. 115, sec. 1, provides that an alien, upon declaring on oath before a court of record that he intends to reside in the State, and having the declaration entered of record, may inherit or purchase and hold real estate there as if he were a citizen.

Section 2 of the same chapter provides that such alien may convey or devise his real estate, and if he shall die intestate that it shall descend to his heirs; and if the alienee, devisee or heir shall be an alien, that he may take and hold, by being in the State and making under oath and having recorded, within five years, a like declaration with that prescribed by the preceding section.

The 6th section declares that when, by a treaty between the United States and any foreign country, a citizen of such country is allowed to sell real estate in Virginia, he may sell and convey within the time prescribed by the treaty; and when by such treaty citizens of the United States are allowed to inherit, hold, sell and convey real estate situate in such country, the citizens and subjects of that country may in like manner inherit, hold, sell and convey real estate lying in Virginia, provided that these several provisions shall apply only to real estate acquired thereafter by the citizens or subjects of such foreign country.

Section 2 has no application to the present case, because the declaration which it permits has not been made by the plaintiffs in error; and section 6 has none, because all the real estate of the deceased was acquired before the date of the Act.

The Revised Code of 1873 has obliterated nearly all the distinctions between aliens and citizens with respect to their rights as to both real and personal property. See, ch. 4, sec. 18, p. 130, and ch. 119, secs. 4 and 10, pp. 917, 918. As it is not claimed that any of these provisions affect the present case, we shall pass them by without further remark.

This brings us to the consideration of the 5th article of the Treaty between the United States and the Swiss Confederation, of the 25th of November, 1850. 11 Stat. at L., 587. It has been earnestly pressed upon our attention, and is the hinge of the controversy between the parties.

The first part of the article is devoted to personal property, and gives the fullest power to the citizens of each country touching such property belonging to them in the other, including the power to dispose of it as the owner may think proper. It then proceeds as follows:

"The foregoing provisions shall be applicable to real estate situate within the States of the American Union, or within the cantons of the Swiss Confederation, in which foreigners shall be entitled to hold or inherit real estate.

But in case real estate situated within the territories of one of the contracting parties should fall to a citizen of the other party, who, on account of his being an alien, could not be permitted to hold such property in the State or in the canton in which it may be situated, there shall be accorded to the said heir, or other successor, such term as the laws of the State or canton will permit to sell such property; he shall be at liberty at all times to withdraw and export the proceeds thereof without difficulty, and without paying to the government any other charges than those which, in a similar case, would be paid by an inhabitant of the country in which the real estate may be situated."

The plaintiffs in error are exactly within the latter category. This is too clear to require discussion. A corresponding provision for like cases is found in article 2, in the previous Treaty of the 18th of May, 1847, between the same parties. 9 Stat. at L., 902. By that article it is declared "That if, by the death of a person owning real property in the territory of one of the high contracting parties, such property should descend, either by the laws of the country or by testamentary disposition, to a citizen of the other party, who, on account of his being an alien, could not be permitted to retain the actual possession of such property, a term of not less than three years shall be allowed him to dispose of such property and collect and withdraw the proceeds thereof, without paying to the government any other charges than those which, in a similar case, would be paid by an inhabitant of the country in which such real property may be situated."

It was clearly the intention of the clause in question in the Treaty of 1850 to secure to the beneficiaries absolutely the right "to sell said property," and "to withdraw and export the proceeds thereof without difficulty." Otherwise the language used is a sham and a mockery. The only qualification is as to the time within which the right must be exercised. It has been earnestly contended, in behalf of the defendant in error, that the State, having fixed no time within which this must be done, it cannot be done at all, and that the entire provision thus becomes a nullity, and is as if it were not.

The terms of the limitation imply clearly that some time, and not that none, was to be allowed. If it had been proposed to those who negotiated the Treaty to express in it the effect of this construction in plain language, can it be doubted that it would have been promptly rejected by both sides as a solecism and contrary to the intent of the parties?

Where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive as to the rights, that may be claimed under it, and the other liberal, the latter is to be preferred. Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet., 242. Such is the settled rule in this court.

It was well remarked in the able opinion of the dissenting Judge in the Court of Appeals, that if this case were to be decided under the Treaty of 1847, there could not be a doubt as to the result. In this we concur, and we think the case is equally clear under the Treaty of 1850, which governs the rights of the parties.

The provision as to time in the earlier Treaty is, in effect, a Statute of Limitation. It applied with procrustean sameness in all the States and in all the cantons. In the latter Treaty this limitation was dropped, and the time was to be such "as the laws of the State or canton will permit." In other words, it was left to the laws of the several States and cantons respectively to fix the limitation in this as in other cases. This was consonant to the policy of our Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 73, which gave to the State Statutes of Limitation the same effect in the local courts of the United States which they had in the courts of the States respectively that enacted them. The procrustean uniformity prescribed by the former Treaty was thus abandoned, and it is fair to presume that the harmonious results in this respect which must necessarily follow, everywhere within the territory covered by the Treaty, both at home and abroad, were the considerations by which those who made the change were animated. If a State or canton had a law which imposed a limitation in this class of cases, nothing more was necessary. If it had not such a law, it was competent to enact one, and until one exists there can be no bar arising from the lapse of time. A party entitled can sue whenever he chooses to do so, and he is clothed with all the rights of any other litigant asserting a claim where there is no statute of limitation applicable to the case. This we understand to be the position of Virginia, and such are the legal consequences necessarily flowing from it.

This construction of the Treaty derives support from the fact that the Treaty provides (art. 6) that any controversy which may arise among the claimants to the succession, "Shall be decided according to the laws and by the judges of the country where the property is situated."

It remains to consider the effect of the Treaty thus construed upon the rights of the parties.

That the laws of the State, irrespective of the Treaty, would put the fund into her coffers, is no objection to the right or the remedy claimed by the plaintiffs in error.

The efficacy of the Treaty is declared and guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. That instrument took effect on the 4th day of March, 1789. In 1796, but a few years later, this court said: "If doubts could exist before the adoption of the present National Government, they must be entirely removed by the 6th article of the Constitution, which provides that 'All treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land,' and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." There can be no limitation on the power of the people of the United States. By their authority the State Constitutions were made, and by their authority the Constitution of the United States was established; and they had the power to change or abolish the State Constitutions or to make them yield to the General Government and to treaties made by their authority. A treaty cannot be the supreme law of the land, that is, of all the United States, if any Act of a State Legislature can stand in its way. If the Constitution of a State, which is the fundamental law of the State and paramount to its Legislature, must give way to a treaty and fall before it, can it be questioned whether the less power, an Act of the State Legislature must not be prostrate? It is the declared will of the People of the United States that every treaty made by the authority of the United States shall be superior to the Constitution and laws of any individual State, and their will alone is to decide. If a law of a State, contrary to a treaty, is not void but voidable only, by a repeal or nullification by a State Legislature, this certain consequence follows, that the will of a small part of the United States may control or defeat the will of the whole." Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall., 199.

It will be observed that the treaty-making clause is retroactive as well as prospective. The Treaty in question, in Ware v. Hylton, was the British Treaty of 1783, which terminated the War of the American Revolution. It was made while the Articles of Confederation subsisted. The Constitution, when adopted, applied alike to treaties "made and to be made."

We have quoted from the opinion of Judge Chase in that case, not because we concur in everything said in the extract, but because it shows the views of a powerful legal mind at that early period, when the debates in the convention which framed the Constitution must have been fresh in the memory of the leading jurists of the country.

In Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259, it was held by this court that a Treaty with France gave to her citizens the right to purchase and hold land in the United States, removed the incapacity of alienage and placed them in precisely the same situation as if they had been citizens of this country. The state law was hardly adverted to, and seems not to have been considered a factor of any importance in this view of the case. The same doctrine was re-affirmed touching this Treaty in Carneal v. Banks, 10 Wheat., 181, and with respect to the British Treaty of 1794, in Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat., 489. A treaty stipulation may be effectual to protect the land of an alien from forfeiture by escheat under the laws of a State. Orr v. Hodgson, 4 Wheat., 453. By the British Treaty of 1794, 8 Stat. at L., 116, "All impediment of alienage was absolutely leveled with the ground despite the laws of the States. It is the direct constitutional question in its fullest conditions. Yet the Supreme Court held that the stipulation was within the constitutional powers of the Union. Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 627; see, Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall., 242." Droit v. D'Aubaine, 8 Ops. Attys-Gen., 417. Mr. Calhoun, after laying down certain exceptions and qualifications which do not affect this case, says: "Within these limits all questions which may arise between us and other powers, be the subject-matter what it may, fall within the treaty-making power and may be adjusted by it." Treat. on the Const. and Gov. of the U. S., 204.

If the National Government has not the power to do what is done by such treaties, it cannot be done at all, for the States are expressly forbidden to "enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." Const., art. 1, sec. 10.

It must always be borne in mind that the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States are as much a part of the law of every State as its own local laws and Constitution. This is a fundamental principle in our system of complex national polity. See, also, Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet., 242; Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. 253; Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616 [78 U. S., XX., 227]; Mr. Pinkney's Speech, 3 Elliot, Const. Deb., 231; People v. Gerke, 5 Cal., 381.

We have no doubt that this Treaty is within the treaty-making power conferred by the Constitution. And it is our duty to give it full effect. We forbear to pursue the topic further. In the able argument before us, it was insisted upon one side, and not denied on the other, that, if the Treaty applies, its efficacy must necessarily be complete. The only point of contention was one of construction. There are, doubtless, limitations of this power as there are of all others arising under such instruments; but this is not the proper occasion to consider the subject. It is not the habit of this court, in dealing with constitutional questions, to go beyond the limits of what is required by the exigencies of the case in hand. What we have said is sufficient for the purposes of this opinion.

During the argument here, our attention was called to the amount that might be taken from the fund with respect to compensation to the escheator and to his counsel in the event of our judgment being against him.

Under the circumstances, he can have no claim as escheator, but he may properly receive the percentage allowed by law for making sales of real property in ordinary cases. It is a settled rule in this court never to allow counsel on either side to be paid out of the fund in dispute.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals of Virginia, so far as it concerns the claim of the plaintiff's in error, is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

CHARLES BOWEN.

Soldiers' Home.

*1. The Revised Statutes of the United States must be treated as a legislative declaration by Congress of the statute law on the subjects which they embrace, on the first day of December, 1873; and when the meaning is plain, the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised to see if Congress erred in that revision.

2. But when it becomes necessary to construe language used in the revision which leaves a substantial doubt of its meaning, the original statutes may be resorted to for ascertaining that meaning.

3. The language used in section 4820 of the revision, admits of no other reasonable construction than that only invalid pensioners who had not contributed to the funds of the Soldiers' Home were bound to surrender to it their pensions while receiving its benefits, and there is no occasion, therefore, to look at the law as it existed before the revision.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., for United States.

Messrs. Matt. H. Carpenter and James Coleman, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of appellee for $264.00, for pension money withheld by the Government.

The action of the government officers in that respect was founded on their opinion that Bowen, who was cared for in the Soldiers' Home, belonged to the class who, by section 4820 of the revision, surrendered their pensions while inmates of the Home. That section enacts that "The fact that one to whom a pension has been granted, for wounds or disability received in the military service, has not contributed to the funds of the Soldiers' Home, shall not preclude him from admission thereto. But all such pensioners shall surrender their pensions to the Soldiers' Home during the time they remain there and voluntarily receive its benefits."

Bowen was the recipient of an invalid pension, but he had contributed to the funds of the Soldiers' Home, and the single question in the case is whether that fact withdraws him from the clause which requires pensioners to surrender their pensions to the Home while inmates of it.

If the qualifying word such is restricted to pensioners described in the sentence which immediately precedes it, then Bowen does not belong to that class, and is not bound to surrender his pension. There is no other class of pensioners described in that section to whom the word such can refer than those who have not contributed to the funds of the Home, and Bowen does not belong to that class. The history of the institution affords good reason for that interpretation. The Soldiers' Home was bought and built and is supported now very largely by money deducted from the monthly pay of the soldiers of the Regular Army. But there is a class of persons who have received wounds in the military service, or incurred ill health while in such service, from whose pay no deduction was made as a contribution to the Home, who received pensions as invalids, and, by virtue of this section, are entitled to be cared for at that place. There is a manifest propriety in a rule which requires of this class that, when supported out of the fund to which they did not contribute, their pensions should go to increase that fund; while those who have been giving of their monthly pay for years should receive its benefits when they come to need them, without giving also the pension which is the bounty of a grateful government. There is no antecedent use of the word "pensioners" in the chapter of which section 4820 is a part, and which embraces the legislation of Congress concerning the Soldiers' Home, to which the word such can refer, but the immediately preceding sentence in the same section. If the construction claimed by counsel for the Government be correct, that word is useless, for it would express the idea with precision by reading, "But all pensioners shall surrender their pensions to the Soldiers' Home during the time they remain therein and voluntarily receive its benefits." The question, therefore, is, whether we shall read the section "all pensioners" or "all such pensioners."

The word, however, as there used, has an appropriate reference to the class of pensioners who have not contributed to the funds of the institution, and no sound canon of construction will authorize us to disregard it, when to do so changes very materially the meaning of the section.

It is urged in opposition to this view that as the law stood prior to the revision, as shown by the Act of March 3, 1859, 11 Stat. at L., 431, all invalid pensioners who accepted the benefit of the Home were bound to surrender to its use their pensions while there; and it must be conceded that such was the law.

But, as the revision embraces that Act as well as all others on the subject, it is, by the express language of the repealing clause, section 5596, no longer in force. Counsel for Government, admitting that it is no longer in force, independently of the section of the revision which we are called on to construe, insist that a resort may be had to the law which was the subject of revision, to interpret anything left in doubt by the language of the revisers.

This principle is, undoubtedly, sound; and, where there is a substantial doubt as to the meaning of the language used in the revision, the old law is a valuable source of information. The Revised Statutes must be treated as the legislative declaration of the statute law on the subjects which they embrace, on the first day of December, 1873. When the meaning is plain, the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised to see if Congress erred in that revision, but may do so when necessary to construe doubtful language used in expressing the meaning of Congress. If, then, in the case before us, the language of section 4820 was fairly susceptible of the construction claimed by the Government, as well as of the opposite one, the argument from the provision of the statute as it stood before the revision would be conclusive. But, for the reasons already given, we are of opinion that the reasonable force of the language used in that section, taken in connection with the whole of the chapter devoted to that subject, and the accepted canons of interpretation, leave room for no other construction than that only invalid pensioners who had not contributed to the funds of the Soldiers' Home were bound to purchase its benefits by surrendering to it their pensions.

As the Court of Claims acted on this construction, its judgment is affirmed.

BRADISH JOHNSON.

Division of opinion—liability of army officer—laws of insurgent States—jurisdiction of State Court.

*1. When on the trial or hearing of a cause the Judges of the Circuit Court are opposed in opinion on a material question of law, the opinion of the presiding Judge is to prevail and be considered the opinion of the court for the time being, but the judgment or decree rendered may be reviewed on writ of error or appeal, without regard to its amount, upon a certificate of the Judges stating the question upon which they differed.

2. An officer of the Army of the United States, whilst in service during the late war in the enemy's country, was not liable to a civil action in the courts of that country for injuries resulting from acts of war ordered by him in his military character; nor could he be called upon to justify or explain his military conduct in a civil tribunal upon any allegation of the injured party that the acts complained of were not justified by the necessities of war. He was responsible only to his own government, and only by its laws, administered by its authority, could he be called to account.

3. When any portion of the enemy's country was in the military occupation of the United States during the late war, the municipal laws were generally continued in force and administered through the ordinary tribunals for the protection and benefit of the inhabitants and others not in the military service, but not for the protection or control of the army or its officers or soldiers.

4. Accordingly, when a brigadier-general in the Army of the United States, during the war, in command of the troops in Louisiana was sued in a district court of that State—continued in existence after the military occupation of the United States and authorized by the commanding general to hear causes between parties—for ordering a military company to seize and carry off as supplies for the army certain personal property of the plaintiff which seizure was alleged by him to have been unauthorized by the necessities of war, or martial law, or by the superiors of the brigadier-general, and judgment by default was rendered against the brigadier-general for the value of the property, it was held, in a suit brought in the Circuit Court of the United States upon the judgment thus rendered, that the state court had no jurisdiction of the alleged cause of action, and that its judgment was void.

Argued Nov. 20, 1879. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

[N ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maine.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., J. H. Drummond and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Bion Bradbury and Durant & Horner, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in the court below, the plaintiff in error here, Neal Dow, was a brigadier-general in the Army of the United States during the late civil war, and in 1862 and 1863 was stationed in Louisiana in command of Forts Jackson and St. Phillip, on the Mississippi River, below New Orleans. These forts surrendered to the forces of the United States in April, 1862. The fleet under Admiral Farragut had passed them and reached New Orleans on the 25th of the month, and soon afterwards the city was occupied by the forces of the United States under General Butler. On taking possession of the city, the general issued a proclamation, bearing date on the 1st of May, 1862, in which, among other things, he declared that until the restoration of the authority of the United States the city would be governed by martial law; that all disorders, disturbances of the peace, and crimes of an aggravated nature, interfering with the forces or laws of the United States, would "be referred to a military court for trial and punishment;" that other misdemeanors would be subject to the municipal authority, if it desired to act; and that civil causes between parties would "be referred to the ordinary tribunals." Under this proclamation, the Sixth District Court of the City and Parish of New Orleans was allowed to continue in existence, the Judge having taken the oath of allegiance to the United States.

In January, 1863, General Dow was sued in that court by Bradish Johnson, the plaintiff in this case. The petition, which is the designation given in the system of procedure in Louisiana to the first pleading in a civil action, set forth that the plaintiff was a citizen of New York, and for several years had been the owner of a plantation and slaves in Louisiana, on the Mississippi River, about forty-three miles from New Orleans; that on the 6th of September, 1862, during his temporary absence, the steamer Avery, in charge of Captain Snell, of Company B, of the Thirteenth Maine Regiment, with a force under his command, had stopped at the plantation and taken from it twenty-five hogheads of sugar; and that said force had plundered the dwelling-house of the plantation and carried off a silver pitcher, half a dozen silver knives, and other table ware, the private property of the plaintiff, the whole property taken amounting in value to $1,611.29; that these acts of Captain Snell and of the officers and soldiers under his command, which the petition characterized as "illegal, wanton, oppressive, and unjustifiable," were perpetrated under a verbal and secret order of Brigadier General Neal Dow, then in the service of the United States, and in command of Forts Jackson and St. Philip, who, by his secret orders, which the petition declared were "unauthorized by his superiors, or by any provision of martial law, or by any requirements of necessity growing out of a state of war," wantonly abused his power, and inflicted upon the plaintiff the wrongs of which he complained; and, therefore, he prayed judgment against the general for the value of the property.

To this suit General Dow, though personally served with citation, made no appearance. He may have thought that during the existence of the war, in a district where insurrection had recently been suppressed, and was only kept from breaking out again by the presence of the armed forces of the United States, he was not called upon by any rule of law to answer to a civil tribunal for his military orders, and satisfy it that they were authorized by his superiors, or by the necessities growing out of a state of war. He may have supposed that for his military conduct he was responsible only to his military superiors and the government whose officer he was.

Be that as it may, or whatever other reason he may have had, he made no response to the petition; he was, therefore, defaulted. The Sixth District Court of the Parish of New Orleans did not seem to consider that it was at all inconsistent with his duty as an officer in the Army of the United States to leave his post at the forts, which guarded the passage of the Mississippi, nearly a hundred miles distant, and attend upon its summons to justify his military orders, or seek counsel and procure evidence for his defense. Nor does it appear to have occurred to the court that, if its jurisdiction over him was recognized, there might spring up such a multitude of suits as to keep the officers of the army stationed in its district so busy that they would have little time to look after the enemy and guard against his attacks. The default of the general being entered, testimony was received showing that the articles mentioned were seized by a military detachment sent by him and removed from the plantation, and that their value amounted to $1,454.81. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiff for that sum, with interest and costs. It bears date April 9, 1863.

Upon this judgment the present action was brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maine. The declaration states the recovery of the judgment mentioned, and makes proof of an authenticated copy. To it the defendant pleaded the general issue, nul tiel record, and three special pleas. The object of the special pleas is to show that the district court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment in question, for the reason that at the time its district was a part of the country in insurrection against the Government of the United States, and making war against it, and was only held in subjection by its armed forces. It is not important to state at length the averments of each of these pleas. It will be sufficient to state the material parts of the second plea and a single averment of the third. The second plea, in substance, sets up that as early as February, 1861, the State of Louisiana adopted an ordinance of secession, by which she attempted to withdraw from the Union and establish an independent government; that from that time until after April 9, 1863, the date of the judgment in question, she was in rebellion against the Government of the United States, making war against its authority; that in consequence the military forces of the United States engaged in suppressing the rebellion took forcible possession of that portion of the State comprising the district of the Sixth District Court of New Orleans, and held military occupation of it until long after April 9, 1863, during which time martial law was established there and enforced; that the defendant was then a brigadier-general in the military service of the United States, duly commissioned by the President, and acting in that State under his orders and the Articles of War; that by the general order of the President of July 22, 1862, military commanders within the States of Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas were directed, in an orderly manner, to seize and use any property, real or personal, which might be necessary or convenient for their several commands as supplies, or for other military purposes; that the defendant, in the performance of his duty as a brigadier-general, was in command of troops of the United States in Louisiana; and that the troops by his order seized from the plaintiff, then a citizen of that State, certain chattels necessary and convenient for supplies for the Army of the United States, and other military purposes; and that for that seizure the action was brought in the Sixth District Court of New Orleans against him, in which the judgment in question was rendered; but that the district court had no jurisdiction of the action or over the defendant at its commencement, or at the rendition of the judgment.

The third plea also avers that, for the purpose of suppressing the rebellion and restoring the national authority, the Government of the United States, through its proper officers, declared and maintained martial law in Louisiana, from May 1, 1862, until long after the 9th of April, 1863, and deprived all the courts in that State, including the Sixth District Court of New Orleans, of all jurisdiction, except such as should be conferred on them by authority of the officer commanding the forces of the United States in that State, and that no jurisdiction over persons in the military service of the United States, for acts performed in the line of their duty, was by such authority conferred upon that court.

To the first plea, that of nul tiel record, the plaintiff replied that there was such a record, of which he prayed inspection; and the record being produced, the court found in his favor. To the special pleas the plaintiff replied that the district court had lawful jurisdiction over parties and causes of action within its district at the time and place mentioned, and to render the judgment in question. To the replication the defendant demurred; and upon the demurrer two questions arose, upon which the Judges in the Circuit Court were opposed in opinion, namely: 1, whether the replication is a good and sufficient reply to the special pleas; and, 2, whether the Sixth District Court, at the time and place mentioned, had jurisdiction of the parties and cause of action, to render the judgment in question.

By statute, when the Judges of the Circuit Court are opposed in opinion upon any question arising on the trial of a cause, the opinion of the presiding justice prevails, and judgment is entered in conformity with it. Here the presiding Justice was of opinion that the replication was a sufficient reply to the special pleas, and that the district court had jurisdiction over the parties and the cause, and to render the judgment in question. Accordingly, the plaintiff had final judgment upon the demurrer, which was entered for $2,659.67 and costs; and the defendant has brought the cause here by writ of error on a certificate of division of opinion.

The important question thus presented for our determination is, whether an officer of the Army of the United States is liable to a civil action in the local tribunals for injuries resulting from acts ordered by him in his military character, whilst in the service of the United States, in the enemy's country, upon an allegation of the injured party that the acts were not justified by the necessities of war.

But before proceeding to its consideration there is a preliminary question of jurisdiction to be disposed of. The Act of Feb. 16, 1875, "To Facilitate the Disposition of Cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for Other Purposes," provided, that whenever by the laws then in force it was required that the matter in dispute should exceed the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of costs, in order that the judgments and decrees of the Circuit Courts of the United States might be re-examined in the Supreme Court, such judgments and decrees thereafter rendered should not be re-examined in the Supreme Court, unless the matter in dispute should exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs. 18 Stat. at L., 315. It is, therefore, contended that a judgment cannot be reviewed by this court, upon a certificate of division of opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court, if the judgment be under $5,000; and the judgment in the present case is under that amount. We do not think, however, that this conclusion is warranted by the language of the Act in question. That Act makes no change in the previous laws, except as to amounts necessary to give the court jurisdiction, when the amount is material. Where before $2,000 was the sum required for that purpose, afterwards $5,000 was the sum. But before that Act questions arising in the progress of a trial could be brought to this court for determination upon a certificate of division of opinion, without reference to the amount in controversy in the case. The original Act of 1802, allowing this mode of procedure, was always held to extend our appellate jurisdiction to material questions of law arising in all cases, criminal as well as civil, without regard to the amount in controversy or the condition of the litigation. Its defect consisted in the delays it created by frequently suspending proceedings in the midst of a trial. To obviate this defect the 1st section of the Act of June, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 196, was passed, requiring the case to proceed, notwithstanding the division, the opinion of the presiding justice to prevail for the time being; and this feature is retained in the Revised Statutes. Secs. 650, 652, 693. The benefit of the certificate can now be had after judgment upon a writ of error or appeal. That is the only material change from the original law. We have no doubt, therefore, of our jurisdiction in this case.

This brings us to the consideration of the main question involved, which we do not regard as at all difficult of solution, when reference is had to the character of the late war. That war, though not between independent nations, but between different portions of the same nation, was accompanied by the general incidents of an international war. It was waged between people occupying different territories, separated from each other by well defined lines. It attained proportions seldom reached in the wars of modern nations. Armies of greater magnitude and more formidable in their equipments than any known in the present century were put into the field by the contending parties. The insurgent States united in an organization known as the Confederate States, by which they acted through a central authority guiding their military movements; and to them belligerent rights were accorded by the Federal Government. This was shown in: the treatment of captives as prisoners of war, the exchange of prisoners, the release of officers on parole, and in numerous arrangements to mitigate as far as possible the inevitable suffering and miseries attending the conflict. The people of the loyal States on the one hand, and the people of the Confederate States on the other, thus became enemies to each other, and were liable to be dealt with as such without reference to their individual opinions or dispositions. Commercial intercourse and correspondence between them were prohibited, as well by express enactments of Congress as by the accepted doctrines of public law. The enforcement of contracts previously made between them was suspended, partnerships were dissolved, and the courts of each belligerent were closed to the citizens of the other, and its territory was to the other, enemy's country. When, therefore, our armies marched into the country which acknowledged the authority of the Confederate Government, that is, into the enemy's country, their officers and soldiers were not subject to its laws, nor amenable to its tribunals for their acts. They were subject only to their own government, and only by its laws, administered by its authority, could they be called to account. As was observed in the recent case of Coleman v. Tenn. [97 U. S., 509., XXIV., 1118], it is well settled that a foreign army, permitted to march through a friendly country, or to be stationed in it by authority of its sovereign or government, is exempt from its civil and criminal jurisdiction. The law was so stated in the celebrated case of The Exchange, reported in the 7th of Cranch, 116. Much more must this exemption prevail where a hostile army invades an enemy's country. There would be something singularly absurd in permitting an officer or soldier of an invading army to be tried by his enemy, whose country it had invaded. The same reasons for his exemption from criminal prosecution apply to civil proceedings. There would be as much incongruity, and as little likelihood of freedom from the irritations of the war, in civil as in criminal proceedings prosecuted during its continuance. In both instances, from the very nature of war, the tribunals of the enemy must be without jurisdiction to sit in judgment upon the military conduct of the officers and soldiers of the invading army. It is difficult to reason upon a proposition so manifest; its correctness is evident upon its bare announcement, and no additional force can be given to it by any amount of statement as to the proper conduct of war. It is manifest that if officers or soldiers of the army could be required to leave their posts and troops, upon the summons of every local tribunal, on pain of a judgment by default against them, which at the termination of hostilities could be enforced by suit in their own States, the efficiency of the army as a hostile force would be utterly destroyed. Nor can it make any difference with what denunciatory epithets the complaining party may characterize their conduct. If such epithets could confer jurisdiction, they would always be supplied in every variety of form. An inhabitant of a bombarded city would have little hesitation in declaring the bombardment unnecessary and cruel. Would it be pretended that he could call the commanding general, who ordered it, before a local tribunal to show its necessity or be mulcted in damages? The owner of supplies seized or property destroyed would have no difficulty, as human nature is constituted, in believing and affirming that the seizure and destruction were wanton and needless. All this is too plain for discussion, and will be readily admitted.

Nor is the position of the invading belligerent affected, or his relation to the local tribunals changed, by his temporary occupation and domination of any portion of the enemy's country. As a necessary consequence of such occupation and domination, the political relations of its people to their former government are, for the time, severed. But for their protection and benefit, and the protection and benefit of others not in the military service, or, in other words, in order that the ordinary pursuits and business of society may not be unnecessarily deranged, the municipal laws, that is, such as affect private rights of persons and property, and provide for the punishment of crime, are generally allowed to continue in force, and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals as they were administered before the occupation. They are considered as continuing, unless suspended or superseded by the occupying belligerent. But their continued enforcement is not for the protection or control of the army, or its officers or soldiers. These remain subject to the laws of war, and are responsible for their conduct only to their own government, and the tribunals by which those laws are administered. If guilty of wanton cruelty to persons, or of unnecessary spoliation of property, or of other acts not authorized by the laws of war, they may be tried and punished by the military tribunals. They are amenable to no other tribunal, except that of public opinion, which, it is to be hoped, will always brand with infamy all who authorize or sanction acts of cruelty and oppression.

If, now, we apply the views thus expressed to the case at bar, there will be no difficulty in disposing of it. The condition of New Orleans and of the district connected with it, at the time of the seizure of the property of the plaintiff and the entry of the judgment against Dow, was not that of a country restored to its nominal relations to the Union, by the fact that they had been captured by our forces, and were held in subjection. A feeling of intense hostility against the Government of the Union prevailed, as before, with the people, which was ready to break out into insurrection upon the appearance of the enemy in force, or upon the withdrawal of our troops. The country was under martial law; and its armed occupation gave no jurisdiction to the civil tribunals over the officers and soldiers of the occupying army. They were not to be harassed and mulcted at the complaint of any person aggrieved by their action. The jurisdiction which the district court was authorized to exercise over civil causes between parties, by the proclamation of General Butler, did not extend to cases against them. The third special plea alleges that the court was deprived by the General Government of all jurisdiction except such as was conferred by the commanding general, and that no jurisdiction over persons in the military service for acts performed in the line of their duty was ever thus conferred upon it. It was not for their control in any way, or the settlement of complaints against them, that the court was allowed to continue in existence. It was, as already stated, for the protection and benefit of the inhabitants of the conquered country and others there not engaged in the military service.

If private property there was taken by an officer or a soldier of the occupying army, acting in his military character, when, by the laws of war, or the proclamation of the commanding general, it should have been exempt from seizure, the owner could have complained to that commander, who might have ordered restitution, or sent the offending party before a military tribunal, as circumstances might have required, or he could have had recourse to the government for redress. But there could be no doubt of the right of the army to appropriate any property there, although belonging to private individuals, which was necessary for its support or convenient for its use. This was a belligerent right, which was not extinguished by the occupation of the country, although the necessity for its exercise was thereby lessened. However exempt from seizure on other grounds private property there may have been, it was always subject to be appropriated, when required by the necessities or convenience of the army, though the owner of property taken in such case may have had a just claim against the government for indemnity.

The case of Elphinstone v. Bedreechund is an authority, if any were needed, that a municipal court has no jurisdiction to adjudge upon the validity of a hostile seizure of property; that is, a seizure made in the exercise of a belligerent right. There it appeared that a city of India had been captured by the British forces and a provisional government established, which subsequently held undisturbed possession of the place. Several months after its occupation, the members of the provisional government seized the private property of a native, under the belief that it was public property intrusted to his care by the hostile sovereign. The native had been refused the benefit of the articles of capitulation of a fortress, of which he was Governor, but had been permitted to reside under military surveillance in his own house in the city, where the seizure was made. At the time there were no hostilities in the immediate neighborhood, and the civil courts were sitting for the administration of justice; but the war was not at an end throughout the country, and there was a feeling of great hostility on the part of the people of the place, which was only prevented from breaking out into insurrection by the presence of an armed force. In these respects the position of the place was similar to that of New Orleans and the adjacent country under the command of General Butler. The property seized consisted of gold coin, jewels and shawls; and the owner having died, an action for their value was brought by his executor against the members of the provisional government who ordered the seizure, and judgment was rendered against them in the Supreme Court of Bombay. That court appeared to be controlled in its decision by the fact that for some months before the seizure the city had been in the undisturbed possession of the provisional government, and that civil courts, under its authority, were sitting there for the administration of justice. But on appeal to the Privy Council the judgment was reversed. "We think," said Lord Tenterden, speaking for the Council, "the proper character of the transaction was that of a hostile seizure made, if not flagrante, yet nondum cessante bello, regard being had both to the time, the place, and the person; and, consequently, that the municipal court had no jurisdiction to adjudge upon the subject, but that, if anything was done amiss, recourse could only be had to the government for redress. 1 Knapp, 316. Here, the special pleas allege that the articles of property taken by the military detachment under General Dow were seized by his order, as necessary and convenient supplies for the occupying army. It was a hostile seizure, as much so as that of the property in the case cited, being made, like that one, in the exercise of a belligerent right, upon the propriety or necessity of which the municipal court had no authority to adjudge.

This doctrine of non-liability to the tribunals of the invaded country for acts of warfare is as applicable to members of the Confederate Army, when in Pennsylvania, as to members of the National Army when in the insurgent States. The officers or soldiers of neither army could be called to account civilly or criminally in those tribunals for such acts, whether those acts resulted in the destruction of property or the destruction of life; nor could they be required by those tribunals to explain or justify their conduct upon any averment of the injured party that the acts complained of were unauthorized by the necessities of war. It follows that, in our judgment, the District Court of New Orleans was without jurisdiction to render the judgment in question, and the special pleas in this case constituted a perfect answer to the declaration. See, Coleman v. Tenn. [supra]; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S., 594 [XXIV., 1018]; also, LeCaux v. Eden, 2 Doug., 594; Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S., 187 [XXIII., 650], and Coolidge v. Guthrie, 8 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.), 22.

We fully agree with the presiding Justice of the Circuit Court in the doctrine that the military should always be kept in subjection to the laws of the country to which it belongs, and that he is no friend to the Republic who advocates the contrary. The established principle of every free People is, that the law shall alone govern; and to it the military must always yield. We do not controvert the doctrine of Mitchell v. Harmony, [13 How., 115]; on the contrary, we approve it. But it has no application to the case at bar. The trading for which the seizure was there made had been permitted by the Executive Department of our Government. The question here is: what is the law which governs an army invading an enemy's country? It is not the civil law of the invaded country; it is not the civil law of the conquering country; it is military law, the law of war, and its supremacy for the protection of the officers and soldiers of the army, when in service in the field in the enemy's country, is as essential to the efficiency of the army as the supremacy of the civil law at home and, in time of peace, is essential to the preservation of liberty.

Our decision upon the questions certified to us, is, that the replication is not a good and sufficient reply to the special pleas; and that the Sixth District Court of New Orleans, at the time and place mentioned, had not jurisdiction of the parties and cause of action to render the judgment in question. The judgment of the Circuit Court must, therefore, be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to that court to enter final judgment for the defendant on the demurrer to the replications; and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Clifford, dissenting:

Officers and soldiers in the military service are not amenable, in time of war, to process from the civil tribunals for any act done in the performance of their duties; but if the injurious act done to person or property was wholly outside of the duty of the actor, and was willfully and wantonly inflicted, for the mere purpose of oppression or private gain, the party by whom or by whose orders it was committed may be answerable in the ordinary courts of justice, except when the civil tribunals are silenced by the exigencies of military rule or martial law. Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1, 46.

Private property, in case of extreme necessity, in time of war or of immediate and impending public danger, may be impressed into the public service, or may be seized and appropriated to the public use, or may even be destroyed without the consent of the owner and without antecedent compensation. Extreme cases of the kind may, doubtless, arise, as where the property taken is imperatively necessary in time of war to construct defenses for the preservation of a military post at the moment of an impending attack by the enemy, or to supply food or clothing to a suffering or famishing army, destitute of such necessities and without other means of such supplies.

Such emergencies in the public service have and may hereafter occur in time of war, and in such cases no doubt is entertained that the power of the government is ample to supply for the moment the public wants in that way to the extent of the immediate public exigency; but the public danger must be imminent and impending, and the emergency in the public service must be extreme and imperative and such as will not admit of delay or a resort to any other source of supply.

Exigencies of the kind do arise in time of war or impending public danger; but it is the emergency only that gives the right, and it is clear that the emergency must be shown to exist before the taking can be justified. U. S. v. Russell, 13 Wall., 623 [80 U. S., XX., 474].

Public convenience authorizes the exercise of the right of eminent domain, subject to the condition that due provision is made for compensation; and public necessity, in time of war or impending public danger, may authorize the taking of private property without any such provision, to supply for the moment the public wants, to the extent of the public exigency, which cannot be supplied in any other way. 2 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 338.

Nothing but the emergency will warrant the taking; and it is settled law in this court that the officer who makes the seizure cannot justify his trespass merely by showing the orders of his superior, the rule being that an order to commit a trespass can afford no justification to the person by whom it is executed. Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.

Support to all the principles before enunciated is found in the very able opinion of the court, given by Chief Justice Taney, in which he fully admits that private property may be taken by a military commander to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy, and that it may also be taken, in certain extreme cases, for public use without just compensation. Reasonable doubt upon that subject cannot be entertained; but he proceeds to show, what is equally plain, that it cannot be done in the first case unless it appears that the danger was immediate and impending, nor in the second, unless it appeared that the necessity and urgency were such as would not admit of delay. Farm-er v. Lewis, 1 Bush, 66.

Where a trader during war is engaged in trading with a portion of the enemy country that has been reduced to subjection, and his trading there is permitted and encouraged by the invading army, his goods cannot be seized on the ground that he is engaged in an unlawful trade with the enemy. In such a case, the officer seizing the property becomes liable for the abuse of his authority, and the owner of the goods is entitled to recover in trespass for the damage suffered. Harmony v. Mitchell, 1 Blatchf., 549.

Judgment was rendered, April 9, 1863, against the defendant in the Sixth District Court of New Orleans, in an action of trespass for the unlawful taking and conversion of the goods and chattels of the plaintiff described in the schedule annexed to the writ. Payment of the judgment being refused, the plaintiff brought an action of debt on the same against the defendant in the Circuit Court for the Maine District, where the defendant resides. Service was made, and the defendant appeared and pleaded nul tiel record and three special pleas, as follows: (1) That the court which rendered the judgment had no jurisdiction of the case, for the reason that the military forces of the United States, prior to the rendition of the judgment, took forcible possession of New Orleans, and held such military possession of the locality. (2) That the said court had no jurisdiction of the case, for the reason that he, as a military commander, seized the goods and chattels mentioned as supplies for the army. (3) That the said court had no jurisdiction of the case, for the reason that he was a military officer, and that, in taking the goods and chattels, he acted in obedience to the orders of his superior officers.

These pleas, containing as they did new special matters, properly concluded with a verification, which made it necessary for the replication, if in the general form as now allowed, to tender an issue to the country. Instead of adding the similiter, the defendant filed a general demurrer to the replication; and the objection now is, that the replication is defective in form, it being too general to amount to a traverse of the new matters set forth in the special pleas.

Two answers to that may be given: (1) That the form accords with that given by the most approved text-writers upon the subject. Steph. Pl., 9th Am. ed., 60; 1 Chit. Pl., 16th ed., 606. (2) That the demurrer should have been special, in order to avail the defendant. 1 Chit. Pl., 16th ed., 694; Steph. Pl., 9th ed., 40.

Hearing was had, and the court, both Judges concurring, found in favor of the plaintiff, that there is such a record as that set forth and described in the declaration.

Two questions also arose under the demurrer of the defendant to the replication of the plaintiff filed to the three special pleas. Those questions are as follows: (1) Whether the replication is a good and sufficient reply to the three special pleas of the defendant. (2) Whether said Sixth District Court at the time and place aforesaid had jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action alleged in the declaration.

Certificates of division of opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court under a former Act gave the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the questions certified, but the universal rule was that the Supreme Court would only consider the single question or questions certified. Ogle v. Lee, 2 Cranch, 33.

Nothing could come before the court under such certificate except the single question or questions certified here by the Circuit Judges, in respect to which they were divided in opinion. Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 430-434 [67 U. S., XVII., 319-322]; R. S., sec. 652.

Jurisdiction acquired in that mode of proceeding was limited to the points certified, and could not be extended by a certificate of division to anything except what would be open to revision here under a writ of error or appeal. Davis v. Braden, 10 Pet., 286; Packer v. Nixon, 10 Pet., 408; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat., 1-50.

Both of those questions were certified at the time and were duly entered of record; and the Act of Congress provides, that whenever such a difference occurs, the opinion of the presiding justice shall prevail and be considered the opinion of the court for the time being. Pursuant to that statutory regulation, the presiding Justice proceeded to state that he was of the opinion: (1) That the replication of the plaintiff is a good and sufficient reply to the three special pleas pleaded by the defendant. (2) That the said Sixth District Court of New Orleans did, at the time and place aforesaid, have jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action to render the judgment set forth and described in the declaration.

Having sustained the replication as a sufficient reply to the three special pleas, he overruled the demurrer to the replication and adjudged the special pleas bad, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the amount of the prior judgment and lawful interest.

Errors assigned in this court are as follows: (1) That the court erred in finding that there is such a record as that mentioned in the declaration. (2) That the court erred in ruling that the replication is a good and sufficient reply to the three special pleas. (3) That the court erred in ruling that the Sixth District Court had jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action. (4) That the court erred in the rendition of the judgment.

Before discussing those matters, it becomes necessary to determine the preliminary question whether this court, under existing laws, has jurisdiction to re-examine the judgment of the circuit court in this case. Prior to the Act of the 16th of February, 1875, all judgments or decrees of the circuit courts in civil actions at common law or suits in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeded the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of costs, might be re-examined in the Supreme Court by a writ of error or appeal. 1 Stat. at L., 84; 2 Stat. at L., 244; 17 Stat. at L., 196.

Alterations of great moment in the mode of removing certain final judgments and decrees from the circuit court to the Supreme Court had been made before the passage of that Act; but the Congress on that day enacted that "Such judgments and decrees hereafter rendered shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court, unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs." 18 Stat. at L., 316.

Beyond all doubt, the exclusion of jurisdiction to the Supreme Court is universal in respect to all judgments and decrees of the circuit court where the matter in dispute does not exceed the sum or value of $5,000. Words more fitting to express such an intent, or more effectual to that end, cannot be found in our language, and it is equally clear that they will admit of no exception unless they are emasculated of their universal meaning; and yet it is suggested that the final judgment or decree of a circuit court may still, if the record contains a certificate of the Judges of the Circuit Court that they were opposed in opinion upon any point in the case, be re-examined in this court even though the matter barely exceeds the sum or value of $500, exclusive of costs, which is the smallest amount cognizable in the circuit court in civil actions at common law or in suits in equity.

When our judicial system was organized, jurisdiction was given to the circuit courts, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State. More than ninety years have elapsed since that provision was enacted, and yet no alteration has been made in it as to the amount required to give the circuit courts jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity. 1 Stat. at L., 78; 18 Stat. at L., 470; R. S., sec. 629.

Judges of the Circuit Court are required to certify, at the request of either party, or their counsel, any division of opinion occurring between them on the trial or hearing of such a suit, and the provision is that such certificate shall be entered of record. R. S., sec. 652.

Beyond doubt, either party may require such a certificate to be entered if any such division of opinion occurred in any civil action or suit in equity cognizable in the circuit court, no matter if the amount in controversy only exceeds by one cent, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500. Provision is made that in admiralty causes the circuit court shall find and state the facts and conclusions of law separately, but the requirement does not extend to suits in equity; from which it follows that if the opinion just read is correct, the Supreme Court must re-examine the facts as well as the law in every such final decree brought here, even though the amount in dispute barely exceeds $500, merely because the record contains such a certificate of division of opinion, in spite of the express enactment of Congress that such final decrees shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $5,000.

Certificates of the kind, both in civil and criminal cases, when made before judgment, as directed by the original Act, were certified under the seal of the circuit court to the Supreme Court, and their effect was to suspend all proceedings in the cause which would prejudice the merits, until the mandate of the Supreme Court went down and was filed. 2 Stat. at L., 159.

More points were sent up under the 6th section of that Act, nor was the proceeding any bar in a civil suit to a writ of error or appeal, subsequent to the final judgment or decree, to remove the whole case into the Supreme Court for re-examination. Matters of difference of opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court in criminal cases are still required to be certified here before judgment or sentence in that mode of procedure, without any change whatever. Every day's experience proves that proposition; but regulations of a very different character have been provided where the difference of opinion occurs in civil actions or suits in equity. 17 Stat. at L., 196; R. S., secs. 650-652.

Whenever such a difference of opinion shall occur between the Judges of the Circuit Court in a civil action or suit in equity, the provision is that the opinion of the Circuit Justice or Circuit Judge shall prevail, and be considered the opinion of the court for the time being; but when the final judgment or decree in such action or suit shall be entered, it is made the duty of the Judges, in case such a difference of opinion occurred in the trial or hearing, to make the required certificate of the same, in which event it is provided that either party may remove such final judgment or decree into the Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal.

Like the original Act, the Revised Statutes require that the points in difference shall be stated by the judges and certified, and that such certificate shall be entered of record without any requirement, as in the original Act, that it shall be certified under the seal of the circuit court to the Supreme Court at their next session. Evidently no such proceeding is required, as it is not contemplated that the certificate of division will ever come before the Supreme Court for re-examination unless the final judgment or decree is removed here by writ of error or appeal. R. S., sec. 652.

Existing laws require that final judgments in civil actions shall precede the writ of error or appeal, to remove the cause into this court for re-examination, no matter whether the questions for revision are raised in the record by a bill of exceptions, a certificate of division of opinion, an agreed statement of facts, or by demurrer, or even by a special finding of the court, or by a special verdict. Jurisdictional limitation, prior to the passage of the Act of the 16th of February, 1875, was that the matter in dispute must exceed the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of costs; but that Act raised the minimum of jurisdiction from $2,000 to $5,000, as already explained, in all civil actions, the same section providing that the certificate of division of opinion in criminal cases shall be made as before, and be certified under the seal of the circuit court to the Supreme Court. 18 Stat. at L., 316; R. S., sec. 650.

Circuit court judgments or decrees in civil actions or suits in equity, in order that they may be re-examinable in the Supreme Court must be final, and the matter in dispute must exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs; and they must be removed into the Supreme Court by writ of error or appeal, and they cannot be removed here in any other way which will give this court jurisdiction to reverse or affirm the judgment or decree. R. S., sec. 691; 18 Stat. at L., 316.

Power to re-examine any judgment or decree of the circuit court is not given to the Supreme Court unless the case comes within that category, the Act of Congress now in force provides that such judgments and decrees, entered after the Act went into operation "Shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs."

Prior to the Act of June 1, 1872, the certificate of division of opinion gave the Supreme Court jurisdiction to decide the questions in difference without regard to the amount in dispute, as it applied both to civil and criminal cases, and in both had the effect to suspend action prejudicial to the merits until the decision of the Supreme Court was received. It preceded final judgment or decree, and was certified to the Supreme Court under the seal of the circuit court. Such certificates in criminal cases are still required to be certified in that way, and still give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the points certified, wholly irrespective of the merits or of any other question in the case. 17 Stat. at L., 196.

Since the passage of that Act, the proceeding in civil cases and suits in equity is altogether different, the office of the certificate of division of opinion, like that of a bill of exceptions, being merely to raise the questions in the record, the requirement that it shall be certified under the seal of the circuit court to the Supreme Court at its next session being entirely omitted in the new regulation.

Bills of exception are required to place on the record what rested in parol, and they are allowed in the circuit court, irrespective of the amount in dispute; but a writ of error will not lie to remove the cause into the Supreme Court unless the amount in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs. Where the amount in dispute is less than that amount, the review takes place on a motion for new trial in the circuit court.

Differences of opinion between the Circuit Judges may be certified by them when they sit together, irrespective of the amount, and the effect is that the certificate becomes part of the record; and if the amount in dispute is sufficient to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction, the cause may be removed here by writ of error or appeal for re-examination; but if the amount in dispute is insufficient for that purpose, then the only remedy for the losing party is a motion for new trial in the circuit court.

Other modes for raising questions for review in appellate courts are well known: as, for example, it may be done by an agreed statement of facts, or by demurrer to the declaration or a material pleading, or by a special finding of the court, or by a special verdict, in all of which cases the final judgment or decree may be removed into the Supreme Court by writ of error or appeal, if the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs; but if the amount in dispute does not exceed that amount, the Act of Congress is peremptory that it shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court.

Under the original Act the Judges of the Circuit Court were required to make the certificate and cause it to be certified to the Supreme Court before final judgment was rendered, but under the new Act the final judgment in civil cases is required to precede the certificate; nor is there any requirement that the difference of opinion shall ever be certified to the Supreme Court under the seal of the circuit court. 17 Stat. at L., 196.

None of these propositions, it is believed, can be successfully controverted; and, if not, it follows to a demonstration that this court has no jurisdiction of the case to reverse or affirm the decree of the circuit court, it affirming that the judgment of the circuit court was only for the sum of $2,650.67. It seems absurd to hold that jurisdiction exists in such a case, when the Act of Congress provides that judgments and decrees of the circuit courts shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs.

Suppose I am wrong in this; then it becomes necessary to re-examine the question whether the Sixth District Court of New Orleans had jurisdiction of the cause of action and of the parties at the time the judgment described in the declaration was rendered.

It appears that the plaintiff, who was a loyal citizen of New York, owned a valuable plantation in the Parish of Plaquemines, situated on the right bank of the Mississippi River, about forty miles from New Orleans, and that the defendant, at the time of the service of the writ and of the rendition of the judgment, was a military officer in the service of the United States, stationed at the Parapet, near the city; that on the 5th of September, 1862, a small military detachment, acting under the verbal and secret orders of the defendant, landed at the plantation of the plaintiff, and wrongfully, as alleged, took therefrom and from his dwelling-house there situated the goods and chattels mentioned in the schedule annexed to the petition for redress, of the value of $1,611.29. Redress being refused, the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover the value of the property wrongfully seized and detained. Personal service having been made, and the defendant having neglected and refused to appear, he was defaulted. Testimony was taken as to the circumstances of the seizure and as to the value of the property converted; and the court, after due consideration, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,454.81. Execution issued, and the sheriff returned that the defendant could not be found. Satisfaction of the execution being refused, the plaintiff, on the 30th of March, 1866, instituted the present action of debt to recover the amount of that judgment.

Apart from the technical defenses already considered, the only defense is, that the Sixth District Court of New Orleans had no jurisdiction of the parties or of the cause of action to render this judgment. Attempt is made to maintain that defense solely upon the ground that, inasmuch as the defendant was a military officer in the service of the United States, he was not amenable to civil process from a court of justice for the taking of the goods and chattels of the plaintiff at the time and place when and where the same were seized and carried away.

Support to that defense is attempted to be drawn from the fact that the State, on the 26th of January, 1861, passed an ordinance of secession and joined the rebellion; that war between the Confederacy and the United States ensued; and that the war, at the time the action was commenced and the judgment rendered, was still flagrant and not ended. Military officers, it is contended, are not subject to civil process under such circumstances, even though the acts which are the subject of complaint constitute an abuse of power and were perpetrated without authority.

War undoubtedly followed secession, and it is equally true that, prior to May 1, 1862, New Orleans was occupied by the Confederate forces. Rebel dominion in the city, from the passage of the secession ordinance to the date last mentioned, was complete. Vice-Admiral Farragut reached New Orleans on the 25th of April and, as flag-officer, he demanded the surrender of the city; but the surrender was not made. Transports conveying the troops under the command of Major-General Butler arrived on the first day of May. Certain proceedings followed, which are fully detailed in a prior decision. Suffice it to say, that this court decided in that case that the military occupation of the city by the Union forces became complete May 1, which is the date of the proclamation published by General Butler. The Venice, 2 Wall., 258-274 [69 U. S., XVII., 866]. There was no hostile demonstration then nor any subsequent disturbance, and this court unanimously determined that all the rights and obligations resulting from such occupation and from the terms of the proclamation might properly be regarded as existing from that date.

Two clauses of the proclamation may be referred to as evidencing the intent and public import of the document: (1.) That "All the rights of property of whatever kind will be held inviolate, subject only to the laws of the United States." (2.) That "All foreigners who have not made oath of allegiance" to the Confederacy "will be protected in their persons and property as heretofore."

Wherever the national forces were successful in re-establishing the national authority, the rights of persons and of property were immediately respected and enforced. Persons of intelligence everywhere will see that that proclamation was framed in the same spirit and with the same intent as that which actuated Congress in passing the first Act to suppress insurrection. 12 Stat. at L., 256, sec. 5.

Authority was given to the President by that Act, under certain conditions, to declare by proclamation that the inhabitants of a State or part of a State were in a state of insurrection; and the provision was, that when that was done all commercial intercourse between such insurrectionary district and the rest of the United States should cease and be unlawful so long as such condition of hostility should continue. The Reform, 3 Wall., 628 [70 U. S., XVIII., 109].

Certain States and parts of States were declared to be in insurrection in the Proclamation made by the President, August, 16, 1861, and in that document he expressly exempted from that condition all districts or parts of districts which might from time to time be occupied and controlled by the forces of the United States engaged in the dispersion of the insurgents. Intercourse for commercial purposes was not prohibited with such places or districts while so occupied and controlled. They were not regarded as in actual insurrection, or their inhabitants as subject to treatment as enemies. 12 Stat. at L., 1262.

Commercial intercourse was never wholly interdited, and the regulations were framed in the same spirit of forbearance towards the places and districts where the national authority was re-established. "As far as possible," said Chief Justice Chase, "the people of such parts of the insurgent States as came under the national occupation and control were treated as if their relations to the National Government had never been interrupted." The Venice [supra].

Sufficient appears in the Code of Practice of the State to support the proposition that the District Courts of Louisiana were, before the rebellion, courts of general jurisdiction, as it provides that their jurisdiction extends over all civil causes where the amount in dispute exceeds $50; and this court, in construing that provision, held that its legal import was to render those tribunals courts of general jurisdiction in all civil causes not embraced within the exception. Fourniquet v. Perkins, 7 How., 160, 169; White v. Cannon, 6 Wall., 443-450 [73 U. S., XVIII., 923-5].

Judgment in this case was rendered in the Sixth District Court of New Orleans, which was established before the rebellion and had jurisdiction in all civil causes. R. S. (La.), tit. Judiciary, sec. 72.

Enough appears, to show that the Sixth District Court was created by statute more than fifteen years before the insurrection, and that it was in the full exercise of its jurisdiction when the secession ordinance was passed; that it was never abolished or suspended by any military or other order or power; that it was kept open subsequent to the proclamation of General Butler, the judge and clerk being in attendance from day to day, as business demanded. "Civil causes between party and party," said the proclamation, "will be referred to the ordinary tribunals." After General Shepley was appointed Military Governor, in August following, the Sixth District Court held its regular sessions at the time and place fixed by the state statute. Early after the capture of the city the judge took the oath of allegiance and resumed the proper functions of his office, with the recognition and approbation of the military authorities. From the moment the Judge of the Sixth District Court took the oath of allegiance, as required by the commanding general, June 14, 1862, the court continued in the exercise of all its powers, the same as before the rebellion, and was the only court that did, until General Shepley, in the fall of that year, appointed Judges in the First, Second and Third Judicial Districts.

Military conquerors of foreign States in time of war may, doubtless, displace the courts of the conquered country, and may establish civil tribunals in their place for administering justice; and in such cases it is, unquestionably, true that the jurisdiction of suits of every description is transferred to the new tribunals. U. S. v. Rice, 4 Wheat., 246; Cross v. Harrison, 16 How., 164. But that concession proves nothing in this case, as it is universally conceded that the mere occupancy of the territory does not necessarily displace the local tribunals of justice. Pepin v. Lachenmeyer, 45 N. Y., 27-33. They were not displaced in this case, but suffered to continue in the exercise of their judicial powers, with the recognition and approbation of the military commander.

See 10 OTTO.

Important differences exist between a foreign war waged for conquest and a civil war waged to restore insurrectionary districts to their allegiance to the rightful sovereign. Nor could the commander of the department, after the date of the proclamation of General Butler, seize private property as booty of war, or make any order confiscating it. Planters' Bk. v. Union Bk., 16 Wall., 483 [83 U. S., XXI., 473].

On the 17th of August in the same year, General Butler, as the commander of the department, issued an order requiring the banks of the city to pay over to the Chief Quartermaster of the Army all money in their possession belonging to hostile corporations or hostile official persons. Payments were made by the defendant bank, pursuant to that order, of a large amount deposited by the plaintiff bank. Re-imbursement having been refused, the plaintiff bank brought suit to recover the amount, and judgment was ultimately rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $24,713. Exceptions were filed by the defendant, and the cause was removed into this court, where the judgment was affirmed.

Two points were ruled by this court: (1) That the order was one which the commanding general had no authority to make, and that it was wholly invalid. (2) That payment to the chief quartermaster did not satisfy the debt.

In disposing of the case, Mr. Justice Strong remarked, that the City of New Orleans was then in the quiet possession of the United States forces; that it had been captured fifteen months before that time, and that undisturbed possession had been maintained ever after its capture; that the order was not an attempt to seize the property flagrante bello, nor was it a seizure for the immediate use of the army; that it was an attempt to confiscate private property, which, though it may be subjected to confiscation by legislative authority is according to the modern law of nations, exempt from capture as booty of war.

Concede all that; and still the defendant rests his defense on the proposition of his third special plea, that the Sixth District Court had no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, because he was a military officer in the Army of the United States, acting under the orders of his superiors. But this is not the case of a foreign war in which the courts of the enemy assumed jurisdiction over an officer of the invading army. Nothing of the kind is pretended, and if it were, it could not be supported for a moment. Instead of that, the United States, throughout the active hostilities, were engaged in putting down the insurrection and in suppressing the rebellion, with a view to the re-establishment and complete restoration of the national authority. Throughout the whole period of the civil war the government, maintained that the Ordinances of Secession were void, and that they did not and could not have the effect to take a State out of the Union or to annul its Constitution or laws.

War followed insurrection, but all know that as soon as the military forces of the United States wrested any portion of the national territory from the rebellious authorities, and acquired full and complete control of it, the normal condition of affairs became restored, as indicated in the first Act of Congress upon the subject, and the Proclamation of the President, which soon followed the passage of that Act.

Towns, provinces and territories, says Halleck, which are retaken from the conqueror during the war, or which are restored to their former sovereign by the Treaty of Peace, are entitled to the right of postliminy; and the original sovereign owner, on recovering his dominion over them, whether by force of arms or by treaty, is bound to restore them to their former state. In other words, he acquires no new right over them, either by the act of recapture or of restoration. * * * He rules not by any newly acquired title which relates back to any former period, but by his antecedent title, which, in contemplation of law, has never been divested. Halleck, Int. L., 871.

When a town, reduced by the enemy's arms, is retaken by those of her own sovereign, says Vattel, she is restored to her former condition, and re-instated in all her rights. Vattel, ed. by Chit., 395.

Pressing emergency in time of war may authorize the seizure of private property before providing for compensation, but, to justify the taking without the consent of the owner, the necessity must be apparent, leaving no available alternative.

Four months before the marauding expedition, acting under the verbal and secret orders of the defendant, entered the plantation and dwelling house of the plaintiff, during his temporary absence, and seized the goods and chattels mentioned, the City of New Orleans had fallen into the undisturbed possession of the Union forces under the command of General Butler, who never authorized the defendant to perpetrate the acts of plunder charged in the declaration. Evidence of necessity in this case is wholly wanting, without which the acts charged in the declaration cannot be justified. Sellards v. Zomes, 5 Bush, 90.

Beyond doubt, he might have appealed to the commanding general for an order that the suit should be discontinued; but he did not, and it may be that his reason for not doing so was that he knew if he did a court of inquiry would be ordered. Public order was fully restored in the city, and the courts were open, and every person was in the full enjoyment of the protection promised in the military proclamation issued four months before, when the Union forces entered the city. Process, in due form of law, was issued, and personal service having been made, the defendant, if he had any defense, was bound to appear and plead it.

Actual insurrection in that locality had ceased, and the military control of the Union forces was substantial, complete and permanent; and, being such, it drew after it the full measure of protection to persons and property consistent with the fact that the war outside and in other localities had not terminated. Rebel authority was replaced by the national authority, and all the inhabitants were in the enjoyment of the protection and rights promised in the military proclamation then in force.

Hostilities having ceased in that locality, the defendant was not engaged in any active military operations. His military duties did not prevent his attendance at the court to make his defense. No evidence is exhibited in the pleadings showing any condition of affairs, military or civil, excusing the defendant from refusing to obey a judicial summons; and if the court had no jurisdiction, he should have appeared and so pleaded. Having neglected to do that at the time, he cannot now attack the judgment collaterally in a suit brought upon it in another jurisdiction. When the jurisdiction has attached, the judgment is conclusive for all purposes and is not open to inquiry upon the merits; and if conclusive in the State where it was pronounced, it is equally conclusive everywhere in the courts of the United States. 2 Story, Const., sec. 1813; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall., 290, 302 [72 U. S., XVIII., 475, 478]; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch, 438.

It is not even suggested that the military authorities ever interfered to prevent the suit, and, as matter of fact, it is known that no such interference ever took place. Instead of that, the clear inference is that the defendant preferred to submit to the jurisdiction of the court where the suit was brought, rather than subject himself to a military court of inquiry; and, if so, it was his own choice, and he cannot now be permitted to attack the judgment which was rendered in consequence of his own negligence to appear and plead his defense.

Confirmation of the proposition that it was the duty of the defendant to appear and plead his defense, is derived from the Act of Congress passed for the protection of those prosecuted for any search, seizure, arrest or imprisonment made, done or committed, or acts omitted to be done under and by virtue of any order of the President or under his authority, or under color of any law of Congress, the provision being that "Such defense may be made by special plea or under the general issue, in the insurrectionary districts in which the national authority had been restored by undisturbed possession and control." 12 Stat. at L., 756, sec. 4.

By the 5th section of the same Act, it is provided that all civil suits and criminal prosecutions of the character described in the 4th section, in which final judgment may be rendered in the circuit court, may be carried by writ of error to the Supreme Court, whatever may be the amount of the judgment. At the date of the rendition of the judgment in question, the United States had undisturbed possession and control of the territory embraced within the jurisdiction of the Sixth District Court, which was fully recognized by the Military Governor of the State as a tribunal having full jurisdiction of all civil causes arising within the judicial district. If the defendant could be justified, under the 4th section of that Act, for the alleged trespass charged against him, the same section made it his duty to appear and answer to the judicial summons, and make his defense by plea.

Reported cases in great numbers and of high authority, support the proposition that a military officer, except when war is flagrant, or when the courts are silenced by the exigencies of military rule or martial law, is subject to judicial process for the abuse of his authority or for wrongful acts done outside of his military jurisdiction. Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Cowp., 161, 175.

Trespass for false imprisonment was brought in that case against the Governor of Minorca, charging that he, the Governor, had beat and wounded the defendant, and imprisoned him for the space of ten months, without reasonable or probable cause. Plea, the general issue. Trial in the Common Pleas, and verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of £3,000. Exceptions were filed by the defendant, and he sued out a writ of error and removed the cause into the King's Bench, where Lord Mansfield gave the opinion of the court, all the other Judges of the court concurring. He held that trespass would lie for an abuse of power, and he supported the conclusion of the court by stating a case that occurred in early time, while he was at the bar, in which a captain in a train of artillery sued the Military Governor of Gibraltar, who had confirmed the sentence of a court-martial by which the plaintiff had been tried and sentenced to be whipped. His Lordship brought the action, and he says that the Governor was ably defended, and he added that nobody ever thought that the action would not lie.

Two other cases were mentioned by that great magistrate, which were tried before him in the circuit, one of which was a suit against a military captain, and the other was a suit against an admiral in the navy, both of which resulted in favor of the plaintiff. Errors were assigned in the principal case, and the report shows that the questions were elaborately argued, and that the judgment of the lower court was unanimously affirmed. McLaughlin v. Green, 50 Miss., 453-462; Bellamont's Case, 2 Salk., 625; Wey v. Yally, 6 Mod., 195.

Examples of the kind in the courts of the parent country are quite numerous, and in every case the alleged wrong-doer was put to his justification; and if it appeared that the wrongful act was done without lawful authority, the plaintiff recovered compensation for the injury. Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Smith, L. Cas., 7th ed., par. 11., 1035.

Where the captain of a company imposed a fine upon a soldier, and issued a warrant for its collection, under which the soldier was imprisoned, and it appeared that the statute conferred no authority upon the captain to issue warrants for the collection of fines in such cases, it was held, in an action of trespass brought by the soldier against the captain, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Mallory v. Merritt, 17 Conn., 178; 6 Waite, Act. and Def., 49.

Acts of military officers within the scope of their jurisdiction are protected, while such as are in excess of their jurisdiction are actionable. Waite, Act. and Def., 107.

When and where the civil power is suspended, the President has a right to govern by the military forces, but in all other cases the civil power excludes martial law and government by the war power. Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 370; 7 Waite, Act. and Def., 314.

A soldier cannot justify on the ground that he was obeying the orders of his superior officer, if such orders were illegal and not justified by the rules and usages of war, and such that a person of ordinary intelligence would know that obedience would be illegal and criminal. Riggs v. State, 3 Cold., 87; Wise v. Withers, 3 Cranch, 331, 337; Com. v. Palmer, 2 Bush, 570.

It follows that the military commander, after the capture of New Orleans, had no right to seize private property as booty, or to confiscate it, for the reason that hostilities had ceased and the courts were open. Planters' Bk. v. Union

Bk., 16 Wall., 483 [83 U. S., XXI., 473]; 7 Waite, Act. and Def., 315.

Without proof of a direct order from the commandant of the place, the defendant cannot justify his acts as having been authorized by his superior officer, even if that would afford a justification; for, as Dr. Lushington said in a celebrated case, if the act which he did was in itself wrongful and produced damage to the plaintiff, he, the plaintiff, must have the same remedy by action against the wrong doer, whether the act was his own, spontaneous and unauthorized, or whether it were done by the order of the superior power. Agents in such cases are responsible for their tortious acts; but the government is morally bound to give them indemnity, the rule being, as the court held in that case, that "The right to compensation in the party injured is paramount to that consideration." Rogers v. Dutt, 13 Moore (P. C.), 209, 236; Wilson v. Franklin, 63 N. C., 259.

It is not to be questioned, said Phelps, J., that, if a military officer transcend the limits of his authority and take cognizance of a matter not within his jurisdiction, his acts are void, and will afford no justification to those who act under him. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt., 148, 151. Conclusive support to that proposition, if any be needed, is found in several English cases of undoubted authority. Warden v. Bailey, 4 Taunt., 65-87.

During the argument, reference was made to the military order of the 16th of August, 1862, which purported to authorize commanders in certain States to seize property, real and personal, necessary or convenient for their commands or other military purposes; but it is clear that that order had no application in localities within the peaceable possession of the Union forces, for several reasons, either one of which is sufficient to show that it is a mere afterthought:

1. It could not apply to New Orleans, because if it did it would contradict and supersede the proclamation of General Butler, in which he promised that all the rights of property of whatever kind should be held inviolate.

2. Because it has been solemnly decided by this court that a military commander of that district, after the said proclamation, could not seize private property as booty of war. Planters' Bk. v. Union Bk. [supra].

3. Because the record shows that the whole district had been restored to the Union, and that all the inhabitants were in cheerful submission to the Federal Constitution.

4. Because there was no more necessity for seizing private property as supplies than there would have been if the Union forces had been encamped in any one of the great loyal cities of the North.

Concede the correctness of these suggestions, and two conclusions follow: (1) That this court has no jurisdiction to reverse or affirm the judgment of the circuit court. (2) That, if this court has such jurisdiction, then the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Attention was not called to the question of jurisdiction in the court below; nor is it probable that the result would have been different if it had been, as the universal practice in the circuit court is to favor appeals and render every facility to promote a re-examination of the judgment, unless the right has been denied by some express decision of the Supreme Court, or by some explicit and unambiguous congressional regulation.

Mr. Justice Miller dissenting:

I concur with my brother Clifford in holding that this court is without jurisdiction, because the amount in controversy does not exceed $5,000, and am content to rest that point on what he has said.

I also believe that the judgment of the circuit court should have been affirmed, for a single reason, which I will state in as few words as possible.

It is apparent that, very soon after the capture of New Orleans by the forces under General Butler, the enforcement of the law as between individuals was remitted to the civil courts, and the proclamation of the commanding general showed that it was his purpose that the assertion of such rights as required judicial proceedings should be had in the ordinary tribunals, with as little interruption as possible, and as little interference by the military authority. One of the evidences of this proposition is to be found in the fact that, without any change in the Judge, who had taken the oath of allegiance, the Sixth District Court of New Orleans was continued in the exercise of all its functions, which under the proclamation, included "civil causes between party and party."

The Sixth District Court was a court of the State of Louisiana exercising jurisdiction both by general law and by the express proclamation of the commanding general. The locality was a part of the United States. The parties were citizens of the United States. And no active military operations were being carried on within the City of New Orleans or against it; and for the very reason of the perfect security of its military possession by the loyal forces, the civil courts had been restored to the exercise of their ordinary functions between man and man, or, as the proclamation expressed it, between party and party. The condition, therefore, was very different from that of a military force invading the county of a foreign enemy, and before any treaty of peace, or the declaration of any purpose to annex the country seized to that of the conqueror, the military hold it in armed hostility to its rightful sovereign, and solely by the strong hand. In such a case, submission of the inhabitants can only be enforced by obedience to military power; and to subject that power to the jurisdiction of the courts of the country, is to abdicate wholly the control of the country so subjugated in war.

But in New Orleans it was far otherwise. Though the military were rightfully there, they were in their own country, among citizens subject to the same law that controlled the military, who owed allegiance to the same government. The citizens who had been only a few months in insurrection, were invited to submit themselves again to the same laws, and to have their contested rights decided by the same courts, and, in this case, by the same Judge.

In this condition of affairs, Johnson, who was a resident and citizen, against whose loyalty no charge is made, filed his petition, in due form of law before that court, in which he set forth that certain persons had, with force and violence, committed a trespass on his home, and taken therefrom personal property of the value of several thousand dollars, and he charged Dow with being guilty of this trespass.

The usual process of summons was served on Dow in person, and on his failure to appear or answer, either by himself or attorney, a default was entered, and judgment for the value of the property taken. From this judgment an appeal was never taken, and being unpaid the present suit was brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maine, where Dow resides, to enforce it.

The defense, the only defense which could be relied on, is a total and absolute want of any jurisdiction in the Sixth District Court over the case.

But surely that court did have jurisdiction of an action of trespass. Johnson the plaintiff was a person competent to sue, and if the cause of action was such as he alleged, he was entitled to a remedy in that court.

It is not denied that if the trespasser had been any other person than one of the United States military force he would have been liable to be sued and bound to answer. But it is said that because Dow was such military officer he was not bound to answer.

I hold it to be a principle of universal prevalence in all courts that when a proper plaintiff brings an actionable case before a court of which it has jurisdiction and proper service of process is made on the defendant that any personal exemption from the force of such process or from the jurisdiction of the court must be made by plea or some other appropriate mode of bringing the personal exemption before the court. I know of no exception to this rule laid down by all the works on pleading, from Chitty to the present time. There is no other way in which the court can know of the exemption if it be not unnecessarily stated in plaintiff's pleading. A party so sued is bound to answer at his peril. There is jurisdiction in the court, as the case stands. The court must pronounce the judgment of the law and if the party for any reason stays away or remains silent, he does so at the peril of having a judgment rendered against him by a court of competent jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the suit, which cannot be assailed collaterally.

Much is said of the evil of dragging all military officers into the courts under such circumstances. But the military power can make such general orders as will protect themselves against the abuse of the right which it has expressly recognized. So, the idea that Dow ought not to be compelled to leave his post at Fort St. Philip, to defend this suit in New Orleans, is of little force. If he had to be found at the fort for service of process, he could easily have employed a lawyer to put in his plea in abatement that he was acting under military authority and, therefore, not liable to the suit.

Every man is liable to be sued wrongfully or without cause, but he is, by the very genius of our laws, bound to submit to this evil and make defense. Why should not this class of men of all others who exercise most despotic power, be required to show the authority by which they are authorized to do so?

If I am not mistaken in these principles, I see no escape from their controlling influence in the case before us. It is too well settled to admit of controversy, that a judgment rendered by a court, which had jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter of the suit, can only be impeached by some direct proceeding to avoid it and that when an action is brought on such judgment in any other court, no defense can be made to it which might rightfully have been made in the former suit. General Dow could not, therefore, set up in the circuit court as a defense to that judgment the same matters which he should have relied on in the court that rendered it and which was bound to render the judgment it did.

It is impossible in discussing this matter that memory should fail to recall a very famous case of historical interest, involving many of the same principles, which occurred about half a century before this, and of which the same city was the theater.

During what has been called the siege of New Orleans, at the close of the war with Great Britain, the commanding general of our forces declared martial law in the city. This was unpleasant to many citizens, and to others who claimed to be foreigners domiciled there at the time. Some of these, becoming restive under its restraints, made publication in the newspapers of a seditious character for which General Jackson ordered them to be arrested, and when Judge Hall, of the proper civil court, issued a writ of habeas corpus for their release, he tore up the writ and sent Judge Hall by force beyond his lines. Within a very few days after this, the victory of the 8th January, 1815, and receipt of the news of a Treaty of Peace caused the revocation of the declaration of martial law and the restoration of Judge Hall to his judicial functions. The first use he made of it was to issue a process against General Jackson for contempt of court in his action in reference to the writ of habeas corpus.

That distinguished man, though in the midst of the adulation consequent on the great victory, did not act as the defendant in this case did, by paying no attention to the process, but came to the court in a citizen's dress, attended only by a single member of his military family and with his legal adviser. He offered to read the same paper which his counsel had read against issuing the process for contempt, and, when the court declined to hear it, he submitted himself without more to its judgment. At this there was such a demonstration of ill-feeling in the crowded court room that the Judge said he could not proceed, and would adjourn the court. But the noble defender of the city declared that he was equally ready to defend the court, and begged that the Judge would proceed without fear to do what he might think his duty required. A fine of $1,000 was entered up against him, which he paid at once, and used his authority, which was needed, to disperse the mob, who were inclined to violence against the Judge.

I confess I have always been taught to believe that Judge Hall was right in imposing the fine, and that General Jackson earned the brightest page in his history by paying it, and by his graceful submission to the judicial power; and such I believe is the judgment of history and of thoughtful judicial inquirers; though a grateful country very properly restored to her favorite general the sum he had paid for a necessary but unauthorized exercise of military power. I have no doubt that General Dow had good reason for all he did, and I think he would have acted more wisely if, respecting the courts in the proper exercise of their functions, he had made his defense at the right time before the appropriate tribunal.

Mr. Justice Swayne, dissenting:

With respect to the jurisdictional point involved in this case I concur in the views of Mr. Justice Clifford and Mr. Justice Miller. Upon the merits I unite in the opinion of the majority as delivered by Mr. Justice Field.

v.

SANFORD PERRYMAN.

Property stolen from Indian—statutory right.

1. The United States, under sections 2154 and 2155 of the Revised Statutes, are not liable to pay the value of property stolen by a negro from a friendly Indian, within the Indian country.
2. Where a right is statutory, the claimant cannot recover unless he brings himself within the terms of the statute.

Argued Jan. 16, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

A PPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. R. S. Davis, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to enforce an alleged liability of the United States, under sections 2154 and 2155 of the Revised Statutes, to pay the value of twenty-three head of beef cattle, stolen from the claimant, a friendly Indian within the Indian country.

These sections are as follows:

"Sec. 2154. Whenever, in the commission, by a white person, of any crime, offense or misdemeanor within the Indian country, the property of any friendly Indian is taken, injured or destroyed, and a conviction is had for such crime, offense or misdemeanor, the person so convicted shall be sentenced to pay to such friendly Indian to whom the property may belong, or whose person may be injured, a sum equal to twice the just value of the property so taken, injured or destroyed.

Sec. 2155. If such offender shall be unable to pay a sum at least equal to the just value or amount, whatever such payment shall fall short of the same shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. If such offender cannot be apprehended and brought to trial, the amount of such property shall be paid out of the Treasury. But no Indian shall be entitled to any payment out of the Treasury of the United States, for any such property, if he, or any of the Nation to which he belongs, have sought private revenge, or have attempted to obtain satisfaction by any force or violence."

This is a substantial reproduction of section 16 of the Act "To Regulate Trade and Intercourse with the Indian Tribes, and to Preserve Peace on the Frontiers," approved June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. at L., 731, and which continued in force until the Revised Statutes went into effect.

The facts are briefly these: on the 18th of December, 1874, Henry Carter, a negro, and not an Indian, and John Conner, a white man, stole from the claimant, a friendly Creek Indian, in the Indian country, the cattle sued for. At the May Term, 1875, of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas, both Carter and Conner were indicted for the larceny. Afterwards, a nolle prosequi was entered as to Conner and he was discharged; but Carter was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to pay to the claimant double the value of the cattle stolen, and be imprisoned in the penitentiary. He being unable to pay the judgment, this suit was brought. The Court of Claims was divided on the question whether the United States were liable in such a case for a theft committed by a negro, and, in order to allow an appeal, gave judgment pro forma for the claimant. From this judgment the United States appealed.

The single question we have to consider is, whether the United States are liable under the statute to the claimant, since the only offender who has been convicted and sentenced to pay for the property stolen was a negro, and not a white person. The term "white person," in the Revised Statutes, must be given the same meaning it had in the original Act of 1834. Congress has nowhere manifested an intention of using it in a different sense. While the negro, under the operation of the constitutional amendments, has been endowed with certain civil and political rights which he did not have in 1834, he is no more, in fact, a white person now than he was then. He is a citizen and free. No State can abridge his privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States or deny him the equal protection of the laws; but his race and color are the same, and he is no more included now within the descriptive term of a "white person," than he always has been. If, then, this term was used in the Act of 1834 to exclude the liability of the United States for the depredations of the negroes in the Indian country, it must be considered as having been so used in the Revised Statutes. There may be no good reason for restricting any longer this liability to acts of whites; but until Congress sees fit to change the statute in this particular, the courts are not at liberty to disregard the law as it is left to stand. The question is not as to the effect of the constitutional amendments on an existing statute affecting the civil or political rights of the negro himself, but as to the meaning of the words "white person," when used as words of description in a statute making the United States liable for the acts of the persons described. No rights of the negro himself, as a citizen or otherwise, are in any way involved.

It is contended, however, that the term "white person," as here used, means no more than "not an Indian;" in other words, that the intention of Congress was to make the United States liable in the way indicated for all injuries to the property of friendly Indians by persons engaged in crime within the Indian Territory who were not themselves Indians. Such, we think, is not the true construction of the statute. The Act of 1834 was not the first statute upon this subject. On the 19th of May, 1796, an Act was passed "To Regulate Trade and Intercourse with the Indian Tribes and to Preserve Peace on the Frontiers." 1 Stat. at L., 469. In this statute various provisions were made in respect to "Any citizen of, or other person resident in, the United States or either of the territorial districts of the United States;" and the liability of the United States for depredations, etc., was extended to certain specified acts of all such persons. Sec. 4. This statute expired by its own limitation in 1799, and on the 3d of March of that year another was passed with similar provisions, which continued in force for three years. 1 Stat. at L., 743. On the 30th of March, 1802, a permanent statute on the same subject was passed, 2 Stat. at L., 139, making much the same general provisions. In this also various penalties were prescribed for certain acts by "Any citizen of, or other person resident in, the United States, or either of the territorial districts of the United States." The liability of the United States for injuries to the property of friendly Indians was extended to the enumerated Acts of all "such citizens or other persons," the same as in the Statute of 1796. This continued in force until that of 1834, supra, was passed. In the Statute of 1834 the phrase "any citizen or other person residing within the United States or the territory thereof" is retained in all the provisions for penalties, etc., except in section 16, which was evidently intended to take the place of section 4 in the Statute of 1802, providing for the liability of the United States for injuries by certain persons to the property of friendly Indians. In that section (16) the words "a white person" were substituted for "any such citizen or other person;" that is to say "any citizen or other person resident of the United States," etc. It is impossible to believe that this was not done for a purpose. Had the phraseology throughout the entire statute been correspondingly changed, the question might have been different; but, confined as the change was to this particular section, we cannot but think that Congress meant just what the language used conveys to the popular mind. The Cherokee Nation, which had given the State of Georgia so much trouble, was about to remove to its new home west of the Mississippi. It was, no doubt, thought if the United States made themselves liable only for such depredations as were committed by the whites, these and other Indians would be less likely to tolerate fugitive blacks in their country. Hence, as a means of preventing the escape of slaves, the change in the law was made. Although the reason of the change no longer exists, Congress has seen fit to keep the law as it was. As the right is statutory, the claimant cannot recover unless he brings himself within the terms of the statute. That he has not done.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the petition.

MICHIGAN CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

CHARLES W. SLACK, COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 595-599.)

Internal revenue tax—on corporations—on dividends due foreigner.

*1. The tax on interest paid by corporations under section 122 of the Internal Revenue Law, as amended by the Act of 1866, is an excise tax on the business of these corporations, to be paid by them out of their earnings, income and profits.

2. In order to secure payment of this tax, it was laid by Congress on the subjects to which these earnings were applied in the usual course of business of such corporations, namely: dividends, interest on funded debt, construction, or some reserve fund held by the company.

3. Such a tax is not invalidated by the provision that the amount of it may be withheld from the dividend or interest going to the stockholder or bondholder, though the latter be a citizen or subject of a foreign government, with no residence in this country.

Argued Dec. 22, 1879. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. F. W. Palfrey, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in the Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts by the Railroad Company to recover the sum of $860.33, paid to defendant, as Collector of Internal Revenue, under protest, in which that court rendered judgment for defendant.

As the sum is small, and the law under which the tax was collected has long since been repealed, the case is of little consequence as regards any principle involved in it as a rule of future action.

The tax in question was assessed under section 122 of the Internal Revenue Law, as amended by the Act of 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 138. What is pertinent to this case reads as follows:

"Any railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation or slack-water company, indebted for any money for which bonds or other evidence of indebtedness have been issued, payable in one or more years after date, upon which interest is stipulated to be paid, or coupons representing the interest, or any such company that may have declared any dividend in scrip, or money due or payable to its stockholders, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens, as part of the earnings, profits, income or gains of such company, and all profits of such company carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, shall be subject to and pay a tax of five per centum on the amount of all such interest or coupons, dividends or profits, whenever and wherever the same shall be payable, and to whatsoever party or person the same may be payable, including non-residents, whether citizens or aliens; and said companies are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments on account of any interest, or coupons, and dividends due and payable, as aforesaid, the tax of five per centum; and the payment of the amount of said tax so deducted from the interest, or coupons, or dividends, and certified by the president or treasurer of said company, shall discharge said company from that amount of the dividend or interest, or coupon on the bonds, or other evidences of their indebtedness so held by any person or party whatever, except where said companies have contracted otherwise." 14 Stat. at L., 138.

The agreed statement on which the case was tried shows that the tax was for interest paid by the Company on sterling bonds in London, which bonds were issued long before the Internal Revenue Law was enacted, and it is, perhaps, fairly to be inferred from the statement that the bonds were held at the time by foreigners.

It is on this latter feature of the case that resistance to the tax is founded. It is urged that it is a tax on the property, if property it may be called, of persons not subject to the jurisdiction of this government and, therefore, beyond the power of Congress to levy or enforce.

That the tax was actually collected without resistance, and the present suit is brought to recover it back, is sufficient answer to the assertion that it could not be enforced.

Whether Congress, having the power to enforce the law, has the authority to levy such a tax on the interest due by a citizen of the United States to one who is not domiciled within our limits, and who owes the government no allegiance, is a question which we do not think necessary to the decision of this case.

The tax, in our opinion, is essentially an excise on the business of the class of corporations mentioned in the statute. The section is a part of the system of taxing incomes, earnings and profits adopted during the late war, and abandoned as soon after that war was ended as it could be done safely. The corporations mentioned in this section are those engaged in furnishing road-ways and water-ways for the transportation of persons and property, and the manifest purpose of the law was to levy the tax on the net earnings of such companies. How were these "earnings, profits, incomes or gains" to be most certainly ascertained? In every well conducted corporation of this character these profits were disposed of in one of four methods, namely: distributed to its stockholders as dividends, used in construction of its roads or canals, paid out for interest on its funded debts, or carried to a reserve or other fund remaining in the hands of the Company. Looking to these modes of distribution as the surest evidence of the earnings which Congress intended to tax, and as less liable to evasion than any other, the tax is imposed upon all of them. The books and records of the Company are thus made evidence of the profits they have made, and the Corporation itself is made responsible for the payment of the tax.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

Manifestly, such a mode of ascertaining the net earnings of the Company would not be complete unless the sums paid as interest on their bonded debts were taken into the account.

Of course it was competent for Congress to tax only the earnings after deducting this interest paid on their debt, or to treat the sum so paid as part of the net earnings, and paid out of them as dividends were. It adopted the latter policy.

It results from this course of observation that the tax was not laid on the bondholder who received the interest, but on the earnings of the Corporation which paid the interest.

It is very true that the Act went further, and declared that, except when the Company had contracted otherwise, it might deduct this tax from the amount due the bondholders. And where the bondholder was subject to congressional legislation by reason of citizenship, residence or situs of the property taxed, it was within the lawful power of Congress to do so. Whether, as a question of international law, this declaration would relieve the Corporation from the obligation to pay its foreign bondholder the full sum for which it contracted, we need not discuss; for this court, on all such subjects, is bound by the legislative and political departments of its own government. The tax is laid by Congress on the net earnings, which are the results of the business of the Corporation, on which Congress had clearly a right to lay it; and being lawfully assessed and paid, it cannot be recovered back by reason of any inefficiency or ethical objection to the remedy over against the bondholder.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.—Homicide by officers in making an arrest, when justifiable.

Killing by officers in riots and unlawful assemblies, if necessary to arrest offenders, is justifiable. Pon v. People, 8 Mich., 150; 1 Hale P. C., 495; 4 Bl. Com., 180.

An officer having a warrant is justified in killing one accused of felony if he resists or flies; and also without a warrant, on probable suspicion founded on his own knowledge or the information of others. 1 East, P. A killing to prevent an escape after a felony actually committed, is justifiable, but necessity alone will justify it, and the authority to arrest must have been known. *State v. ed States, which declares that "When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer appointed under, or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States now or hereafter enacted, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, on account of any act done under color of his office or of any such law, or on account of any right, title or authority claimed by such officer or other person under any such law, * * * the said suit or prosecution may, at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof, be removed for trial into the circuit court next to be holden in the district where the same is pending, upon the petition of such defendant to said circuit court," etc., is not in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

2. D. was indicted for murder in a state court of Tennessee. In his petition duly verified, for removal of the prosecution to the Federal Court, he stated, that, although indicted for murder, no murder was committed; that the killing was done in the petitioner's own necessary self-defense, to save his own life; that at the time when the alleged act for which he was indicted was committed he was, and still is, an officer of the United States, to wit: a deputy-collector of internal revenue; that the act for which he was indicted was performed in his own necessary self-defense while engaged in the discharge of his duties as deputy-collector, and while acting by and under the authority of the internal revenue laws of the United States; that what he did was done under and by right of his said office; that it was his duty to seize illicit distilleries and the apparatus that is used for the illicit and unlawful distillation of spirits; and that while so attempting to enforce the revenue laws of the United States, as deputy-collector as aforesaid, he was assaulted and fired upon by a number of armed men, and that in defense of his life he returned the fire, which is the killing mentioned in the indictment. Held, that the petition was in conformity with the statute, and, upon being filed, the prosecution was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for that district.

3. The United States is a government with authority extending over the whole territory of the Union, acting upon the States and the people of the States. While it is limited in the number of its powers, so far as its sovereignty extends, it is supreme. No State can exclude it from exercising any authority conferred upon it by the Constitution, obstruct its authorized officers against its will, or withhold from it, for a moment, the cognizance of any subject which that instrument has committed to it.

4. The General Government must cease to exist whenever it loses the power of protecting itself in the exercise of its constitutional powers. It can act only through its officers and agents and they must act within the States. If, when thus acting and within the scope of their authority, those officers can be arrested and brought to trial in a state court, for an alleged offense against the law of the State, yet warranted by the federal authority they possess, and if the General Government is powerless to interfere at once for their protection—if their protection must be left to the action of the state court—the operations of the General Government may at any time be arrested at the will of one of its members.

In civil cases and in misdemeanors, life can only be taken where person arrested resists by force, and not in case of an escape. Fost., 271; 1 Hale, P. C., 481; 1 East, P. C., 302; Forster's Case, 1 Lew. C.C., 187; Reneau v. State, 2 Lea, 720; S. C., 2 Am. Cr. R., 624; State v. Oliver, Houst., 585; 1 Russ. Cr., 643.

To kill one who interferes to prevent a felony is murder. Dill v. State, 25 Ala., 15; Com. v. Riley, Thatch. C. C., 471.

Where several resolve to resist officers, to a commission of a breach of the peace, they are principals in the murder or manslaughter which ensues, if they acted in the common design; but not in the commission of collateral crimes. U. S. v. Ross, 1 Gall., 624; Reg. v. Turner, 4 Fost. & F., 339; U. S. v. Gilbert, 2 Sum., 19; Reg. v. Skeet, 4 Fost. & F., 931; Reg. v. Price, 8 Cox, C. C., 96; Rex v. Warner, 5 Car. & P., 525; Huling v. State, 17 Ohio St., 583; Washington v. State, 36 Tex., 222; Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y., 213; Brennan v. People, 15 Ill., 511; State v. Simmons, 6 Jones (N. C.), 21.

Rioters are not responsible for a homicide by those suppressing the riot. Com. v. Campbell, 7 Allen, 541; Rex v. Murphy, 6 Car. & P., 103; 1 Whart. Cr. L., 8th ed., sec. 398.

No such element of weakness is to be found in the Constitution.

5. The judicial power of the United States by the express words of the Constitution, extends "To all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority."

6. That provision embraces alike civil and criminal cases arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States (Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 399). Both are equally within the domain of the judicial power of the United States.

7. A case arises under the Constitution of the United States, not merely where a party comes into court to demand something conferred upon him by the Constitution or by a law or treaty, but wherever its correct decision as to the rights or defense of either party depends upon the construction of either. It is in the power of Congress to give the Circuit Courts of the United States jurisdiction of such a case, although other questions of fact or of law may be involved in it.

8. If the case, whether civil or criminal, be one to which the judicial power of the United States extends, its removal to the Federal Court is no invasion of state domain. On the contrary, a denial of the right of the General Government to remove them, to take charge of and try any case arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States, is a denial of the conceded sovereignty of that government over a subject expressly committed to it. It is a denial of a doctrine necessary for the preservation of the acknowledged powers of the government. The power to remove is as ample in criminal as in civil cases. The exercise of that power as to criminal prosecutions is seen in the Act of February 4, 1815, again in the Act of March 2, 1833, ch. 57, sec. 3, and more recently in the Act of July 13, 1866.

Argued Oct. 22, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

ON a certificate of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee.

The questions upon which the Judges were divided appear in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. B. J. Lea and James G. Field, for plaintiff.

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendant.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in this case was indicted for murder in the Circuit Court for Grundy County, in the State of Tennessee, and on the 29th day of August, 1878, before the trial of the indictment, he presented his petition to the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district, praying for a removal of the case into that court, and praying for a certiorari, etc.

The record having been returned, in compliance with the writ, a motion was made to remand the case to the state court; and, on the hearing of the motion, the Judges were divided in opinion upon the following questions:

First. Whether an indictment of a revenue officer (of the United States) for murder, found in a state court, under the facts alleged in the petition for removal in this case, is removable to the Circuit Court of the United States, under section 643 of the Revised Statutes.

Second. Whether, if removable from the state court, there is any mode and manner of procedure in the trial prescribed by the Act of Congress.

And third. Whether, if not, a trial of the guilt or innocence of the defendant can be had in the United States Circuit Court.

This difference of opinion has been certified to us, together with a transcript of the record and proceedings in the cause. The first of the questions certified is one of great importance, bringing as it does into consideration the relation of the General Government to the government of the States, and bringing also into view not merely the construction of an Act of Congress, but its constitutionality. That, in this case, the defendant's petition for removal of the cause was in the form prescribed by the Act of Congress, admits of no doubt. It represented that he had been indicted for murder in the Circuit Court of Grundy County, and that the indictment and criminal prosecution were still pending. It represented further, that no murder was committed, but that, on the other hand, the killing was committed in the petitioner's own necessary self-defense, to save his own life; that at the time when the alleged act for which he was indicted was committed he was and still is an officer of the United States, to wit: a deputy-collector of internal revenue, and that the act for which he was indicted was performed in his own necessary self-defense while engaged in the discharge of his duties as deputy-collector; that he was acting by and under the authority of the internal revenue laws of the United States; that what he did was done under and by right of his office, to wit: as deputy-collector of internal revenue; that it was his duty to seize illicit distilleries and the apparatus that is used for the illicit and unlawful distillation of spirits; and that, while so attempting to enforce the revenue laws of the United States as deputy-collector as aforesaid, he was assaulted and fired upon by a number of armed men, and that in defense of his life he returned the fire. The petition was verified by oath, and the certificate required by the Act of Congress to be given by the petitioner's legal counsel was appended thereto. There is, therefore, no room for reasonable doubt that a case was made for the removal of the indictment into the Circuit Court of the United States, if section 643 of the Revised Statutes embraces criminal prosecutions in a state court, and makes them removable, and if that Act of Congress was not unauthorized by the Constitution. The language of the statute, so far as it is necessary at present to refer to it, is as follows: "When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States, now or hereafter enacted, or against any person acting by or under authority of any such officer, on account of any act done under color of his office or of any such law, or on account of any right, title or authority claimed by such officer or other person under any such law," the case may be removed into the Federal Court. Now, certainly the petition for the removal represented that the act for which the defendant was indicted was done not merely under color of his office as a revenue collector, or under color of the revenue laws; not merely while he was engaged in performing his duties as a revenue officer, but that it was done under and by right of his office, and while he was resisted by an armed force in his attempts to discharge his official duty. This is more than a claim of right and authority under the law of the United States for the act for which he has been indicted. It is a positive assertion of the existence of such authority. But the Act of Congress authorizes the removal of any cause, when the acts of the defendant complained of were done, or claimed to have been done, in the discharge of his duty as a federal officer. It makes such a claim a basis for the assumption of federal jurisdiction of the case, and for retaining it, at least until the claim proves unfounded.

That the Act of Congress does provide for the removal of criminal prosecutions for offenses against the state laws, when there arises in them the claim of the federal right or authority, is too plain to admit of denial. Such is its positive language, and it is not to be argued away by presenting the supposed incongruity of administering state criminal laws by other courts than those established by the State. It has been strenuously urged that murder within a State is not made a crime by any Act of Congress, and that it is an offense against the peace and dignity of the State alone. Hence it is inferred that its trial and punishment can be conducted only in state tribunals, and it is argued that the Act of Congress cannot mean what it says, but that it must intend only such prosecutions in State Courts as are for offenses against the United States, offenses against the revenue laws. But there can be no criminal prosecution initiated in any State Court for that which is merely an offense against the General Government. If, therefore, the statute is to be allowed any meaning, when it speaks of criminal prosecutions in state courts, it must intend those that are instituted for alleged violations of state laws, in which defenses are set up or claimed under United States laws or authority.

We come, then, to the inquiry, most discussed during the argument, whether section 643 is a constitutional exercise of the power vested in Congress. Has the Constitution conferred upon Congress the power to authorize the removal, from a State Court to a Federal Court, of an indictment against a revenue officer for an alleged crime against the State, and to order its removal before trial, when it appears that a federal question or a claim to a federal right is raised in the case, and must be decided therein? A more important question can hardly be imagined. Upon its answer may depend the possibility of the General Governments' preserving its own existence. As was said in Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 363, "The General Government must cease to exist whenever it loses the power of protecting itself in the exercise of its constitutional powers." It can act only through its officers and agents, and they must act within the States. If, when thus acting, and within the scope of their authority, those officers can be arrested, and brought to trial in a State Court, for an alleged offense against the law of the State, yet warranted by the federal authority they possess, and if the General Government is powerless to interfere at once for their protection; if their protection must be left to the action of the State Court; the operations of the General Government may at any time be arrested at the will of one of its members. The legislation of a State may be unfriendly. It may affix penalties to acts done under the immediate direction of the National Government, and in obedience to its laws. It may deny the authority conferred by those laws. The State Court may administer not only the laws of the State, but equally federal law, in such a manner as to paralyze the operations of the government. And even if, after trial and final judgment in the state court, the case can be brought into the United States Court for review, the officer is withdrawn from the discharge of his duty during the pendency of the prosecution, and the exercise of acknowledged federal power arrested.

We do not think such an element of weakness is to be found in the Constitution. The United States is a government with authority extending over the whole territory of the Union, acting upon the States and upon the People of the States. While it is limited in the number of its powers, so far as its sovereignty extends it is supreme. No State Government can exclude it from the exercise of any authority conferred upon it by the Constitution, obstruct its authorized officers against its will, or withhold from it, for a moment, the cognizance of any subject which that instrument has committed to it.

By the last clause of the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution, Congress is invested with power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution, not only all the powers previously specified, but also all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof. Among these is the judicial power of the government. That is declared by the 2d section of the 3d article to "Extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority," etc. This provision embraces alike civil and criminal cases arising under the Constitution and laws. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 399. Both are equally within the domain of the judicial powers of the United States, and there is nothing in the grant to justify an assertion that whatever power may be exerted over a civil case may not be exerted as fully over a criminal one. And a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States may as well arise in a criminal prosecution as in a civil suit. What constitutes a case thus arising was early defined in the case cited from 6 Wheaton. It is not merely one where a party comes into court to demand something conferred upon him by the Constitution or by a law or treaty. A case consists of the right of one party as well as the other, and may truly be said to arise under the Constitution or a law or a treaty of the United States whenever its correct decision depends upon the construction of either. Cases arising under the laws of the United States are such as grow out of the legislation of Congress, whether they constitute the right or privilege, or claim or protection, or defense of the party, in whole or in part, by whom they are asserted. Story, Const., sec. 1647; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 379. It was said in Osborn v. Bk., 9 Wheat., 823, "When a question to which the judicial power of the Union is extended by the Constitution forms an ingredient of the original cause, it is in the power of Congress to give the circuit courts jurisdiction of that cause, although other questions of fact or of law may be involved in it." And a case arises under the laws of the United States, when it arises out of the implication of the law. Chief Justice Marshall said, in the case last cited. "It is not unusual for a legislative Act to involve consequences which are not expressed. An officer, for example, is ordered to arrest an individual. It is not necessary, nor is it usual, to say that he shall not be punished for obeying this order. His security is implied in the order itself. It is no unusual thing for an Act of Congress to imply, without expressing, this very exemption from state control." * * * "The collectors of the revenue, the carriers of the mail, the mint establishment, and all those institutions which are public in their nature, are examples in point. It has never been doubted that all who are employed in them are protected while in the line of their duty; and yet this protection is not expressed in any Act of Congress. It is incidental to and is implied in the several Acts by which those institutions are created; and is secured to the individuals employed in them by the judicial power alone; that is, the judicial power is the instrument employed by the government in administering this security."

The constitutional right of Congress to authorize the removal before trial of civil cases arising under the laws of the United States has long since passed beyond doubt. It was exercised almost contemporaneously with the adoption of the Constitution, and the power has been in constant use ever since. The Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, was passed by the first Congress, many members of which had assisted in framing the Constitution; and though some doubts were soon after suggested whether cases could be removed from state courts before trial, those doubts soon disappeared. Whether removal from a State to a Federal Court is an exercise of appellate jurisdiction, as laid down in Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, section 1745, or an indirect mode of exercising original jurisdiction, as intimated in R. Co. v. Whitton, 18 Wall., 270 [80 U. S., XX., 571], we need not now inquire. Be it one or the other, it was ruled in the case last cited to be constitutional. But if there is power in Congress to direct a removal before trial of a civil case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and direct its removal because such a case has arisen, it is impossible to see why the same power may not order the removal of a criminal prosecution, when a similar case has arisen in it. The judicial power is declared to extend to all cases of the character described, making no distinction between civil and criminal, and the reasons for conferring upon the Courts of the National Government superior jurisdiction over cases involving authority and rights under the laws of the United States, are equally applicable to both. As we have already said, such a jurisdiction is necessary for the preservation of the acknowledged powers of the government. It is essential, also, to an uniform and consistent administration of national laws. It is required for the preservation of that supremacy which the Constitution gives to the General Government by declaring that the Constitution and laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and the treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme laws of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." The founders of the Constitution could never have intended to leave to the possibly varying decisions of the State
See 10 OTTO.

Courts what the laws of the government it established are, what rights they confer, and what protection shall be extended to those who execute them. If they did, where is the supremacy over those questions vested in the government by the Constitution? If, whenever and wherever a case arises under the Constitution and laws or treaties of the United States, the National Government cannot take control of it, whether it be civil or criminal, in any stage of its progress, its judicial power is, at least, temporarily silenced, instead of being at all times supreme. In criminal as well as in civil proceedings in State Courts, cases under the Constitution and laws of the United States might have been expected to arise, as, in fact, they do. Indeed, the powers of the General Government and the lawfulness of authority exercised or claimed under it, are quite as frequently in question in criminal cases in State Courts as they are in civil cases, in proportion to their number.

The argument so much pressed upon us, that it is an invasion of the sovereignty of a State to withdraw from its courts into the courts of the General Government the trial of prosecutions for alleged offenses against the criminal laws of a State, even though the defense presents a case arising out of an Act of Congress, ignores entirely the dual character of our government. It assumes that the States are completely and in all respects sovereign. But when the National Government was formed, some of the attributes of state sovereignty were partially, and others wholly, surrendered and vested in the United States. Over the subjects thus surrendered, the sovereignty of the States ceased to extend. Before the adoption of the Constitution, each State had complete and exclusive authority to administer by its courts all the law, civil and criminal, which existed within its borders. Its judicial power extended over every legal question that could arise. But when the Constitution was adopted, a portion of that judicial power became vested in the new government created, and so far as thus vested it was withdrawn from the sovereignty of the State. Now the execution and enforcement of the laws of the United States, and the judicial determination of questions arising under them, are confided to another sovereign, and to that extent the sovereignty of the State is restricted. The removal of cases arising under those laws, from State into Federal Courts, is, therefore, no invasion of state domain. On the contrary, a denial of the right of the General Government to remove them, to take charge of and try any case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, is a denial of the conceded sovereignty of that government over a subject expressly committed to it.

It is true, the Act of 1789 authorized the removal of civil cases only. It did not attempt to confer upon the Federal Courts all the judicial power vested in the government. Additional grants have from time to time been made. Congress has authorized more and more fully, as occasion has required, the removal of civil cases from State Courts into the Circuit Courts of the United States, and the constitutionality of such authorization has met with general acquiescence. It has been sustained by the decisions of this court.

Nor has the removal of civil cases alone been authorized. On the 4th of February, 1815, an Act was passed, 3 Stat. at L., 198, providing that if any suit or prosecution should be commenced in any State Court against any collector, naval officer, surveyor, inspector, or any other officer, civil or military, or any other person aiding or assisting, agreeably to the provisions of the Act, or under color thereof, for any act done or omitted to be done as an officer of the customs, or for anything done by virtue of the Act or under color thereof, it might be removed before trial into the Circuit Court of the United States, provided the Act should not apply to any offenses involving corporal punishment. This Act expressly applied to a criminal action or prosecution. It was intended to be of short duration, but it was extended by the Act of March 3, 1815, 3 Stat. at L., p. 233, sec. 6, and re-enacted in 1817 for a period of four years.

So, in 1833, by the Act of March 2d, 4 Stat. at L., 632 ch. 57, sec. 3, it was enacted that in any case where suit or prosecution should be commenced in a State Court of any State against any officer of the United States, or other person, for or on account of any act done under the revenue laws of the United States, or under color thereof, or for or on account of any right, authority or title set up or claimed by such officer, or other person, under any such law of the United States, the suit or prosecution might be removed, before trial, into the Federal Circuit Court of the proper district. The history of this Act is well known. It was passed in consequence of an attempt by one of the States of the Union to make penal the collection, by United States officers within the State, of duties under the tariff laws. It was recommended by President Jackson in a special message, and passed in the Senate by a vote of 32 to 1, and in the House by a majority of ninety-two. It undoubtedly embraced both civil and criminal cases. It was so understood and intended when it was passed. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who introduced the bill, said: "It gives the right to remove at any time before trial, but not after judgment has been given, and thus affects in no way the dignity of the state tribunals. Whether in criminal or civil cases, it gives this right of removal. Has Congress power in criminal cases? He would answer the question in the affirmative. Congress had the power to give the right in criminal as well as in civil cases, because the 2d section of the 3d Article of the Constitution speaks of all cases in law and equity, and these comprehensive terms cover all. * * * It was more necessary that this jurisdiction should be extended over criminal than over civil cases. If it were not admitted that the federal judiciary had jurisdiction of criminal cases, then was nullification ratified and sealed forever; for a State would have nothing more to do than to declare an act a felony or misdemeanor, to nullify all the laws of the Union."

The provisions of the Act of July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 171, sec. 67, relative to the removal of suits or prosecutions in State Courts against internal revenue officers, provisions re-enacted in section 643 of the Revised Statutes, are almost identical with those of the Act of 1833, the only noticeable difference being, that in the latter Act the adjective "criminal" is inserted before the word "prosecution." This made no change in the meaning. The well understood legal signification of the word "prosecution" is, a criminal proceeding at the suit of the government. Thus it appears that all along our history the legislative understanding of the Constitution has been that it authorizes the removal from State Courts to the Circuit Courts of the United States, alike civil and criminal cases, arising under the laws, the Constitution or treaties.

The subject has more than once been before this court, and it has been fully considered. In Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, it was admitted in argument by Messrs. Tucker and Dexter that there might be a removal before judgment, though it was contended there could not be after; but the contention was overruled, and it was declared that Congress might authorize a removal either before or after judgment; that the time, the process and the manner must be subject to its absolute legislative control. In that case, also, it was said that the remedy of the removal of suits would be utterly inadequate to the purposes of the Constitution, if it could act only upon the parties, and not upon the state courts. Judge Story, who delivered the opinion, adding: "In respect to criminal prosecutions, the difficulty seems admitted to be insurmountable, and, in respect to civil suits, there would in many cases be rights without corresponding remedies. * * * In respect to criminal prosecutions there would at once be an end of all control, and, the state decisions would be paramount to the Constitution." The expression, that the difficulty in the way of the removal of criminal prosecutions seems admitted to be insurmountable, has been laid hold of here, in argument, as a declaration of the court that criminal prosecutions cannot be removed. It is a very short-sighted and unwarranted inference. What the court said was, that the remedy in such cases seems to be insurmountable, if it could not act upon State Courts as well as parties; and it was ruled that it does thus act. The expression must be read in its connection. In Martin v. Hunter the removal was by writ of error after final judgment in the State Court; which certainly seems more an invasion of state jurisdiction than a removal before trial. The case was followed by Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 264, a criminal case, in which the defendant set up against a criminal prosecution an authority under an Act of Congress. There it was decided that cases might be removed in which a State was a party. This, also, was a writ of error after a final judgment; but it, as well as the former case, recognized the right of Congress to authorize removals either before or after trial, and neither case made any distinction between civil and criminal proceedings.

In Mayor v. Cooper, 6 Wall., 247 [73 U. S., XVIII., 851], the validity of the removal Acts of 1863, March 3, sec. 5 of ch. 81, 12 Stat. at L., 756, and its amendment of May 11, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 46, which embraced not only civil cases but criminal prosecutions, and authorized their removal before trial, came under consideration, and it was sustained. This court then said: "The constitutional power is given in general terms. No limitation is imposed. The broadest language is used. All cases so arising are embraced. * * How jurisdiction shall be acquired by the inferior court" (of the United States), "whether it shall be original or appellate, or original in part and appellate in part, and the manner of procedure in its exercise after it has been acquired, is not prescribed. The Constitution is silent upon these subjects. They are remitted without check or limitation to the wisdom of the Legislature." "Jurisdiction, original or appellate, alike comprehensive in either case, may be given. The constitutional boundary line of both is the same. Every variety and form of appellate jurisdiction within the sphere of the power, extending as well to the courts of the States as to those of the Nation, is permitted. There is no distinction in this respect between civil and criminal cases. Both are within its scope. Nor is it any objection that questions are involved which are not at all of a federal character. If one of the latter exist, if there be a single such ingredient in the mass, it is sufficient." The court added, "We entertain no doubt of the constitutionality of the jurisdiction given by the Act under which this case has arisen." See, also, Com. v. Artman, 3 Grant, Cas., 436; 3 Grant, Cas., 416-418; State v. Hoskins, 77 N. C., 530, decided in 1877, where the constitutionality of section 643 of the Revised Statutes was affirmed after a full and instructive discussion.

It ought, therefore, to be considered as settled that the constitutional powers of Congress to authorize the removal of criminal cases for alleged offenses against state laws from State Courts to the Circuit Courts of the United States, when there arises a federal question in them, is as ample as its power to authorize the removal of a civil case. Many of the cases referred to, and others, set out with great force the indispensability of such a power to the enforcement of federal law.

It follows that the first question certified to us from the Circuit Court of Tennessee must be answered in the affirmative.

The second question is: "Whether, if the case be removable from the State Court, there is any mode and manner of procedure in the trial prescribed by the Act of Congress."

Whether there is or not, is totally immaterial to the inquiry whether the case is removable; and this question can hardly have arisen on the motion to remand the case. The imaginary difficulties and incongruities supposed to be in the way of trying in the circuit court an indictment for an alleged offense against the peace and dignity of a State, if they were real, would be for the consideration of Congress. But they are unreal. While it is true there is neither in section 643 nor in the Act of which it is a re-enactment, any mode of procedure in the trial of a removed case prescribed, except that it is ordered, the cause when removed shall proceed as a cause originally commenced in that court, yet the mode of trial is sufficiently obvious. The Circuit Courts of the United States have all the appliances which are needed for the trial of any criminal case. They adopt and apply the laws of the State in civil cases, and there is no more difficulty in administering the state's criminal law. They are not foreign courts. The Constitution has made them courts within the States to administer the laws of the States in certain cases; and, so long as they keep within the jurisdiction assigned to them, their general powers are adequate to the trial of any case. The supposed anomaly of prosecuting offenders against the peace and dignity of a State, in tribunals of the General Government, grows entirely out of the division of powers between that government and the government of a State; that is, a division of sovereignty over certain matters. When this is understood, and it is time it should be, it will not appear strange that, even in cases of criminal prosecutions for alleged offenses against a State, in which arises a defense under United States law, the General Government should take cognizance of the case and try it in its own courts, according to its own forms of proceeding.

The third question certified has been sufficiently answered in what we have said respecting the second. It must be answered in the affirmative.

Question first, answered in the affirmative.

Question second, answered as in the opinion.

Question third, answered in the affirmative.

Copy, foregoing opinion and head notes duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Mr. Justice Clifford, dissenting:

Civil suits or criminal prosecutions, commenced in a State Court against a revenue officer of the United States, on account of any act done under color of his office, or on account of any right, title or authority claimed by such officer under such law, may, at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof, be removed for trial into the circuit court next to be holden in the district where the same is pending, in the manner prescribed in the section conferring the right. R. S., sec. 643.

Sufficient appears, to show that the prisoner was formally indicted for murder in the first degree by the grand jury of the State; that the indictment was duly filed in the proper State Court for trial, and that it was subsequently removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the district, on motion of the accused. Neither the indictment nor the order of removal is exhibited in the transcript. Instead of that, the statement is that the Attorney-General of the State moved in the Circuit Court to remand the cause to the State Court in which the indictment was found. Hearing was had, and it appears that the Judges of the Circuit Court were divided in opinion whether the motion of the Attorney-General ought or ought not to be granted.

Appended to the first question certified by the Judges of the court is a paper which purports to be the petition of the prisoner under which the order of removal was granted. From that, it appears that the homicide charged is admitted, but that the defense is that the killing by the prisoner was in self-defense to save his own life; that he was and still is a deputy-collector of internal revenue; and that the act for which he is indicted, as he alleges, was performed in self-defense while he was engaged in the performance of the duties of his office. Speaking more specifically, he states that it is his duty to seize illicit distilleries and the apparatus that is being used for the illicit and unlawful distillation of spirits, and that, while attempting to enforce the revenue laws, he was assaulted and fired upon by a number of armed men, and that in defense of his life he returned the fire.

Three questions are certified, as follows: (1) Is an indictment in a State Court for murder, under the facts set forth in the petition for removal in this case, removable to the Circuit Court, under section 643 of the Revised Statutes? (2) If removable from the State Court, is there any mode of procedure in the trial prescribed by an Act of Congress? (3) And if not, can a trial of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner be had in the circuit court?

Questions of greater importance than those certified here by the Circuit Court could hardly be presented for discussion, as they involve the necessity of an inquiry into the nature, extent and limitation of the judicial power both of the United States and of the Circuit Courts established by Congress. Judicial power, like other powers granted to the United States by the Constitution, is defined by the instrument making the grant. Governed by that rule, we find that the 2d section of the 3d article ordains that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, which provision describes the whole extent of the judicial power of the United States conferred by the Constitution that it is necessary to examine in the present case. Other clauses in the same section enumerate numerous other subject-matters falling within the cognizance either of the Supreme Court or of the inferior courts created by Congress; but it will not be necessary to examine those clauses, as they have no bearing upon the questions to be answered.

Pursuant to the 1st section of the 3d article, the Congress passed the Judiciary Act, making provision for the organization of the Supreme Court, and establishing the Circuit and District Courts. 1 Stat. at L., 73.

Jurisdiction of crimes and offenses committed within their respective districts, and cognizable under the authority of the United States to a limited extent, was by that Act conferred upon the District Courts; but the 11th section of the Act provided that the Circuit Courts should have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except where the Act otherwise provides, and concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable in those courts. 1 Stat. at L., 78.

Neither the District nor Circuit Courts have jurisdiction of any crimes or offenses by that Act, unless the same are cognizable under the authority of the United States. Criminal jurisdiction is not by the Constitution conferred upon any court, and it is settled law that Congress must, in all cases, make an act criminal and define the offense before either the District or Circuit Courts can take cognizance of an indictment charging the act as an offense against the authority of the United States. Obvious and undoubted as the proposition is, it admits of but little illustration, and needs nothing more.

Powers expressly enumerated are granted to Congress, and such as shall be necessary and proper for carrying the enumerated powers into execution, or, in other words, the powers of Congress are made up of concessions from the People of the several States, with such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry the express concessions into effect, subject to the limitation that whatever is not expressly granted or necessarily or properly implied to carry the granted powers into effect is reserved to the States respectively, or to the People. Like the other powers specified, the judicial power of the United States is a constituent part of those concessions from the several States and, as was held by this court at a very early period, it is to be exercised by the Supreme Court or such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Of all the courts which the United States may, under their general powers, constitute, one only (the Supreme Court) possesses jurisdiction derived immediately from the Constitution, and of which the legislative power cannot deprive it. All other courts organized by the General Government possess no jurisdiction but what is given by the power that created them, and they can be vested with none except what the power ceded to the United States will authorize the Congress to confer. Certain implied powers, it is admitted, must necessarily result to courts of justice—such as to fine for contempt or imprison for contumacy; but the jurisdiction of crimes against the authority of the United States is not among such implied powers, the universal rule in the Federal Courts being that the legislative authority of the Union must first make an act a crime, affix a punishment to it, and prescribe what courts have jurisdiction of such an indictment, before any federal tribunal can determine the guilt or innocence of the supposed offender. U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32; U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Wheat., 415; 1 Whart. Cr. L., 7th ed., sec. 163.

In accordance with that rule, it was held by the whole court, Marshall, Ch. J., delivering the opinion, that the Circuit Court could not take cognizance of the crime of murder committed on board of one of our ships of war lying in a harbor within state jurisdiction, because the 8th section of the Crimes Act, by which alone any provision had been made for the punishment of such a crime on shipboard, only defines offenses perpetrated upon the high seas or in any river, haven, basin or bay out of the jurisdiction of any particular State. U. S. v. Bevens, 3 Wheat., 336, 387.

It was argued in behalf of the prosecution in that case that the jurisdiction existed because the homicide was committed on board a ship of war; but Mr. Webster denied the proposition, and contended that the jurisdiction of the circuit court was only such as had been given to it by an Act of Congress, and insisted that it was sufficient to maintain for the prisoner that no Act of Congress authorized the circuit court to take cognizance of any offenses merely because they were committed on ships of war. Instead of that, he insisted that it was the nature of the place in which the ship lies and not the character of the ship itself that decides the question of jurisdiction; and added, that if committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the State it excluded the jurisdiction of the circuit court by express exception, the language of the Act only giving authority to try and punish offenders for offenses committed upon the high seas, or in any river, haven, basin or bay out of the jurisdiction of any particular State.

Commenting upon that provision, the Chief
100 U. S.

Justice said: It is not the offense, but the bay in which it is committed, which must be out of the jurisdiction of the State, adding that, unless the place itself be out of the jurisdiction of the State, Congress has not given cognizance of the offense to the Circuit Courts: U. S. v. Willberger, 5 Wheat., 76, 96.

Apply the conclusion reached in those two cases to the question under discussion, and it is clear that, in order to ascertain the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts in criminal cases, resort must be had to the Acts of Congress providing for the punishment of crimes; for although such courts are unquestionably to look to the common law, in the absence of statutory provision, for rules of guidance in the exercise of their functions in criminal as well as in civil cases, it is to the Acts of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution alone that they must have recourse to determine what constitutes an offense against the authority of the United States, it being settled law that the United States have no unwritten Code to which resort can be had as a source of jurisdiction. Conk. Tr., 5th ed., 181.

Courts of the United States derive no jurisdiction in criminal cases from the common law, nor can such tribunals take cognizance of any act of an individual as a public offense, or declare it punishable as such, until it has been defined as an offense by an Act of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution. Argument to show that Congress has never defined the act of murder, at a place within the exclusive jurisdiction of a State, as an offense against the authority of the United States, is certainly unnecessary, as no sane man will venture to advance such a proposition; nor will anyone who ever looked into the record of this case deny that the place where the homicide, which is the subject of inquiry, was committed is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State whose laws were violated by the perpetrator of the felonious act. None of these matters can be denied consistently with the truth of the facts as judicially known to every member of the court.

Offenses against the authority of the United States, defined by an Act of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution, are cognizable in the Circuit Courts by virtue of the 11th section of the Judiciary Act, whether committed upon the high seas or in any river, haven, basin or bay out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, or in any fort, dockyard, arsenal, armory or magazine, or any other place the exclusive jurisdiction of which is ceded to the United States. Cognizance in criminal cases may also be given to those courts, of offenses against the national authority, if properly defined by an Act of Congress, when they are committed in violation of such an Act passed pursuant to the 2d section of the 3d article of the Constitution, which extends the judicial power to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of Congress, and the treaties therein specified. 1 Whart. Cr. L. 7th ed., 174-180, inclusive.

Exceptional cases undoubtedly arise where it may properly be said that the citizen owes allegiance to two sovereigns, and may be liable to punishment for an infraction of the laws of either, where the same act is a transgression and defined offense under the laws of both. Thus, an assault on the marshal or hindering him in the execution of legal process is a high offense against the United States, for which the perpetrator is liable to punishment; and the same act may also be a gross breach of the peace of the State, if it results in a riot, assault or murder, and may subject the same person to the punishment prescribed by the state laws. Moore v. Ill., 14 How., 13.

Federal sovereignty, as well as the sovereignty of the States, is limited and restricted by the Constitution. Certain powers, legislative, executive and judicial, are possessed by each, independent of the other; and in the exercise of such powers all agree that they act as separately and independently of each other as if the line of division was traced by landmarks visible to the eye. Ableman v. Booth, 21 How., 506, 516 [62 U. S., XVI., 169, 173].

Both governments, though there be but one act, if the jurisdiction is dual, and the act charged is defined by the laws of each as an offense, may subject the offender to punishment; nor can he plead the conviction and sentence in one forum in bar to an indictment in the other, as the act committed was an offense against the authority of each. Fox v. Ohio, 5 How., 410; U. S. v. Marigold, 9 How., 560.

Passing and uttering counterfeit coin was the charge in the first case, and it appears that the defendant, having been convicted in the State Court, removed the cause into this court, and assigned for error that the court below had no jurisdiction of the offense; but this court held that the state law was valid, that offenders falling within the power of different sovereignties may be triable in each for the same act, and may properly be subjected to the penalties which each assigns to the perpetration of the act. When carefully examined, it will be found that the second case decides the same point in the same way; that the same act may, in certain cases, constitute an offense against both the State and the United States, and that it may draw to its commission the penalties denounced by each for the commission of the act. U. S. v. Amy, 14 Md., 149, n., per Taney, Ch. J.; Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 25.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it seems reasonable to conclude that Congress might define the malicious killing of a revenue collector with malice aforethought, while in the performance of his official duties, as murder, and might make provision for the trial and punishment of the offender, even though the homicide was committed at a place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the State. Congress may provide for the appointment of officers to collect the public revenue and, if so, they may pass constitutional laws for their protection; but Congress has not defined the act charged in the state indictment as an offense against the authority of the United States, nor does any Act of Congress prescribe the punishment to be inflicted for its commission, or declare what court shall have jurisdiction of the offense.

Ample power, it was conceded, was vested in Congress to provide for the punishment of murder committed by a person serving on board a public ship of war, wherever the ship might be; but, inasmuch as Congress had not defined the act of killing at that place as a crime nor affixed a punishment to it nor declared the court that should have jurisdiction of the offense, this court unanimously decided, Marshall, Ch. J., giving the opinion, that a murder committed on board a ship of war lying within the harbor of Boston was not cognizable in the Circuit Court of the District of Massachusetts, and the case was remanded with a certificate to that effect. U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336, 391.

Since that decision, the law has been considered as settled, that the circuit courts have no jurisdiction to try and sentence an offender, unless it appears that the offense charged is defined by an Act of Congress, and that the Act defining the offense, or some other Act, prescribes the punishment to be imposed, and specifies the court that shall have jurisdiction of the offense. U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat., 76.

Homicide resulting from the acts of a party in opposing an officer, employed in the enrollment of men for the military service during the late rebellion, was defined by an Act of Congress to be murder and punishable with death; and the same section enacted that the conviction of the party of that offense in the Circuit Court should not relieve him from liability for any crime committed by him against the laws of the State. 13 Stat. at L., p. 8, sec. 12; U. S. v. Gleason, 1 Woolw., 75; U. S. v. Gleason, 1 Woolw., 128.

Decided cases everywhere hold, that, unless Congress first defines the offense affixes the punishment and declares, in some way, the court that shall have jurisdiction of the accusation, the Circuit Court can neither try the accused nor sentence him to punishment. Even the power of Congress to define offenses and provide for the punishment of offenders is limited to such subjects and circumstances as relate and are peculiar to the Federal Government. Money may be coined by that government and, therefore, Congress may provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the national coin. Congress may establish postoffices and post-roads and, therefore, the Legislative Department may pass laws providing for the punishment of persons robbing the mails; but the Congress cannot enact laws for punishing persons for counterfeiting state bank issues, or for robbing express companies established by state authority. U. S. v. Ward, 1 Woolw., 17, 20.

Officers may be created by a law of Congress, and officers to execute the duties of the same may be appointed in the manner specified in the Constitution; and it is not doubted that Congress may pass laws for their protection, and for that purpose may define the offense of killing such an officer when in the discharge of his duties. Concede that, and it follows that if the punishment for the offense is affixed, and the jurisdiction is given to the Circuit Courts, those courts may try the offender, if legally indicted, and if duly convicted may sentence him to the punishment which the Act of Congress prescribes. Beyond all question, the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court over such an indictment would be complete; but the difficulty in the way of the prosecutor in this case is, that there is no Act of Congress defining the offense charged in the indictment, nor is there any provision in such law providing for the punishment of such an offense, or which gives the Circuit Court or any other Federal Court jurisdiction to try or sentence the offender.

Enough appears in these observations to show that, even if the indictment in this case had been found against a citizen of the State, for murdering the revenue officer while engaged in the discharge of his official duties, the Circuit Court would not, under existing laws, have jurisdiction to try and sentence the offender, for the reason that the offense is not defined by any Act of Congress, nor is there any Act of Congress giving such jurisdiction to the Circuit Courts.

Judicial authorities to that effect are numerous and decisive; but the principal question, in this case, is of a very different character, as the indictment is against the officer of the revenue for murdering a citizen of the State having in no way any official connection with the collection of the public revenue. Neither the Constitution nor the Acts of Congress give a revenue officer or any other officer of the United States an immunity to commit murder in a State, or prohibit the State from executing its laws for the punishment of the offender.

Unquestionable jurisdiction to try and punish offenders against the authority of the United States is conferred upon the Circuit and District Courts; but the Acts of Congress give those courts no jurisdiction whatever of offenses committed against the authority of a State. Criminal homicide, committed in a State, is an offense against the authority of the State, unless it was committed in a place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. Congress has never defined such an offense when committed within the territorial limits of a State under the circumstances described in the transcript; nor is there any pretense for the suggestion, either that the Circuit or District Courts have any jurisdiction of the case, or that there is any conflict of jurisdiction between the judicial authorities of the State and those of the United States.

Matters of fact are not in dispute; and it appears by the record that the prisoner, at the time mentioned in the petition, was duly indicted of the crime of willful murder, with malice aforethought, by the grand jury of the county where the homicide was committed, and that the indictment is still pending in the proper court of the State where it was filed. Adjudged cases are not necessary to show that no Federal Court created by Congress had jurisdiction of the offense, as the homicide was committed on land within the State, and not within any place over which the United States had exclusive jurisdiction. None of these matters can be successfully controverted; and, if not, then it follows that the exclusive jurisdiction of the offense was vested in the State Court, unless it can be held that the prisoner, merely because he was a deputy-collector of the revenue, is privileged to remove the state indictment found by the grand jury of the State into the Circuit Court for trial.

Nobody before ever pretended that such an offense ever was or could be defined by an Act of Congress as an offense against the federal authority, or that the Circuit Court or any other Federal Court has or ever had any jurisdiction of such a case to try or sentence such an offender for such an offense. Federal Courts have no common law jurisdiction in criminal cases, nor can such courts proceed to try or punish any offender, except when authorized by an Act of Congress, passed in pursuance of the Constitution. Pa. v. Wheeling Br. Co., 13 How., 518, 563; U. S. v. Worrall, 2 Dall., 384, 393; Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 26; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75, 98.

Murder is defined by the law of the State as follows: if any person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kill any reasonable creature, in being and under the peace of the State, with malice aforethought, either express or implied, such person shall be guilty of murder. 3 State Stat. 43. When perpetrated by means of poison, lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated killing, or in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate certain other enumerated crimes, it is murder in the first degree; and the petition of the prisoner, in this case, shows that the charge against him is murder in the first degree, as defined by the state statute.

Such an offense has never been defined by an Act of Congress when committed against the authority of the State, nor even when committed against the national authority, unless when the killing was perpetrated on navigable waters, out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, or in some place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal authority.

Crimes defined by an Act of Congress, and within the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts, may be divided into two general classes: (1) Such as are committed on the high seas or on navigable waters out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, or within some place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. (2) Such as relate to subjects committed to the charge of the Nation, which are comprised within the grant of judicial power over all cases arising under the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, and cases affecting ambassadors or other public ministers and consuls.

Underexisting laws the Circuit Courts have no jurisdiction whatever to re-examine the judgments of the State Courts in any case, civil or criminal, the power to exercise such a revision, even in civil cases involving federal questions, being vested exclusively in the Supreme Court. Neither the Supreme Court nor the Circuit Courts can re-examine the conviction, sentence or judgment of the District Court in a criminal case in any form, either by writ of error or appeal. Final judgments or decrees of a State Court falling within the condition specified in the 25th section of the Judiciary Act or the 2d section of the Act passed to amend the prior Act upon the subject, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. 14 Stat. at L., 386; R. S. sec. 709.

Appellate power in criminal cases decided in the District and Circuit Courts has not been vested in the Supreme Court by any Act of Congress, and of course the power of the court in respect to such cases pending in those tribunals is confined to certificates of division of opinion. U. S. v. More, 3 Cranch, 159; Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheat., 38; Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 193. Grant that; but federal judicial power extends to all cases in law or equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, and every such question may be re-examined by writ of error in the Supreme Court under the Act of Congress passed as a substitute for the before mentioned section of the Judiciary Act.

See 10 OTTO.

Cases which involve some one or more of those questions are often presented in the State Courts; and where that occurs and the decision is adverse to the party setting up the title, right, or exemption, whether the suit be a civil or criminal one, he may, when the case is determined by the highest court of the State, sue out a writ of error and remove the cause into the Supreme Court for re-examination. Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall., 590, 636 [87 U. S., XXII., 429, 444].

Writs of error of the kind are within every day's experience; but the rule is universal that, if the transcript when entered here does not present a federal question for re-examination, the case will be dismissed; which shows to a demonstration that it is only the questions which arise under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made under their authority which this court is authorized to re-examine.

Convincing support to that proposition is found in the countless cases which this court dismisses at every session, for the want of jurisdiction; the invariable rule being that, if the transcript does not exhibit some one of the questions specified in the section to which reference has been made, the case must be dismissed. 1 Stat. at L., 85, sec. 25; 14 Stat. at L., 386, sec. 2. Process to remove the judgment or decree from the State Court to the Supreme Court is not allowed as matter of right. Instead of that, the practice is to submit the record of the State Court to a Justice of the Supreme Court, whose duty it is to ascertain whether, in his opinion, any question cognizable in the appellate tribunal is involved and was decided by the proper State Court in a way to justify the allowance of the writ; and, if not, to refuse to direct that it shall be issued.

Two other differences between the writ of error to the State Court and the common law writ issued under the 22d section of the Judiciary Act deserve to be noticed. By the 22d section no case is re-examinable unless the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of a prescribed amount; but the section granting the writ of error to the State Court makes no reference to the value involved in the controversy, the condition being that some one of the questions specified in the section must have been raised and decided adversely to the applicant for the writ. They also differ in this: that the 22d section confines the appellate power to final judgments and decrees in civil cases, but the other provision, when the proper case is presented, extends to criminal as well as civil cases. Twitchell v. Com., 7 Wall., 321 [74 U. S., XIX., 223]; Phil. Prac., rev. ed., 144.

Where the matter in dispute is sufficient in value, the common law writ of error to the Circuit Court will lie in every case, if the judgment is final in the court to which the writ of error is addressed; but the writ of error to the State Court will not lie at all, unless the construction of some clause of the Constitution, or some Act of Congress, or treaty, is drawn in question, and the decision was adverse to the party setting up such right or title. If those conditions concur, the writ will lie, irrespective of the amount in dispute, provided it appears that the right or title set up depends on the construction of the Constitution, an Act of Congress, or some constitutional treaty. Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat., 117.

Power to re-examine such cases arises under that clause of the Constitution which provides that the judicial power of the United States shall extend to all cases in law or equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority. State Courts have no jurisdiction whatever, of cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, or consuls; nor of cases of admiralty and maritime cognizance. In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court, as the Constitution provides, "shall have original jurisdiction." In all other cases mentioned in the article of the Constitution granting judicial power, the provision is that "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

Early legislation of Congress gave the Circuit Courts original cognizance concurrent with the several States of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of a State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State. 1 Stat. at L., 78.

By the same section it is also provided to the effect, as before explained, that the Circuit Courts shall also have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as therein otherwise provided.

Jurisdiction, both of civil and criminal cases, is, beyond doubt, conferred upon the General Government by several of the clauses of the third article of the Constitution describing the judicial power, entirely exclusive of that possessed by the tribunals of the States; but it is equally clear that none of them, except the introductory clause of section 2 of that article, authorize any Federal Court to re-examine the judgment of a State Court in a criminal case, or to supersede the power of a State Court to exercise its lawful jurisdiction in such a case.

When the judicial system was organized under the Constitution, Congress provided in the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, that cases falling within that clause of the judicial article of the Constitution might be reversed or affirmed upon a writ of error, in the same manner and under the same regulations as if the judgment or decree had been rendered or passed in the Circuit Court. For eighty years that provision remained without any alteration; and the new provision, so far as respects the question before the court, is exactly the same as the original enactment. 1 Stat. at L., 85; 14 Stat. at L., 386.

Earnest opposition was made to that provision when it first went into operation, and it continued to increase until it culminated in two important cases reported in the volumes containing the decisions of the Supreme Court of that period. Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, 325; Cohens v. Va., 6 Pet., 264, 275.

Attempt is made in argument to support the proceeding in this case, by which the indictment was removed from the State Court into the Circuit Court, and the refusal of the Circuit Court to remand the same by the judgment of the Supreme Court in those two cases; but it is clear that those judgments do not afford any justification either for the proceeding or the refusal to remand, as both were transferred into the Supreme Court by writ of error under the 25th section of the Judiciary Act. Both of those cases were rightfully removed into the Supreme Court under that section of the Judiciary Act, as appears by the respective transcripts annexed to the writs of error, and as appears by the countless cases since decided by this court, and a great number, probably more than one hundred, standing on the docket of the present Term for re-examination.

Nor is it necessary to look beyond these cases to establish the proposition that they were re-examined under the 25th section of the Judiciary Act. Take the first case. It was an action of ejectment brought in a subordinate state court, for the recovery of a large parcel of land situated in that part of Virginia then called the Northern Neck. Service was made, and the defendant, Martin, appeared and pleaded the general issue upon the usual terms of confessing lease, entry and ouster. Title was claimed by the defendant under a royal grant made prior to the Revolution, and he claimed that his title was protected by the Treaty. Leave of court being obtained, the parties agreed as to the facts, and the subordinate court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Prompt appeal was taken by the defendant to the Court of Appeals, and the appellate court reversed the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction, and rendered judgment for the defendant.

Dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court of Appeals, the plaintiff sued out a writ of error under the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, and removed the cause into this court, where the judgment of the Court of Appeals was reversed. Pursuant to the usual course, this court sent down its mandate to the Court of Appeals, which that court refused to execute. No new proceedings took place, but a new writ of error was sued out, and the opinion of the court as reported is the one given in the case when brought here under the second writ of error.

Aid and comfort are attempted to be derived from certain remarks of the court in that case, as warranting the proceedings in the case before the court; but it is clear that they cannot have any such effect, as no such question was involved in the case and, of course, the remarks of the court must be understood as applicable only to the matter then in decision. Important federal questions were involved in the case; and we have the authority of the Justice who delivered the opinion for saying that the judgment drew in question and denied the validity of a statute of the United States, as appeared on the face of the record, and the court also held that the principles and rules of decision to be applied under the second writ of error were the same as under the first, when the mandate was sent down.

Comment upon the opinion of the court in the second case is hardly necessary, as it does not appear to contain anything relating to the present theory of the government, except that it proves, what everybody admits, that a writ of error under the 25th section of the Judiciary Act will lie, in a proper case and when the question is properly presented, as well in a criminal as in a civil case, irrespective of the amount in controversy.

Cohens was prosecuted in a state court for vending and selling lottery tickets contrary to the statute of the State. Regular process issued and he was arrested, and the parties entered into an agreed statement of facts. Authority was given to the City of Washington, under an Act of Congress, to permit the drawing of lotteries for effecting certain improvements in the city, and the defendant, besides pleading the general issue, pleaded a justification under the Act of Congress. Extended hearing was had, and the State Court rendered judgment against the defendant; and he sued out a writ of error under the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, and removed the cause into this court.

Due appearance was entered for the State, and her counsel moved to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction. Three causes were assigned in the motion for the dismissal of the writ of error: (1) That a State is the defendant. (2) That no writ of error lies from this court to a State Court. (3) That the Supreme Court had no right to review the judgment of the State Court, because neither the Constitution nor any law of the United States had been violated by the judgment of the State Court.

Extreme views were advanced on behalf of the State, among which was the proposition that the Constitution did not provide any tribunal for its final construction, and that in the last resort the courts of the respective States may exercise that power. Responding to that extraordinary proposition, Marshall, Ch. J., speaking for the court, said that jurisdiction is given to the courts of the Union in two classes of cases. In the first, their jurisdiction depends on the character of the cause, whoever may be the parties, and comprehends "All cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority;" and, he added, that that clause extends the jurisdiction to all the cases described, without making in its terms any exception whatever, and without any regard to the condition of the party.

His description of the second class is, that it comprehends controversies between two or more States, between a State and a citizen of another State, and between a State and foreign States, citizens or subjects. Of course the second proposition of the Chief Justice must be subject to what is ordained in the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution. 2 Story, Const., sec. 1724.

Original jurisdiction is vested in the Supreme Court in certain enumerated cases, and the Constitution also gives the same tribunal appellate jurisdiction in all other specified cases. Among those in which the jurisdiction must be exercised in the appellate form, are cases arising under the first clause of the 2d section, including such as relate to the construction of the Constitution, the Acts of Congress and treaties. If a State is a party, the jurisdiction is original, except when the cases arise under the first clause of the 2d section, in which event the jurisdiction is appellate, as in such a case the jurisdiction can only be practically exercised in that form. Where a State is a party, and the case is such as to admit of its originating in the Supreme Court, in the opinion of the Chief Justice as there expressed, the case ought to originate in the Supreme Court; but where, from the nature of the case, it cannot originate here, he holds that the proper construction of the clause is that the jurisdiction is appellate.

When correctly understood, it is clear that the second case cannot have any tendency whatever to support the proposition that an indictment for willful and felonious murder with malice aforethought, pending in a State Court and found by a grand jury of the State under a statute of the State, not involving any federal question, may be removed from the State Court into the Circuit Court for trial, merely because the prisoner at the time he committed the homicide was a deputy-collector of the internal revenue.

Such a proposition, unsupported as it is by any respectable judicial authority, is only calculated to excite amazement, as the case cited is a direct and conclusive authority the other way, showing to a demonstration that the Federal Courts cannot exercise any jurisdiction whatever in a criminal case properly pending in a State Court, unless it involves some question arising under the first clause of the 2d section of the article describing the judicial power conferred by the Constitution. 2 Story, Const., sec. 1721, 1740; 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 299; Sergeant, Const., 59; Curtis, Com., sec. 9; Pomeroy, Const., 2d ed., sec. 760.

Commentators on the Constitution seem to agree that Congress enacted the 25th section of the Judiciary Act in order to define the classes of cases originating in state tribunals to which the appellate power of the National Courts might extend by means of the writ of error, to preserve the supremacy and to secure the uniform construction of the Constitution, Acts of Congress and international treaties. Curtis, Com., sec. 210.

All agree that the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is defined and limited by the Constitution, and that it can neither be extended nor restricted by an Act of Congress; and it is equally undeniable that the appellate jurisdiction of that tribunal is granted, subject to such exceptions and regulations as the Congress may make, from which it follows that appellate jurisdiction can only be exercised by the Supreme Court in such cases and to such extent as the Acts of Congress authorize. Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dall., 321, 327; 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 324; Clarke v. Bazadone, 1 Cranch, 212.

Acts of Congress having been passed providing for the exercise of appellate judicial power, the established rule is that the affirmative description of the cases in which the jurisdiction may be exercised implies a negative on the exercise of such power in all other cases. Durosean v. U. S., 6 Cranch, 307, 314; U. S. v. More, 3 Cranch, 159, 170.

Legislative power is, undoubtedly, vested in Congress to pass laws to define and punish offenses against the authority of the United States; but it does not follow, by any means, that a prisoner charged with murder committed in violation of the laws of a State may claim to be tried in a Federal Circuit Court, or that a state indictment for such an offense constitutes a case arising under the Constitution or the laws of the United States, or that it can in any way become cognizable in such a tribunal; certainly not unless it can be removed there in pursuance of some Act of Congress defining the offense and providing for the trial and punishment of the offender. Persons charged with offenses against the authority of the States find ample guaranties of a fair trial in the laws of the States and the usages of the State Courts, and if the federal officers need more, it belongs to Congress to provide the remedy in some mode authorized by the Constitution. 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 340.

Adjudged cases admit that the power of removal instead of the writ of error, as prescribed in the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, may also be exerted when the subject-matter of the suit is such as to bring the case within the first clause of the 2d section of the article describing the federal judicial power. Frequent cases of the kind of a civil nature arise, and if they could not be transferred to the Circuit Courts by removal under proper regulations, it might often happen that the object intended to be accomplished by the appellate tribunal would be defeated. Appellate power in the cases mentioned in the provision before referred to is given in the Constitution, and it is left to Congress to enact the manner of its exercise. Curtis, Com., sec. 148; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, 349.

Whether the appellate power is employed by removal or writ of error, the right and extent of jurisdiction is the same; and in both the extent is limited by the constitutional grant, and cannot be extended beyond cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the Acts of Congress, and such treaties as are therein described.

Legislative provision of a restricted character for the removal of civil causes from the State Courts into the Circuit Courts was made by the Judiciary Act which was passed to organize our judicial system. 1 Stat. at L., 79. Since that many other Acts of Congress have been passed upon the subject, by which the power in civil cases has been very much enlarged. Proceedings were also prescribed by a later Act, not now in force, which authorized the officers appointed for the collection of the customs to remove any suit or prosecution commenced or pending against them in a State Court for acts done by them as such officers or under color of their respective offices, into the Circuit Court for trial; but the court is not furnished with any evidence that any such jurisdiction was ever exercised by the Circuit Court under that enactment in a criminal prosecution. 3 Stat. at L., 198.

Special reference is also made to the 2d section in the still later Act of Congress, usually denominated the Force Bill. 4 Stat. at L., 632. Jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts was by that section extended to all cases in law and equity arising under the revenue laws, for which other provisions are not already made by law, and provision was made to the effect that any revenue officer injured in his person or property, on account of any act done by him for the protection of the revenue, might maintain a suit for such damages in the Circuit Court for the district where the wrong-doer resided.

Property taken or detained by a revenue officer was declared to be irrepleviable, and that it should be deemed in the custody of the law and subject only to the orders and decrees of the Federal Court having jurisdiction of the same. Offenders who should dispossess or rescue, or attempt to dispossess or rescue, any property so taken or detained were to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished as therein directed.

Section 3 of the same Act empowered any such revenue officer to remove any suit or prosecution commenced against him in a State Court, on account of any act done by him for the protection of the revenue, into the proper Circuit Court, for trial in the mode therein prescribed.

Properly construed, the Act, as originally passed, was intended to furnish protection to the officers engaged in collecting import duties, and a subsequent Act provided that it should not be so construed as to apply to cases arising under the Internal Revenue Acts. Unlike that, the 50th section of the Act to Increase Duties on Imports extended the provisions of the Act to cases arising under the laws for the collection of internal duties. Had legislation stopped there, it would be correct to say that the Force Bill is still in force; but the still later Act, passed July 13, 1866, repealed that section altogether, subject to a proviso inapplicable to the present case. Philadelphia v. Collector, 5 Wall., 728 [72 U. S., XVIII., 615]; 13 Stat. at L., 241; 14 Stat. at L., 172; Hornthall v. Collector, 9 Wall., 560, 566 [76 U. S., XIX., 560, 562]; Assessors v. Osborne, 9 Wall., 567, 573 [76 U. S., XIX., 748, 750].

Much stress in the argument was laid upon the word "prosecution," found in the 3d section of the Act; but neither the written nor the oral argument furnished any evidence to show that any indictment found in the State where the difficulty arose which induced Congress to pass the Act was ever removed from the State Court into the Circuit Court for trial, and it is well known as a historical fact that no such removal of an indictment in that State was ever made. Civil cases pending in the tribunals of other States were, in several instances, removed under that Act into the Circuit Court, and were there adjudicated to final judgment; but there is no authentic account that any state indictment for an offense against the authority of a State was ever removed under that Act into the Circuit Court for trial or sentence.

Grave doubts are entertained whether the Congress, in the use of the word "prosecution," intended to extend the operation of the Act to such an indictment, as ample provision existed at the time of its passage for the re-examination of every question of federal cognizance arising on the trial of such an indictment, by a writ of error sued out pursuant to the authority given in the 25th section of the Judiciary Act. 1 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 219.

Litigations of a civil nature, even when the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court depends entirely upon the character of the parties, may, under regulations enacted by Congress, be removed from the State Court into the Circuit Court for trial; but there is no just pretense that a state indictment for an offense against the authority of the state can be removed from the State Court where found into the Circuit Court, for trial in any form of proceeding, unless the case, whether a suit at law or in equity, involves some question arising under the Constitution, the laws of Congress, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority. Com. v. Casey, 12 Allen, 214, 217.

Nothing is contained in the section which has any tendency to support the opposite construction, except the words "suit or prosecution;" and it should not be overlooked that it employs no words exclusively applicable to an indictment, and contains many expressions utterly repugnant to the theory that the proceedings to effect the removal of process were intended to extend to a criminal and indictable offense.

Every word of the section speaks a different intent, as is conclusively shown by the distinguished Judge who gave the opinion of the court in the case last cited. Confirmation of that view is also derived from the fact that every reported case, where the removal was effected under that Act, was a civil action, as appears from the following examples: Wood v. Matthews, 2 Blatchf., 370; Dennistown v. Draper, 5 Blatchf., 336; Murray v. Patrie, 5 Blatchf., 343; Pisk v. R. R. Co., 6 Blatchf., 362; S. C., 8 Blatchf., 243; Todd v. Fanfield, Ct. Com. Pl., 15 Ohio St., 377, 387.

Formal application to the Supreme Court of Maine was made under that Act of Congress to remove an indictment, for an offense against the authority of the State, into the Circuit Court of the district for trial, but the court unanimously denied the application, for the same reasons as those given by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case before cited. State v. Elder, 54 Me., 381.

Taken together, these two cases ought to be regarded as decisive that a state indictment for an offense against the authority of the State could not be removed from the State Court, under that Act of Congress, into the Circuit Court for trial. Subordinate Federal Courts find no other rules to guide them in the exercise of their functions than are to be found in the Acts of Congress, and they can have no other recourse than to those enactments to determine what constitutes an offense against the authority of the United States. Conk. Tr., 5th ed., 181. Offenses against the Nation are defined and their punishment prescribed by Acts of Congress. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 26.

Like power was given to the defendant, by the Act relating to habeas corpus, for the removal into the Circuit Courts, after judgment of suits or prosecutions commenced in a State Court against officers, civil or military, for acts done or committed by virtue of an order of the President, or pursuant to an Act of Congress. 12 Stat. at L., 756.

Pending an action in a State Court against a marshal, in which the verdict and judgment were, in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant instituted proceedings in the State Court for the removal of the cause into the Circuit Court, but the State Court refused to send up the case. Thereupon the Circuit Court issued an alternative mandamus to the State Court, which was followed by the peremptory process, when the plaintiff sued out a writ of error, and removed the cause into this court. Due hearing was had here, and this court unanimously held that so much of the Act as provided for the removal of a judgment in a State Court, in which the issue was tried by a jury, is not in pursuance of the Constitution, and is void. Justices v. Murray, 9 Wall., 274 [76 U. S., XIX., 658]; McKee v. Rains, 10 Wall., 22, 25 [77 U. S., XIX., 860, 861].

Governed by that rule of decision, it must be considered that the power of removal, when the facts have been found by a jury, cannot be exercised in such a case after judgment.

Statutory power to remove an action from a State Court into the Circuit, says Judge Story, if it exists before judgment because it is included in the appellate power, must exist after judgment for the same reason, as he held that the same objection exists as to the removal before judgment as after, and that both must stand or fall together. Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, 349; 2 Story, Const., sec. 1745.

None of the advocates of the power of removal as applied to criminal cases pretend that it may be exercised after judgment in any other mode than by a writ of error; from which it would seem to follow, if the authorities cited are good law, that a state indictment for an offense against the authority of the State cannot be removed at all into the Circuit Court for trial, nor into the Supreme Court, except by writ of error.

Section 643 of the Revised Statutes, under which the removal in this case was made, is a revision of the 67th section of the Act to Reduce Internal Taxation. 14 Stat. at L., 171. Officers appointed under that Act may, before trial, in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution is commenced against them in a State Court, remove the said suit or prosecution into the Circuit Court for trial. R. S., 643.

Further remarks in exposition of the enactment seem to be unnecessary, as it is clear that it is, in all essential respects, the same as its predecessors, some of which were passed and went into operation even before the actual close of the second War of Independence.

Considering the long period the provision has been in operation, it would naturally be expected, if it was intended by its framers to include state indictments pending in State Courts for offenses against the authority of the State, that the advocates of such a construction would be able to produce some authoritative exposition of the enactment to support such an improbable and extraordinary theory. Nothing of the kind is produced, and for the best possible reason, that no removal of such an indictment from a State Court into the Circuit Court for trial was ever before made in our judicial history.

Should it be suggested that a recent case, cited in the brief for the prisoner, is a precedent where a criminal case was removed from a State Court into the Circuit Court for trial, the answer to the suggestion is, that the case does not support the proposition, for several reasons: (1) Because the order of removal was never carried into effect. (2) Because nothing was done in the Circuit Court except to pass the order for removal. (3) Because the opinion of the court as reported admits that the Circuit Courts have no power to try offenses against the peace and dignity of the State, nor to control the State Courts in any such case. (4) Because the court admit in that case that no man charged with an offense against the authority of the State can defend himself by the fact that he is a federal officer. (5) Because it does not appear that the state indictment was ever transferred into the Circuit Court for trial. (6) Because it appears that the court giving the opinion in that case entirely overlooked the settled rule that the Circuit Courts have no jurisdiction of any act of an individual as an offense, unless the same is defined as such by an Act of Congress; nor unless some Act of Congress prescribes the punishment annexed to the commission of the offense, and designates the court to try and sentence the offender. (7) Because the indictment, for aught that appears to the contrary, is still pending in the State Court, the report failing to show that it has ever been in fact transferred into the Circuit Court. State v. Hoskins, 77 N.C., 530, 546.

Viewed in any light, the proposition to remove a state indictment for felony, from a State Court having jurisdiction of the case into the Circuit Court, where it is substantially admitted that the prisoner cannot be tried until Congress shall enact some mode of procedure, approaches so near to what seems to me both absurd and ridiculous, that I fear I shall never be able to comprehend the practical wisdom which it, doubtless, contains. Were the object to give felons an immunity to commit crime, and to provide a way for their escape from punishment, it seems to me that it would be difficult to devise any mode more effectual to that end than the theory embodied in that proposition.

Difficulties almost without number would arise if any attempt should be made to try such an indictment in a Circuit Court.

It was suggested at the argument that the Attorney-General of the State might appear in the Circuit Court as the public prosecutor, but he may not deem it any part of his duty to conduct criminal prosecutions in any other tribunals than those of the State from which he received his commission. Public prosecutions against the authority of the United States are in the Circuit Courts within the exclusive direction of the district attorneys, but they have nothing to do with prosecutions against the statutes, peace and dignity of a State. Confiscation Cases, 7 Wall., 454 [74 U. S., XIX., 196].

Service of process is often required in a criminal case, and the question would arise whether it should be made by the sheriff or marshal. Subpoenas must be issued, and the inquiry would arise whether they should be issued in the name of the State or of the President. Expenses must be incurred for the service of process and for the travel and attendance of witnesses, and it would at once become a question whether the amount would be chargeable to the United States or to the State, and if to the latter, may the State be compelled to respond to the claim?

Persons indicted of murder and other high crimes are entitled to a copy of the indictment and process to compel the attendance of witnesses, and the inquiry arises whether it would be the duty of the circuit court clerk or the clerk of the State Court to comply with that constitutional requirement. Under the state law the prisoner, if the charge is of felony punishable with death, is entitled to thirty-five challenges, whereas under the Act of Congress he is entitled only to twenty; and the inquiry would immediately arise, whether the right of the prisoner in that regard must be governed by the Act of Congress or the state law. 2 State Stat., sec. 4014; R. S., sec. 819.

By the common law it was error, for which the judgment might be reversed, if the clerk did not in capital felonies inquire of the prisoner before sentence whether he had anything to say why judgment of death should not be pronounced against him; and the question would arise whether this inquiry should be made by the clerk of the State Court whose laws were offended by his crime, or by the clerk of the Circuit Court to which the indictment had been transferred. 1 Chit. Cr. L., 700, 717.

Juries in the Federal Courts are not the judges of the law as well as the fact; consequently they are usually sworn in capital cases that they will well and truly try and true deliverance make of the prisoner they have in charge, according to the law and the evidence. Where such is the practice the question will arise whether the law referred to is federal or state law, or both combined, including the common law, as is suggested for the other rules of decision in conducting the trial.

State rules of evidence or of procedure, adopted since the passage of the Act of Congress organizing the Federal Courts, do not apply in criminal cases where the indictment is found in the circuit courts; and the question may immediately arise, which system of evidence and of procedure will furnish the rule of decision where the indictment is found in the State Court and the prisoner is tried in the Circuit Court. U. S. v. Reid, 12 How., 361, 365.

It was in view of these and many other equally embarrassing questions which might be suggested that induced Judge Story to remark, in one of his leading judgments upon the subject, that in respect to criminal prosecutions the difficulty seems admitted to be insurmountable, which is fully equivalent to a declaration that the power of removal in such a case does not exist. Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, 349.

Ingenious effort was made in the argument at the bar to show that such was not the meaning of the learned Justice when he gave utterance to that important qualification to his antecedent remarks in the same connection; but the effort is in vain, as the same learned Magistrate made the same admission in his valuable Commentaries on the Constitution, published nearly twenty years later. 2 Story, Const., 3d ed., sec. 1746.

Whether conclusive or not, it must be conceded that great weight is due to those admissions, and they are also much strengthened by a similar admission in the commentaries of another learned writer upon constitutional law. Curtis, Com., sec. 15.

Embarrassing questions, it is admitted, may arise in the exercise of such a peculiar and hitherto unknown jurisdiction; but the attempt is made to furnish a panacea for them all by referring to section 722 of the Revised Statutes, which seems to contemplate that where the laws of the United States are insufficient to define offenses and punish offenders, resort may be had to the common law as modified and changed by the State wherein the Federal Court exercising jurisdiction is held, both in the trial of the accused and in the infliction of punishment.

Examined in the most favorable light, the provision is a mere jumble of federal law, common law, and state law, consisting of incongruous and irreconcilable regulations, which, in legal effect, amounts to no more than a direction to a judge sitting in such a criminal trial to conduct the same as well as he can, in view of the three systems of criminal jurisprudence, without any suggestion whatever as to what he shall do in such an extraordinary emergency if he should meet a question not regulated by any one of the three systems.

Unless some better remedy than what is contained in that section can be found, it seems to me that it would be better to close the discussion without suggesting any, as it is plain that there is nothing in that enactment which will enable the judge sitting in such a criminal trial to solve any considerable number of the embarrassing questions, which it may well be expected will arise in the trial of such a criminal case.

State police, in its widest sense, comprehends the whole system of internal regulation by which the State seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against her authority, but also to establish for the intercourse of one citizen with another those rules of justice, morality and good conduct which are calculated to prevent a conflict of interests and to insure to everyone the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, as far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of equal rights by others. Public police, is, in effect, defined by the great commentator of the common law as the due regulation of domestic order, whereby the citizens of a State are bound to conform to the rules of propriety and good conduct, and to be moral, industrious and inoffensive in their respective stations. 4 Bl. Com., 162.

Police, says Bentham, is a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crimes or calamities; and he divides the subject into many heads, of which three only will be mentioned: (1) Police for the prevention of offenses. (2) Police for the prevention of calamities. (3) Police for the prevention of endemic diseases. Bentham's Works, title Offenses against Police, Vol. III., p. 169, Edinburgh ed.

Unlike the conceded right to appropriate private property when the public exigency requires it, the power in question is one, says Shaw, Ch. J., vested in the Legislature to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the State and of the subjects of the same. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush., 53, 85.

It extends, says another eminent Judge, to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort and quiet of all persons and of all property within the State, as exemplified in the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Thorpe v. R. R. Co., 27 Vt., 140, 147.

Ordinary regulations of police, says Cooley, have been left with the States, nor can it be taken from them and exercised under legislation by Congress. Nor can the National Government, through any of its departments or officers, assume any supervision of the police regulations of the States. All that the federal authority can do is to see that the States do not, under cover of this power, invade the sphere of national sovereignty.

ereignty, obstruct or impede the exercise of any authority which the Constitution has confided to the Nation, or deprive any citizen of rights guarantied by the Federal Constitution. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 715.

No direct general power over these objects, says Marshall, Ch. J., is granted to Congress and, consequently, they remain subject to state legislation. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 203.

Within state limits, says Chase, Ch. J., an Act of Congress upon the subject can have no constitutional operation. U. S. v. De Witt, 9 Wall., 41-45 [76 U. S., XIX., 593, 594].

Acts of Congress cannot properly supersede the police powers of the State, nor can the police powers of the State override the national authority, as the power of the State in that regard extends only to a just regulation of rights with a view to the due protection and enjoyment of all; and if the police law of the State does not deprive anyone of that which is justly and properly his own, it is obvious that its possession by the State and its exercise for the regulation of the actions of the citizens can never constitute an invasion of national jurisdiction or afford a basis for an appeal to the protection of the national authorities.

Startling propositions are advanced in argument; but it is not probable that anyone will contend that it would be competent for Congress to define as murder, against the authority of the United States, the homicide charged in the petition for removal, or that such act of homicide is now defined as murder by any Act of Congress now in operation or which was ever passed by the Legislative Department since the Constitution was adopted.

Had the officer been killed, the proposition of removal would be less astonishing than the one set forth in the petition. Judging from the petition, the indictment is against the officer for willfully, premeditatedly and deliberately killing and murdering the deceased, against the peace and dignity of the State. No special ground is set forth for the removal nor anything that can be tortured into a reason for withdrawing the case from the jurisdiction of the State Court, unless it be that the prisoner is a deputy-collector of the revenue, and that he alleges in the petition that the killing was in his own necessary self-defense to save his own life, which is a defense that can as well be made in the State Court as in the Circuit Court, unless it be assumed that a federal officer is entitled as a matter of right to transfer every indictment against him for crime, when found in a State Court, into a Federal Court for trial.

Persons accused of capital or otherwise infamous crimes must be indicted by a grand jury, and when the offense is committed in a State, they must be tried in the State where it was committed; but attention is not called to any article or section of the Constitution that forbids that a federal officer shall be tried in a State Court for murder committed in the open State, against the peace and dignity of the State, and contrary to the form of the state statute defining the offense.

Large concessions were made by the States to the United States, but they never ceded to the National Government their police powers or the power to define and punish offenses against their authority, as admitted by all courts and all commentators upon the Constitution, which leads me to the following conclusions: (1) That the section of the Revised Statutes in question does not authorize the removal of a state indictment for an offense against the laws of the State from the State Court where it is pending into the Circuit Court of the United States for trial. (2) That if it does purport to confer that authority, it is unconstitutional and void. (3) That the answer to each of the three questions certified here from the Circuit Court should be in the negative.

Also dissenting, Mr. Justice Field.

TAYLOR STRAUDER, Plff. in. Err.,

v.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Constitutional amendment—privileges of citizenship—colored race—W. Virginia law—discrimination—removal of suit.

*1. The Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution considered, and held to be one of a series of constitutional provisions having a common purpose, namely: to secure to a race recently emancipated and held in slavery through many generations, all the civil rights that the superior race enjoy, and to give to them the protection of the General Government, in the enjoyment of such rights, whenever they should be denied by the States. Whether it had other, and if so what, purposes, not decided.

2. The amendment not only gave citizenship and the privileges of citizenship to persons of color, but it denied to any State the power to withhold from them the equal protection of the laws, and invested Congress with power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce its provisions.

3. The words of the amendment, although prohibitory, contain a necessary implication of a positive immunity, or right, most valuable to the colored race—the right to exemption from unfriendly legislation against them distinctively as colored—exemption from discriminations, imposed by public authority, implying legal inferiority in civil society, lessening the security of their rights, and which are steps towards reducing them to the condition of a subject race.

4. The Statute of West Virginia, which, in effect, singles out and denies to colored citizens the right and privilege of participating in the administration of the law, as jurors, because of their color, though qualified in all other respects, is, practically, a brand upon them affixed by the law, and is a discrimination against that race, forbidden by the amendment. It is a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the race thus excluded, since the constitution of juries is a very essential part of the protection which the trial by jury is intended to secure. The very idea of a jury is a body of men composed of the peers or equals of the person whose rights it is selected or summoned to determine; that is, of persons having the same legal status in society as that which he holds.

5. Where, as here, the state statute secures to every white man the right of trial by jury selected from and without discrimination against his race, and at the same time permits or requires such discrimination against the colored man because of his race, the latter is not equally protected by law with the former.

6. Section 641 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that "When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any State Court, for any cause whatsoever, against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State, or in the part of the State where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, such suit or prosecution may, upon the petition of such defendant, filed in said State Court at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, stating the facts and verified by oath, be removed for trial into the next Circuit Court to be held in the district where it is pending," considered, and held not to be in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

Argued Oct. 21, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. Willoughby, Geo. O. Davenport and Chas. Devens, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Robert White and Jas. W. Green, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error, a colored man, was indicted for murder in the Circuit Court of Ohio County, in West Virginia, on the 20th of October, 1874, and upon trial was convicted and sentenced. The record was then removed to the Supreme Court of the State, and there the judgment of the Circuit Court was affirmed. The present case is a writ of error to that court, and it is now, in substance, averred that at the trial in the State Court the defendant (now plaintiff in error) was denied rights to which he was entitled under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In the Circuit Court of the State, before the trial of the indictment was commenced, the defendant presented his petition, verified by his oath, praying for a removal of the cause into the Circuit Court of the United States, assigning, as ground for the removal, that "By virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia no colored man was eligible to be a member of the grand jury or to serve on a petit jury in the State; that white men are so eligible, and that by reason of his being a colored man and having been a slave, he had reason to believe and did believe, he could not have the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings in the State of West Virginia for the security of his person as is enjoyed by white citizens, and that he had less chance of enforcing in the courts of the State his rights on the prosecution, as a citizen of the United States; and that the probabilities of a denial of them to him as such citizen on every trial which might take place on the indictment in the courts of the State were much more enhanced than if he was a white man." This petition was denied by the State Court, and the cause was forced to trial.

Motions to quash the venire, "Because the law under which it was issued was unconstitutional, null and void," and successive motions to challenge the array of the panel, for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, were then made, all of which were overruled and made by exceptions parts of the record.

The law of the State to which reference was made in the petition for removal and in the several motions was enacted on the 12th of March, 1873 (Acts of 1872-73, p. 102), and it is as follows: "All white male persons who are twenty-one years of age and who are citizens of this State shall be liable to serve as jurors, except as herein provided." The persons excepted are state officials.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice Strong.

In this court, several errors have been assigned, and the controlling questions underlying them all are: first, whether by the Constitution and laws of the United States, every citizen of the United States has a right to a trial of an indictment against him by a jury selected and impaneled without discrimination against his race or color, because of race or color; and, second, if he has such a right, and is denied its enjoyment by the State in which he is indicted, may he cause the case to be removed into the Circuit Court of the United States?

It is to be observed that the first of these questions is not whether a colored man, when an indictment has been preferred against him, has a right to a grand or a petit jury composed in whole or in part of persons of his own race or color; but it is whether, in the composition or selection of jurors by whom he is to be indicted or tried, all persons of his race or color may be excluded by law, solely because of their race or color, so that by no possibility can any colored man sit upon the jury.

The questions are important, for they demand a construction of the recent amendments of the Constitution. If the defendant has a right to have a jury selected for the trial of his case without discrimination against all persons of his race or color, because of their race or color, the right, if not created, is protected by those amendments and the legislation of Congress under them. The 14th Amendment ordains that "All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any laws which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

This is one of a series of constitutional provisions having a common purpose, namely: securing to a race recently emancipated, a race that through many generations had been held in slavery, all the civil rights that the superior race enjoy. The true spirit and meaning of the Amendments, as we said in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 36 [38 U. S., XXI., 394], cannot be understood without keeping in view the history of the times when they were adopted, and the general objects they plainly sought to accomplish. At the time when they were incorporated into the Constitution, it required little knowledge of human nature to anticipate that those who had long been regarded as an inferior and subject race would, when suddenly raised to the rank of citizenship, be looked upon with jealousy and positive dislike, and that state laws might be enacted or enforced to perpetuate the distinctions that had before existed. Discriminations against them had been habitual. It was well known that, in some States, laws making such discriminations then existed, and others might well be expected. The colored race, as a race, was abject and ignorant, and in that condition was unfitted to command the respect of those who had superior intelligence. Their training had left them mere children, and as such they needed the protection which a wise government extends to those who are unable to protect themselves. They especially needed protection against unfriendly action in the States where they were resident. It was in view of these considerations the 14th Amendment was framed and adopted. It was designed to assure to the colored race the enjoyment of all the civil rights that under the law are enjoyed by white persons, and to give to that race the protection of the General Government, in that enjoyment, whenever it should be denied by the States. It not only gave citizenship and the privileges of citizenship to persons of color, but it denied to any State the power to withhold from them the equal protection of the laws, and authorized Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. To quote the language used by us in the Slaughter-House Cases, "No one can fail to be impressed with the one pervading purpose found in all the Amendments, lying at the foundation of each, and without which none of them would have been suggested; we mean the freedom of the slave race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the newly made freeman and citizen from the oppressions of those who had formerly exercised unlimited dominion over them." So again; "The existence of laws in the States where the newly emancipated negroes resided, which discriminated with gross injustice and hardship against them as a class, was the evil to be remedied, and by it [the 14th Amendment] such laws were forbidden. If, however, the States did not conform their laws to its requirements, then, by the 5th section of the article of amendment, Congress was authorized to enforce it by suitable legislation." And it was added, "We doubt very much whether any action of a State, not directed by way of discrimination against the negroes, as a class, will ever be held to come within the purview of this provision."

If this is the spirit and meaning of the Amendment, whether it means more or not, it is to be construed liberally, to carry out the purposes of its framers. It ordains that no State shall make or enforce any laws which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States (evidently referring to the newly made citizens, who, being citizens of the United States, are declared to be also citizens of the State in which they reside). It ordains that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. What is this but declaring that the law in the States shall be the same for the black as for the white; that all persons, whether colored or white, shall stand equal before the laws of the States and, in regard to the colored race, for whose protection the Amendment was primarily designed, that no discrimination shall be made against them by law because of their color? The words of the Amendment, it is true, are prohibitory, but they contain a necessary implication of a positive immunity, or right, most valuable to the colored race—the right to exemption from unfriendly legislation against them distinctively as colored; exemption from legal discriminations, implying inferiority in civil society, lessening the security of their enjoyment of the rights which others enjoy, and discriminations which are steps towards reducing them to the condition of a subject race.

That the West Virginia Statute respecting juries—the statute that controlled the selection of the grand and petit jury in the case of the plaintiff in error—is such a discrimination ought not to be doubted. Nor would it be if the persons excluded by it were white men. If in those States where the colored people constitute a majority of the entire population a law should be enacted excluding all white men from jury service, thus denying to them the privilege of participating equally with the blacks in the administration of justice, we apprehend no one would be heard to claim that it would not be a denial to white men of the equal protection of the laws. Nor if a law should be passed excluding all naturalized Celtic Irishmen, would there be any doubt of its inconsistency with the spirit of the Amendment. The very fact that colored people are singled out and expressly denied by a statute all right to participate in the administration of the law, as jurors, because of their color, though they are citizens and may be in other respects fully qualified, is practically a brand upon them, affixed by the law; an assertion of their inferiority, and a stimulant to that race prejudice which is an impediment to securing to individuals of the race that equal justice which the law aims to secure to all others.

The right to a trial by jury is guaranteed to every citizen of West Virginia by the Constitution of that State, and the constitution of juries is a very essential part of the protection such a mode of trial is intended to secure. The very idea of a jury is a body of men composed of the peers or equals of the person whose rights it is selected or summoned to determine; that is, of his neighbors, fellows, associates, persons having the same legal status in society as that which he holds. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, says: "The right of trial by jury, or the country, is a trial by the peers of every Englishman, and is the grand bulwark of his liberties, and is secured to him by the Great Charter." It is also guarded by statutory enactments intended to make impossible what Mr. Bentham called "packing juries." It is well known that prejudices often exist against particular classes in the community, which sway the judgment of jurors, and which, therefore, operate in some cases to deny to persons of those classes the full enjoyment of that protection which others enjoy. Prejudice in a local community is held to be a reason for a change of venue. The framers of the constitutional Amendment must have known full well the existence of such prejudice and its likelihood to continue against the manumitted slaves and their race, and that knowledge was, doubtless, a motive that led to the Amendment. By their manumission and citizenship the colored race became entitled to the equal protection of the laws of the States in which they resided; and the apprehension that, through prejudice, they might be denied that equal protection, that is, that there might be discrimination against them, was the inducement to bestow upon the National Government the power to enforce the provision that no State shall deny to them the equal protection of the laws. Without the apprehended existence of prejudice that portion of the Amendment would have been unnecessary, and it might have been left to the States to extend equality of protection.

In view of these considerations, it is hard to see why the Statute of West Virginia should not be regarded as discriminating against a colored man when he is put upon trial for an alleged criminal offense against the State. It is not easy to comprehend how it can be said that while every white man is entitled to a trial by a jury selected from persons of his own race or color, or, rather, selected without discrimination against his color, and a negro is not, the latter is equally protected by the law with the former. Is not protection of life and liberty against race or color prejudice, a right, a legal right, under the constitutional Amendment? And how can it be maintained that compelling a colored man to submit to a trial for his life by a jury drawn from a panel from which the State has expressly excluded every man of his race, because of color alone, however well qualified in other respects, is not a denial to him of equal legal protection?

We do not say that, within the limits from which it is not excluded by the Amendment, a State may not prescribe the qualifications of its jurors, and in so doing make discriminations. It may confine the selection to males, to freeholders, to citizens, to persons within certain ages, or to persons having educational qualifications. We do not believe the 14th Amendment was ever intended to prohibit this. Looking at its history, it is clear it had no such purpose. Its aim was against discrimination because of race or color. As we have said more than once, its design was to protect an emancipated race, and to strike down all possible legal discriminations against those who belong to it. To quote further from 16 Wall., [supra]: "In giving construction to any of these articles [Amendments], it is necessary to keep the main purpose steadily in view." "It is so clearly a provision for that race and that emergency, that a strong case would be necessary for its application to any other." We are not now called upon to affirm or deny that it had other purposes.

The 14th Amendment makes no attempt to enumerate the rights it designed to protect. It speaks in general terms, and those are as comprehensive as possible. Its language is prohibitory; but every prohibition implies the existence of rights and immunities, prominent among which is an immunity from inequality of legal protection, either for life, liberty or property. Any state action that denies this immunity to a colored man is in conflict with the Constitution.

Concluding, therefore, that the Statute of West Virginia, discriminating in the selection of jurors, as it does against negroes because of their color, amounts to a denial of the equal protection of the laws to a colored man when he is put upon trial for an alleged offense against the State, it remains only to be considered whether the power of Congress to enforce the provisions of the 14th Amendment by appropriate legislation is sufficient to justify the enactment of section 641 of the Revised Statutes.

A right or an immunity, whether created by the Constitution or only guaranteed by it, even without any express delegation of power, may be protected by Congress. Prigg v. Com., 16 Pet., 539. So in U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S., 214 [XXIII., 563], it was said by the Chief Justice of this court: "Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and manner of the protection may be such as Congress in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular right to be protected." But there is express authority to protect the rights and immunities referred to in the 14th Amendment, and to enforce observance of them by appropriate congressional legislation. And one very efficient and appropriate mode of extending such protection and securing to a party the enjoyment of the right or immunity, is a law providing for the removal of his case from a State Court, in which the right is denied by the state law, into a Federal Court, where it will be upheld. This is an ordinary mode of protecting rights and immunities conferred by the Federal Constitution and laws. Section 641 is such a provision. It enacts that "When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any State Court for any cause whatsoever against any person who is denied, or cannot enforce, in the judicial tribunals of the State, or in the part of the State where such prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, such suit or prosecution may, upon the petition of such defendant, filed in said State Court at any time before the trial, or final hearing of the case, stating the facts, and verified by oath, be removed before trial into the next Circuit Court of the United States to be held in the district where it is pending."

This Act plainly has reference to sections 1977 and 1978 of the statutes which partially enumerate the rights and immunities intended to be guaranteed by the Constitution, the first of which declares that "All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens; and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses and exactions of every kind, and to no other." This Act puts in the form of a statute what had been substantially ordained by the constitutional amendment. It was a step towards enforcing the constitutional provisions. Section 641 was an advanced step, fully warranted, we think, by the 5th section of the 14th Amendment.

We have heretofore considered and affirmed the constitutional power of Congress to authorize the removal from State Courts into the Circuit Courts of the United States, before trial, of criminal prosecutions for alleged offenses against the laws of the State, when the defense presents a federal question, or when a right under the Federal Constitution or laws is involved. Tennessee v. Davis [ante, 648]. It is unnecessary now to repeat what we there said.

That the petition of the plaintiff in error, filed by him in the State Court before the trial of his case, made a case for removal into the Federal Circuit Court, under section 641, is very plain, if, by the constitutional Amendment and section 1977 of the Revised Statutes, he was entitled to immunity from discrimination against him in the selection of jurors, because of their color, See 10 OTTO.

as we have endeavored to show that he was. It set forth sufficient facts to exhibit a denial of that immunity, and a denial by the statute law of the State.

There was error, therefore, in proceeding to the trial of the indictment against him after his petition was filed, as also in overruling his challenge to the array of the jury, and in refusing to quash the panel.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of West Virginia is reversed and the case is remitted, with instructions to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court of Ohio County.

Ex Parte; IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, Petitioner.

(See S. C., "Virginia v. Rives," 10 OTTO, 313-338.)

Removal of suit—colored race—Fourteenth Amendment—equal protection of laws—denial of rights—Virginia law—mixed jury—mandamus.

*1. Section 641 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the removal into the Federal Court of any civil suit or prosecution "Commenced in any State Court, for any cause whatsoever, against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State, or in the part of the State where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States," etc., examined in connection with sections 1977 and 1978. Held, that the object of these statutes, as of the Constitution which authorized them, was to place the colored race, in respect to civil rights, upon a level with whites. They made the rights and responsibilities, civil and criminal, of the two races exactly the same.

2. The prohibitions of the 14th Amendment have reference to state action exclusively, and not to any action of private individuals. It is the State which is prohibited from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws and, consequently, the statutes partially enumerating what civil rights colored men shall enjoy equally with white persons, founded as they are upon the amendment, are intended for protection against state infringement of those rights. Section 641 was also intended for their protection against state action, and against that alone.

3. A State may act through different agencies, either by its legislative, its executive or its judicial authorities, and prohibitions of the Amendment extend to all actions of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another. Congress, by virtue of the 5th section of the 14th Amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the Legislative, the Executive, or the Judicial Department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right, that is, enforce its recognition, by removing the case from a state court, in which it is denied, into a Federal Court, where it will be acknowledged.

4. But the 14th Amendment is broader than the statute which authorizes the removal. Section 641 does not apply to all cases in which equal protection of the laws may be denied to a defendant. The removal authorized by the statute is a removal before trial or final hearing. But the violation of the constitutional provision, when made by the judicial action of a State, may be, and generally will be, after the trial or final hearing has commenced. It is during the trial or final hearing the defendant is denied equality of legal protection, and not until then. Nor can he know till then that the equal protection of the laws will not be extended to him. Certainly not until then can he affirm that it is denied. To such a case, that is, to judicial infractions of the constitutional Amendment after the trial has commenced, section 641 has no applicability. It was not intended to reach such cases. They were left to the revisory power of this court.

5. Therefore, the denial or inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of a State, rights secured to a defendant by any law providing for the equal civil rights of all persons, citizens of the United States, of which section 641 speaks, is primarily, if not exclusively, a denial of such rights, or an inability to enforce them, resulting from the Constitution or laws of the State, rather than a denial made manifest at the trial of the case. In other words, the statute has reference to a legislative denial or an inability resulting from it. By express requirement of the statute, the party must set forth, under oath, the facts upon which he bases his claim to have his case removed, not merely his belief that he cannot enforce his rights at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. But, in the absence of constitutional or legislative impediment, he cannot swear before his case comes to trial, that his enjoyment of his civil rights is denied to him.

6. The Constitution and laws of Virginia do not exclude colored citizens from service on juries. The petition for removal did not present a case for removal under the first section.

7. The defendant moved in the State Court that the venire be so modified that one third or some portion of the jury should be composed of his own race. The denial of that motion was not a denial of a right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or by any statute, or by the 14th Amendment. A mixed jury in a particular case is not essential to the equal protection of the laws. It is a right to which any colored man is entitled, that, in the selection of jurors to pass upon his life, liberty or property, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against them, because of his color. But that is a different thing from that which was claimed, as of right, and denied in the State Court, viz.: a right to have the jury composed in part of colored men.

8. A mandamus does not lie, to control judicial discretion, except when that discretion has been abused. But it may be used as a remedy where the case is outside of that discretion, and outside of the jurisdiction of the court, or officer to which or to whom the writ is directed. One of its peculiar and more common uses is to restrain inferior courts, and keep them within their lawful bounds.

[No. 3, Orig.]

Argued Oct. 16, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

PETITION for mandamus.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Jas. G. Field and W. J. Robertson, for petitioner.

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., and W. Willoughby, contra.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented in this case arise out of the following facts:

Burwell Reynolds and Lee Reynolds, two colored men, were jointly indicted for murder in the County Court of Patrick County, Virginia, at its January Term, 1878. The case having been removed into the Circuit Court of the State, and brought on for trial, the defendants moved the court that the venire, which was composed entirely of the white race, be modified so as to allow one third thereof to be composed of colored men. This motion was overruled on the ground that the court "had no authority to change the venire, it appearing (as the record stated) to the satisfaction of the court that the venire had been regularly drawn from the jury-box according to law." Thereupon the defendants, before the trial, filed their petition, duly verified, praying for a removal of the case into the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia. This petition represented that the petitioners were negroes, aged respectively 17 and 19 years, and that the man whom they were charged with having murdered was a white man. It further alleged that the right secured to the petitioners by the law providing for the equal civil rights of all the citizens of the United States was denied to them in the judicial tribunals of the County of Patrick, of which county they are natives and citizens; that by the laws of Virginia all male citizens, twenty-one years of age, and not over sixty, who are entitled to vote and hold office under the Constitution and laws of the State, are made liable to serve as jurors; that this law allows the right, as well as requires the duty, of the race to which the petitioners belong to serve as jurors; yet that the grand jury who found the indictment against them, as well as the jurors summoned to try them, were composed entirely of the white race. The petitioners further represented that they had applied to the Judge of the court, to the prosecuting attorney and to his assistant counsel, that a portion of the jury by which they were to be tried should be composed in part of competent jurors of their own race and color, but that this right had been refused them. The petition further alleged that a strong prejudice existed in the community of the county against them, independent of the merits of the case, and based solely upon the fact that they are negroes, and that the man they were accused of having murdered was a white man. From that fact alone they were satisfied they could not obtain an impartial trial before a jury exclusively composed of the white race. The petitioners further represented that their race had never been allowed the right to serve as jurors, either in civil or criminal cases, in the County of Patrick, in any case, civil or criminal, in which their race had been in any way interested. They, therefore, prayed that the prosecution might be removed into the Circuit Court of the United States. The State Court denied this prayer, and proceeded with the trial, when each of the defendants was convicted. The verdicts and judgments were, however, set aside, and a motion for a removal of the case was renewed on the same petition, and again denied. The defendants were then tried again separately. One was convicted and sentenced, and a bill of exceptions was duly signed and made part of the record. In the other case the jury disagreed.

In this stage of the proceedings, a copy of the record was obtained, the cases were, upon petition, ordered to be docketed in the Circuit Court of the United States, Nov. 18, 1878, which was at its next succeeding Term after the first application for removal, and a writ of habeas corpus cum causa was issued, by virtue of which the defendants were taken from the jail of Patrick County into the custody of the United States Marshal, and they are now held in jail subject to the control of that court.

No motion has been made in the Circuit Court to remand the prosecutions to the State Court, but the Commonwealth of Virginia has applied to this court for a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding the Judge of the District Court of the Western District of Virginia, the Hon. Alexander Rives, to cause to be redelivered by the marshal of said district to the jailer of Patrick County the bodies of the said Lee and Burwell Reynolds, to be dealt with according to the laws of the said Commonwealth. The rule has been granted, and Judge Rives has returned an answer setting forth substantially the facts hereinbefore stated, and averring that the indictments were removed into the Circuit Court of the United States by virtue of section 641 of the Revised Statutes.

If the petition filed in the State Court before trial, and duly verified by the oath of the defendants, exhibited a sufficient ground for a removal of the prosecutions into the Circuit Court of the United States, they were, in legal effect, thus removed, and the writ of habeas corpus was properly issued. All proceedings in the State Court subsequent to the removals were coram non jure and absolutely void. This, by virtue of the express declaration of section 641 of the Revised Statutes, which enacts that, "Upon the filing of such petition, all further proceedings in the State Court shall cease, and shall not be resumed except as hereinafter provided." In Gordon v. Longest, 16 Pet., 97, it was ruled by this court that when an application to remove a cause (removable) is made in proper form, and no objection is made to the facts upon which it is founded, "It is the duty of the State Court to 'proceed no further in the cause,' and every step subsequently taken in the exercise of jurisdiction in the case, whether in the same court or in the Court of Appeals is coram non jure." To the same effect is Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall., 214 [86 U.S., XXII., 68].

It is, therefore, a material inquiry whether the petition of the defendants set forth such facts as made a case for removal, and consequently arrested the jurisdiction of the State Court and transferred it to the Federal Court. Section 641 of the Revised Statutes provides for a removal "When any civil suit or prosecution is commenced in any State Court, for any cause whatsoever, against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State, or in the part of the State where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States," etc. It declares that such a case may be removed before trial or final hearing.

Was the case of Lee and Burwell Reynolds such an one? Before examining their petition for removal, it is necessary to understand clearly the scope and meaning of this Act of Congress. It rests upon the 14th Amendment of the Constitution and the legislation to enforce its provisions. That Amendment declares that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. It was in pursuance of these constitutional provisions that the civil rights statutes were enacted. Secs. 1977, 1978, R. S. They enact that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses and exactions of every kind, and to no other. Section 1978 enacts that all citizens of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property. The plain object of these statutes, as of the Constitution which authorized them, was to place the colored race, in respect of civil rights, upon a level with whites. They made the rights and responsibilities, civil and criminal, of the two races exactly the same.

The provisions of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution we have quoted all have reference to state action exclusively, and not to any action of private individuals. It is the State which is prohibited from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws and, consequently, the statutes partially enumerating what civil rights colored men shall enjoy equally with white persons, founded as they are upon the Amendment, are intended for protection against state infringement of those rights. Section 641 was also intended for their protection against state action, and against that alone.

It is, doubtless, true, that a State may act through different agencies, either by its legislative, its executive or its judicial authorities; and the prohibitions of the Amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another. Congress, by virtue of the 5th section of the 14th Amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the Legislative, the Executive or the Judicial Department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right, that is, enforce its recognition, by removing the case from a State Court in which it is denied, into a Federal Court where it will be acknowledged. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt. Removal of cases from State Courts into courts of the United States has been an acknowledged mode of protecting rights ever since the foundation of the government. Its constitutionality has never been seriously doubted. But it is still a question whether the remedy of removal of cases from State Courts into the courts of the United States, given by section 641, applies to all cases in which equal protection of the laws may be denied to a defendant. And clearly it does not. The constitutional Amendment is broader than the provisions of that section. The statute authorizes a removal of the case only before trial, not after a trial has commenced. It does not, therefore, embrace many cases in which a colored man's right may be denied. It does not embrace a case in which a right may be denied by judicial action during the trial, or by discrimination against him in the sentence, or in the mode of executing the sentence. But the violation of the constitutional provisions, when made by the judicial tribunals of a State, may be, and generally will be, after the trial has commenced. It is then, during or after the trial, that denials of a defendant's right by judicial tribunals occur. Not often until then. Nor can the defendant know until then that the equal protection of the laws will not be extended to him. Certainly, until then he cannot affirm that it is denied, or that he cannot enforce it, in the judicial tribunals.

It is obvious, therefore, that to such a case, that is, a judicial infraction of the constitutional inhibitions, after trial or final hearing has commenced, section 641 has no applicability. It was not intended to reach such cases. It left them to the revisory power of the higher courts of the State and ultimately to the review of this court. We do not say that Congress could not have authorized the removal of such a case into the Federal Courts at any stage of its proceeding, whenever a ruling should be made in it denying the equal protection of the laws to the defendant. Upon that subject it is unnecessary to affirm anything. It is sufficient to say now that section 641 does not.

It is evident, therefore, that the denial or inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of a State, rights secured to a defendant by any law providing for the equal civil rights of all persons citizens of the United States, of which section 641 speaks, is primarily, if not exclusively, a denial of such rights, or an inability to enforce them, resulting from the Constitution or laws of the State, rather than a denial first made manifest at the trial of the case. In other words, the statute has reference to a legislative denial or an inability resulting from it. Many such cases of denial might have been apprehended, and some existed. Colored men might have been, as they had been, denied a trial by jury. They might have been excluded by law from any jury summoned to try persons of their race, or the law might have denied to them the testimony of colored men in their favor, or process for summoning witnesses. Numerous other illustrations might be given. In all such cases a defendant can affirm, on oath, before trial, that he is denied the equal protection of the laws or equality of civil rights. But in the absence of constitutional or legislative impediments, he cannot swear before his case comes to trial that his enjoyment of all his civil rights is denied to him. When he has only an apprehension that such rights will be withheld from him when his case shall come to trial, he cannot affirm that they are actually denied, or that he cannot enforce them. Yet such an affirmation is essential to his right to move his case. By the express requirement of the statute, his petition must set forth the facts upon which he bases his claim to have his case removed, and not merely his belief that he cannot enforce his rights at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. The statute was not, therefore, intended as a corrective of errors or wrongs committed by judicial tribunals in the administration of the law at the trial.

The petition of the two colored men for the removal of their case into the Federal Court does not appear to have made any case for removal, if we are correct in our reading of the Act of Congress. It did not assert, nor is it claimed now, that the Constitution or laws of Virginia denied to them any civil right, or stood in the way of their enforcing the equal protection of the laws. The law made no discrimination against them because of their color, nor any discrimination at all. The complaint is, that there were no colored men in the jury that indicted them, nor in the petit jury summoned to try them. The petition expressly admitted that by the laws of the State all male citizens twenty-one years of age and not over sixty, who are entitled to vote and hold office under the Constitution and laws thereof, are made liable to serve as jurors. And it affirms (what is undoubtedly true) that this law allows the right, as well as requires the duty, of the race to which the petitioners belong to serve as jurors. It does not exclude colored citizens.

Now, conceding as we do, and as we endeavored to maintain in the case of Strander v. West Va., just decided [ante, 664], that discrimination by law against the colored race, because of their color, in the selection of jurors, is a denial of the equal protection of the laws to a negro when he is put upon trial for an alleged criminal offense against a State, the laws of Virginia make no such discrimination. If, as was alleged in the argument, though it does not appear in the petition or record, the officer to whom was intrusted the selection of the persons from whom the juries for the indictment and trial of the petitioners were drawn, disregarding the Statute of the State, confined his selection to white persons, and refused to select any persons of the colored race, solely because of their color, his action was a gross violation of the spirit of the State's laws, as well as of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1875, 18 Stat. at L. 335, which prohibits and punishes such discrimination. He made himself liable to punishment at the instance of the State and under the laws of the United States. In one sense, indeed, his act was the act of the State, and was prohibited by the constitutional Amendment. But, inasmuch as it was a criminal misuse of the state law, it cannot be said to have been such a "denial or disability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State" the rights of colored men, as is contemplated by the removal Act. Section 641. It is to be observed that Act gives the right of removal only to a person "who is denied, or cannot enforce, in the judicial tribunals of the State his equal civil rights." And this is to appear before trial. When a statute of the State denies his right, or interposes a bar to his enforcing it, in the judicial tribunals, the presumption is fair that they will be controlled by it in their decisions; and in such a case a defendant may affirm on oath what is necessary for a removal. Such a case is clearly within the provisions of section 641. But when a subordinate officer of the State, in violation of state law, undertakes to deprive an accused party of a right which the statute law accords to him, as in the case at bar, it can hardly be said that he is denied, or cannot enforce, "in the judicial tribunals of the State" the rights which belong to him. In such a case it ought to be presumed the court will redress the wrong. If the accused is deprived of the right, the final and practical denial will be in the judicial tribunal which tries the case, after the trial has commenced. If, as in this case, the subordinate officer whose duty it is to select jurors fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk whose duty it is to take the twelve names from the box rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason, it can with no propriety be said the defendant's right is denied by the State and cannot be enforced in the judicial tribunals. The court will correct the wrong, will quash the indictment or the panel, or, if not, the error will be corrected in a superior court. We cannot think such cases are within the provisions of section 641. Denials of equal rights in the action of the judicial tribunals of the State are left to the revisory powers of this court.

The assertions in the petition for removal, that the grand jury by which the petitioners were indicted, as well as the jury summoned to try them, were composed wholly of the white race, and that their race had never been allowed to serve as jurors in the County of Patrick in any case in which a colored man was interested, fall short of showing that any civil right was denied, or that there had been any discrimination against the defendants because of their color or race. The facts may have been as stated, and yet the jury which indicted them, and the panel summoned to try them, may have been impartially selected.

Nor did the refusal of the court and of the counsel for the prosecution to allow a modification of the venire, by which one third of the jury, or a portion of it, should be composed of persons of the petitioners' own race, amount to any denial of a right secured to them by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States. The privilege for which they moved, and which they also asked from the prosecution, was not a right given or secured to them or to any person, by the law of the State, or by any Act of Congress, or by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution. It is a right to which every colored man is entitled, that, in the selection of jurors to pass upon his life, liberty or property, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against them because of their color. But this is a different thing from the right which it is asserted was denied to the petitioners by the State Court, viz.: a right to have the jury composed in part of colored men. A mixed jury in a particular case is not essential to the equal protection of the laws, and the right to it is not given by any law of Virginia, or by any federal statute. It is not, therefore, guarantied by the 14th Amendment, or within the purview of section 641.

It follows that the petition for a removal stated no facts that brought the case within the provisions of this section and, consequently, no jurisdiction of the case was acquired by the Circuit Court of the United States. In the absence of such jurisdiction, the writ of habeas corpus, by which the petitioners were taken from the custody of the state authorities, should not have been issued. The Circuit Court has now no authority to hold them, and they should be remanded.

Upon the question whether a writ of mandamus is a proper proceeding to enforce the return of the men indicted to the custody of the state authorities, little need be said, in view of former decisions of this court. Section 688 of the Revised Statutes enacts that the Supreme Court shall have power to issue * * * writs of mandamus in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed under the authority of the United States, or to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, where a State or an ambassador, or other public minister, or a consul or vice-consul, is a party. In what cases such a writ is warranted by the principles and usages of law it is not always easy to determine. Its use has been very much extended in modern times, and now it may be said to be an established remedy to oblige inferior courts and magistrates to do that justice which they are in duty and by virtue of their office bound to do. It does not lie to control judicial discretion, except when that discretion has been abused; but it is a remedy when the case is outside of the exercise of this discretion, and outside the jurisdiction of the court or officer to which or to whom the writ is addressed. One of its peculiar and more common uses is to restrain inferior courts and to keep them within their lawful bounds. Bacon, Abr., Mand., Letter D; Tapping, Mand., 105; 3 Bl. Com., 110. This subject was discussed at length in Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall., 364 [74 U. S., XIX., 214], and what was there said renders unnecessary any discussion of it now. To that discussion we refer. In our judgment, it vindicates the use of a writ of mandamus in such a case as the present.

The writ will, therefore, be awarded.

Separate opinion of Mr. Justice Field:

I concur in the judgment of the court that the prisoners, Lee and Burwell Reynolds, must be returned to the officers of Virginia, from whose custody they were taken; that the prosecution against them must be remanded to the state court from which it was removed; and that a mandamus to the District Judge of the Western District of Virginia is the appropriate remedy to effect these ends. But, as I do not agree with all the views expressed in the opinion of the court, and there are other reasons equally cogent with those given for the decision rendered, I deem it proper to state at length the grounds of my concurrence.

The prisoners were jointly indicted in a county court for the crime of murder. They are colored men, and the person alleged to have been murdered was a white man. On being arraigned they pleaded: not guilty, and on their demand were remanded to the Circuit Court of the county for trial. When brought before that court, at the April Term of 1878, they moved that the venire of jurors, then composed entirely of persons of the white race, should be modified so as to allow one third of the venire to be composed of persons of their own race. This motion was denied, on the ground that the court had no authority to change the venire, and that it satisfactorily appeared that the jurors had been regularly drawn from the jury-box according to law. The accused then presented a petition for the removal of the prosecution to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia, setting forth the pendency of the criminal prosecution against them, and alleging, in substance, that rights, secured by the law providing for the equal civil rights of all citizens of the United States, were denied to them by the judicial tribunals of the county, inasmuch as their application for a mixed jury had been refused. It further alleged that a strong prejudice existed in the community of the county against them, independent of the merits of their case, on the ground that they were colored persons, and the one whom they were charged to have murdered was a white man; and that, from this fact alone, they were satisfied they could not obtain an impartial trial before a jury composed exclusively of persons of the white race.

The prayer of this petition was denied and the prisoners were tried separately and convicted of murder, one in the first and the other in the second degree. Both obtained new trials, one by the action of the court of original jurisdiction, and the other by that of the Court of Appeals on a writ of error.

At the October Term of 1878 they were a second time brought up for trial, and before the jury were impaneled again moved the court to remove the prosecution to the Circuit Court of the United States, upon the petition presented at the April Term; but the motion, as before, was denied. They were then tried separately. In one case the jury disagreed, and the prisoner was remanded to jail to await another trial. In the other case, the prisoner was convicted of murder in the second degree, and his punishment was fixed by the jury at eighteen years' confinement in the penitentiary.

While the prisoners were held in jail, one of them to be again tried, and the other until he could be removed to the penitentiary under his sentence, they procured from the clerk of the court a copy of the record of the proceedings against them, which they presented to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia, then held by Alexander Rives, the District Judge, with the petition for removal presented to the state court, and prayed that the prosecutions should be there docketed and proceeded with. That court granted the petition, directed the cases to be placed on its docket, and authorized the clerk to issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa to the marshal of the district, requiring him to take the petitioners into his custody, and summon for their trial twenty-five jurors to attend at the next Term of the court. A writ of habeas corpus cum causa was accordingly issued. Pursuant to its command, the prisoners were removed from the custody of the jailer and taken into the custody of the marshal. Thereupon the Commonwealth of Virginia presented a petition to this court praying for a writ of mandamus to be directed to the District Judge, commanding him to order the marshal to redeliver the prisoners to her authorities, upon the ground that the Judge in his proceedings had transcended the jurisdiction of his court, and undertaken the exercise of powers not vested by any law of the United States in him or the court held by him. Upon its presentation at the last Term an order was issued to the Judge to show cause why the writ should not issue as prayed. His return admits the facts as stated, and justifies his action on the ground that the refusal of the state court to set aside the venire summoned for the trial of the prisoners, and to give them a jury composed in part of their own race and color, was a denial to them of "the equal protection of the laws," and brought their cases within the provisions of the Revised Statutes for the removal of criminal prosecutions from the state to the Federal Courts. The Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, contending that the return is insufficient to justify his action, now moves that the writ be issued as prayed.

The application of Virginia is resisted by a denial of the jurisdiction of this court to issue a writ to the District Judge in the case; a denial made not only by the counsel for the prisoners, who has been permitted to appear in their behalf, though the proceeding is one directly between the Commonwealth and the District Judge, but by the Attorney-General, who has appeared, though not officially, for that officer. The ground of the denial is that the writ can be issued by this court only in the exercise or in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, and that the writ is here prayed in a proceeding which is not appellate but original, because it has its commencement in the presentation of the petition of the Commonwealth.

It is undoubtedly true that, except in cases where, under the Constitution, this court has original jurisdiction, the writ can be issued only in the exercise or in aid of its appellate authority. This was held as long ago as the case of Marbury v. Madison, decided in 1803 [1 Cranch, 137], and the doctrine has been adhered to ever since; for the obvious reason that, the jurisdiction of the court being original in only a few enumerated cases, all exercise of power in other cases must be in virtue of its appellate jurisdiction. That jurisdiction may, however, be called into exercise in various ways. The term "appellate" in the Constitution is not used in a restricted sense, but in the broadest sense, as embracing the power to review and correct the proceedings of subordinate tribunals brought before it for examination in the modes provided by law. Congress has prescribed the mode or process by which such proceedings shall be brought before the court. In equity cases, it is by a simple notice that an appeal is taken from the decree or proceeding sought to be reviewed; in common law cases, it is generally by writ of error; in some cases it is by a writ of prohibition, and in some by that of certiorari or of mandamus. The mode is one resting entirely in the discretion of Congress. The Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 73, passed at the first session of Congress after the adoption of the Constitution, declared that the Supreme Court should have appellate jurisdiction from the circuit courts and from courts of the several States in certain cases, and should "Have power to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts, when proceeding as courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and writs of mandamus in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States."

In Marbury v. Madison it was held that the authority given by the Act to issue the writ of mandamus to public officers was not warranted by the Constitution, the court observing that it was an essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction that it revises and corrects proceedings in a cause already instituted, and does not create the cause; and that although the writ might be directed to courts, yet to issue it to an officer for the delivery of a paper was in effect the same as to sustain an original action for that paper; and, therefore, seemed to belong not to appellate, but to original jurisdiction. The case in which this language was used was an application to the court to compel Mr. Madison, then

Secretary of State, to deliver to Mr. Marbury, as justice of the peace, a commission which had been signed by President Adams and transmitted to the predecessor in office of the Secretary, to be delivered to the appointee. There was, therefore, no action of an inferior tribunal brought up for review, the proceeding being merely to compel an executive officer to perform a ministerial act in which a citizen was interested. The language must, therefore, be limited by the facts of the case. It was not intended to deny the authority of this court to issue the writ to public officers, when the case is one in which it can exercise original jurisdiction; and probably, to avoid such an inference, the addition was made to the clause we have cited which now appears in the Revised Statutes, so as to allow the writ to issue to public officers only "Where a State or an ambassador or other public minister or a consul or vice-consul is a party;" that is, in cases where the court has original jurisdiction. Indeed, it is only by such writ that the original jurisdiction of this court can in many cases be exercised. Com. v. Dennison, 24 How., 66 [65 U. S., XVI., 717]. Nor was the language intended to deny that this court can issue the writ to judicial officers where the object is to revise and correct their action in legal proceedings pending in the courts held by them. Though the writ to a subordinate or inferior court may be addressed to the court as such, it is usually directed to the judge thereof, or, if the court is composed of several judges, to such one or more of them as may be authorized to hold its sessions or participate in holding them. The reason assigned is that, in case of disobedience to the writ, the authority to enforce it is exercised over the judges personally who are vested with the power of exercising the functions of the court. High, Extraordinary Legal Remedies, sec. 275. In the present case, the writ is asked against the District Judge who, whilst holding the Circuit Court of the Western District of Virginia, made the order which is the subject of complaint, and who, if the writ be granted, will be able to hold that court and carry out its command. There is no sound objection to its issue in this form.

The writ being one of the modes provided by Congress for the exercise of our appellate jurisdiction, the question whether it should be issued in this case is not difficult of solution if, as contended by the Commonwealth of Virginia, the Circuit Court, in taking the prisoners from the custody of her authorities, transcended its jurisdiction. To review that action and set aside what was done under it, the writ is sought. The jurisdiction invoked is, in its nature, appellate; and there is no other mode provided for its exercise in the case at bar than by the writ prayed. Though the petition is the first step taken by the Commonwealth against the Judge, the proceeding is not on that account an original suit. The petition is merely the process by which our appellate jurisdiction is invoked.

It is well settled that the writ of mandamus will issue to correct the action of subordinate or inferior courts or judicial officers, where they have exceeded their jurisdiction, and there is no other adequate remedy. "It issues," says Blackstone, "to the judges of any inferior court, commanding them to do justice according to the powers of their office, whenever the same is delayed. For it is the peculiar business of the Court of King's Bench to superintend all inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial or ministerial powers with which the Crown or the Legislature have invested them; and this is not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence and obviating the denial of justice." 3 Bl. Com., 110.

It is in accordance, therefore, with the principles and usages of law that this court should issue a mandamus in the cases here enumerated, and thus supervise the proceedings of inferior courts where there is a legal right and there is no other existing legal remedy. "It is upon this ground," says Mr. Justice Nelson, "that the remedy has been applied from an early day; indeed, since the organization of courts and the admission of attorneys to practice therein, down to the present time, to correct the abuses of the inferior courts in summary proceedings against their officers, and especially against the attorneys and counselors of the courts. The order disbarring them, or subjecting them to fine or imprisonment, is not reviewable by writ of error, it not being a judgment in the sense of the law for which this writ will lie. Without, therefore, the use of the writ of mandamus, however flagrant the wrong committed against these officers, they would be destitute of any redress." Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall., 364 [74 U. S., XIX., 214]; see, also, Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall., 505 [86 U. S., XXII., 205].

And so in the case at bar, without the use of this writ the greatest possible injury would be inflicted upon the Commonwealth of Virginia, without any redress, if the Circuit Court, as contended, transcended its jurisdiction. In no case, therefore, could the writ be more properly issued in the interests of justice, order and good government. Nor was there any necessity for a previous demand upon that court, in the way of a motion to remand the prisoners. While the authorities, says Mr. High, in his valuable treatise on the law of Mandamus, are not altogether reconcilable as to the necessity of a previous demand and refusal to perform the act which it is sought to coerce, a distinction is made between the cases where the duties to be enforced are of a public nature, affecting the public at large, and those where the duties are of a private nature, affecting only the rights of individuals. "And while," continues the author, "in the latter class of cases, where the person aggrieved claims the immediate and personal benefit of the act or duty whose performance is sought, demand and refusal are held to be necessary as a condition precedent to relief by mandamus; in the former class, the duty being strictly of a public nature, not affecting individual interests, and there being no one specially empowered to demand its performance, there is no necessity for a literal demand and refusal. In such cases the law itself stands in lieu of a demand, and the omission to perform the required duty in place of a refusal." High, Ex. Rem., sec. 13.

In this case not only was the duty required of the Circuit Court one of a public nature, in which the Commonwealth of Virginia is interested, but it would have been a useless ceremony to move for an order remanding the prisoners to her authorities, in the face of its direction to the marshal to take them into custody, and its order to docket and proceed with the prosecution against them in the Circuit Court of the United States, and the justification of this action contained in the return of the Judge.

The preliminary objections to the exercise of our jurisdiction being disposed of, we are brought to the important inquiry, whether the action of the Circuit Court, in taking the prisoners from the custody of the authorities of Virginia, was authorized under the laws of the United States. The mandamus prayed is to compel the return of the prisoners, as already stated; but the validity of the order directing the marshal to take them into his custody depends upon the legality of the removal of the prosecution from the State to the Federal Court. The order to the marshal was the necessary sequence of assuming jurisdiction of the prosecution. The legality of the removal is, therefore, the question for determination. Its legality is denied by Virginia on two grounds: 1. That the Act of Congress, R. S., sec. 641, upon the provisions of which the respondent relies, does not authorize the removal; and, 2, that the Act, in authorizing a criminal prosecution for an offense against a law of the State to be, before trial, removed from a State Court to a Federal Court, is unconstitutional and void. In my opinion, both of these grounds are well taken.

Section 641 of the Revised Statutes, re-enacting provisions of previous statutes, in terms provides in certain cases for the removal to the Circuit Courts of the United States of criminal prosecutions commenced in a State Court. It declares that "When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any State Court, for any cause whatsoever, against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State, or in any part of the State where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, or against any officer, civil or military, or other person, for any arrest or imprisonment or other trespass, or wrongs, made or committed by virtue of or under color of authority derived from any law providing for equal rights as aforesaid, or for refusing to do any act on the ground that it would be inconsistent with such law, such suit or prosecution may, upon the petition of such defendant filed in said State Court, at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, stating the facts and verified by oath, be removed for trial into the next Circuit Court to be held in the district where it is pending. Upon the filing of such petition all further proceedings in the State Courts shall cease." The section also provides for furnishing the Circuit Court with copies of the process, pleadings and proceedings of the State Court. A subsequent section provides for the issue in such cases of a writ of habeas corpus cum causa to remove the accused, when in actual custody upon process of the State Court, to the custody of the Marshal of the United States.

By this enactment it appears that, in order to obtain a removal of a prosecution from a State to a Federal Court—except where it is against a public officer or other person for certain trespasses or conduct not material to consider in this connection—the petition of the accused must show a denial of or an inability to enforce in the tribunals of the State, or of that part of the State where the prosecution is pending, some right secured to him by the law providing for the equal rights of citizens or persons within the jurisdiction of the United States. But how must the denial of a right under such a law, or the accused's inability to enforce it in the judicial tribunals of the State, be made to appear? So far as the accused is concerned, the law requires him to state and verify the facts, and from them the court will determine whether such denial or inability exists. His naked averment of such denial or inability can hardly be deemed sufficient; if it were so, few prosecutions would be retained in a state court for insufficient allegations when the accused imagined he would gain by the removal. Texas v. Gaines, 2 Woods, 344. There must be such a presentation of facts as to lead the court to the conclusion that the averments of the accused are well founded. There are many ways in which a person may be denied his rights, or be unable to enforce them in the tribunals of a State. The denial or inability may arise from direct legislation, depriving him of their enjoyment or the means of their enforcement, or discriminating against him or the class, sect or race to which he belongs. And it may arise from popular prejudices, passions or excitement, biasing the minds of jurors and judges. Religious animosities, political controversies, antagonisms of race and a multitude of other causes will always operate, in a greater or less degree, as impediments to the full enjoyment and enforcement of civil rights. We cannot think that the Act of Congress contemplated a denial of or an inability to enforce ones rights from these latter and similar causes, and intended to authorize a removal of a prosecution by reason of them from a State to a Federal Court. Some of these causes have always existed in some localities in every State, and the remedy for them has been found in a change of the place of trial to other localities where like impediments to impartial action of the tribunals did not exist. The Civil Rights Act, to which reference is made in the section in question, was only intended to secure to the colored race the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by white persons; it was not designed to relieve them from those obstacles in the enjoyment of their rights to which all other persons are subject, and which grow out of popular prejudices and passions.

The denial of rights or the inability to enforce them, to which the section refers, is, in my opinion, such as arises from legislative action of the State, as, for example, an Act excluding colored persons from being witnesses, making contracts, acquiring property, and the like. With respect to obstacles to the enjoyment of rights arising from other causes, persons of the colored race must take their chances of removing or providing against them with the rest of the community.

This conclusion is strengthened by the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. The original Civil Rights Act was passed, it is true, before the adoption of that Amendment; but great doubt was expressed as to its validity, and to obtain authority for similar legislation, and thus obviate the objections which had been raised to its 1st section, was one of the objects of the Amendment. After its adoption the Civil Rights Act was re-enacted, and upon the 1st section of that Amendment it rests. That section is directed against the State. Its language is that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." As the State, in the administration of its government, acts through its Executive, Legislative and Judicial Departments, the inhibition applies to them. But the Executive and Judicial Departments only construe and enforce the laws of the State; the inhibition, therefore, is, in effect, against passing and enforcing any laws which are designed to accomplish the ends forbidden. If an executive or judicial officer exercises power with which he is not invested by law, and does unauthorized acts, the State is not responsible for them. The action of the judicial officer in such a case, where the rights of a citizen under the laws of the United States are disregarded, may be reviewed and corrected or reversed by this court; it cannot be imputed to the State, so as to make it evidence that she, in her sovereign or legislative capacity, denies the rights invaded, or refuses to allow their enforcement. It is merely the ordinary case of an erroneous ruling of an inferior tribunal. Nor can the unauthorized action of an executive officer, impinging upon the rights of the citizen, be taken as evidence of her intention or policy so as to charge upon her a denial of such rights.

If these views are correct, no cause is shown in the petition of the prisoners that justified a removal of the prosecutions against them to the Federal Court. No law of Virginia makes any discrimination against persons of the colored race, or excludes them from the jury. The law respecting jurors provides that "All male citizens, twenty-one years of age and not over sixty, who are entitled to vote and hold office under the Constitution and laws of the State," with certain exemptions not material to the question presented, may be jurors; and it authorizes an annual selection in each county, by the County Judge, from the citizens at large, of from one to three hundred persons, whose names are to be placed in a box, and from them the jurors, grand and petit, of the county are to be drawn. There is no restriction placed upon the County Judge in selecting them, except that they shall be such as he shall think "well qualified to serve as jurors, being persons of sound judgment and free from legal exception." The mode thus provided, properly carried out, cannot fail to secure competent jurors. Certain it is that no rights of the prisoners are denied by this legislation. The application to the state court, upon the refusal of which the petition was presented, was for a venue composed of one third of their race—a proceeding wholly inadmissible in any jury system which obtains in the several States.

From the return of the District Judge, it would seem that in his judgment the presence of persons of the colored race on the jury is essential to secure to them the "equal protection of the laws"; but how this conclusion is reached is not apparent, except upon the general theory that such protection can only be afforded to parties when persons of the class to which they belong are allowed to sit on their juries. The correctness of this theory is contradicted by every day's experience. Women are not allowed to sit on juries; are they thereby denied the equal protection of the laws? Foreigners resident in the country are not permitted to act as jurors, yet they are protected in their rights equally with citizens. Persons over sixty years of age in Virginia are disqualified as jurors, yet no one will pretend that they do not enjoy the equal protection of the laws. If, when a colored person is indicted for a criminal offense, it is essential, to secure to him the equal protection of the laws, that persons of his race should be on the jury by which he is tried, it would seem that the presence of such persons on the Bench should be equally essential where the court consists of more than one judge; and that if it should consist of only a single judge, such protection would be impossible. To such an absurd result does the doctrine lead, which the Circuit Court announced as controlling its action.

The equality of protection assured by the 14th Amendment to all persons in the State, does not imply that they shall be allowed to participate in the administration of its laws, or to hold any of its offices, or to discharge any duties of a public trust. The universality of the protection intended excludes any such inference. Were this not so, aliens resident in the country, or temporarily here, of whom there are many thousands in each State, would be without that equal protection which the Amendment declares that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction.

It follows from these views as to the meaning and purpose of the Act of Congress, that the removal of the prosecution in this case from the state to the Federal Court is unauthorized by it; and that the order of the Circuit Court to the marshal to take the prisoners from the custody of the state authorities is illegal and void.

The second objection of the Commonwealth to the legality of the removal is equally conclusive. The prosecution is for the crime of murder, committed within her limits, by persons and at a place subject to her jurisdiction. The offense charged is against her authority and laws, and she alone has the right to inquire into its commission, and to punish the offender. Murder is not an offense against the United States, except when committed on an American vessel on the high seas, or in some port or haven without the jurisdiction of the State, or in the District of Columbia, or in the Territories, or at other places where the National Government has exclusive jurisdiction. The offense within the limits of a State, except where jurisdiction has been ceded to the United States, is as much beyond the jurisdiction of these courts as though it had been committed on another continent. The prosecution of the offense in such a case does not, therefore, arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States; and the Act of Congress which attempts to give the Federal Courts jurisdiction of it is, to my mind, a clear infraction of the Constitution. That instrument defines and limits the judicial power of the United States.

It declares among other things, that the judicial power shall extend to cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, and to various controversies to which a State is a party; but it does not include in its enumeration controversies between a State and its own citizens. There can be no ground, therefore, for the assumption by a Federal Court of jurisdiction of offenses against the laws of a State. The judicial power granted by the Constitution does not cover any such case or controversy. And whilst it is well settled that the exercise of the power granted may be extended to new cases as they arise under the Constitution and laws, the power itself cannot be enlarged by Congress. The Constitution creating a government of limited powers puts a bound upon those which are judicial as well as those which are legislative, which cannot be lawfully passed.

This view would seem to be conclusive against the validity of the attempted removal of the prosecution in this case from the State Court. The Federal Court could not, in the first instance, have taken jurisdiction of the offense charged, and summoned a grand jury to present an indictment against the accused; and if it could not have taken jurisdiction at first, it cannot do so upon a removal of the prosecution to it. The jurisdiction exercised upon the removal is original and not appellate, as is sometimes erroneously asserted; for, as stated by Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, already cited, it is of the essence of appellate jurisdiction that it revises and corrects proceedings already had. The removal is only an indirect mode by which the Federal Court acquires original jurisdiction. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall., 270 [80 U. S., XX., 571.]

The Constitution, it is to be observed, in the distribution of the judicial power declares that in the cases enumerated in which a State is a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. Its framers seemed to have entertained great respect for the dignity of a State which was to remain sovereign, at least in its reserved powers, notwithstanding the new government and, therefore, provided that when a State should have occasion to seek the aid of the judicial power of the new government, or should be brought under its subjection, that power should be invoked only in its highest tribunal. It is difficult to believe that the wise men who sat in the Convention which framed the Constitution and advocated its adoption ever contemplated the possibility of a State being required to assert its authority over offenders against its laws in other tribunals than those of its own creation, and least of all in an inferior tribunal of the new government. I do not think I am going too far in asserting that had it been supposed a power so dangerous to the independence of the States, and so calculated to humiliate and degrade them, lurked in any of the provisions of the Constitution, that instrument would never have been adopted.

There are many other difficulties in maintaining the position of the Circuit Court, which the counsel of the accused and the Attorney-General have earnestly defended. If a criminal prosecution of an offender against the laws of a State can be transferred to a Federal Court, what officer is to prosecute the case? Is the attorney of the Commonwealth to follow the case from his county, or will the United States District Attorney take charge of it? Who is to summon the witnesses and provide for their fees? In whose name is judgment to be pronounced? If the accused is convicted and ordered to be imprisoned, who is to enforce the sentence? If he is deemed worthy of executive clemency, who is to exercise it—the Governor of the State or the President of the United States? Can the President pardon for an offense against the State? Can the Governor release from the judgment of a Federal Court? These and other questions which might be asked, show, as justly observed by the counsel of Virginia, the incongruity and absurdity of the attempted proceeding.

Undoubtedly, if in the progress of a criminal prosecution, as well as in the progress of a civil action, a question arise as to any matter under the Constitution and laws of the United States, upon which the defendant may claim protection, or any benefit in the case, the decision thereon may be reviewed by the federal judiciary, which can examine the case so far and so far only, as to determine the correctness of the ruling. If the decision be erroneous in that respect, it may be reversed and a new trial had. Provision for such revision was made in the 25th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 73, and is retained in the Revised Statutes. That great Act was penned by Oliver Ellsworth, a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution, and one of the early Chief Justices of this court. It may be said to reflect the views of the founders of the Republic as to the proper relations between the Federal and state courts. It gives to the Federal Courts the ultimate decision of federal questions, without infringing upon the dignity and independence of the state courts. By its harmony between them is secured, the rights of both Federal and State Governments maintained, and every privilege and immunity which the accused could assert under either can be enforced.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Clifford concurs with me in these views.

Ex Parte IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA AND J. D. COLES, Petitioners.

Habeas corpus, when granted—exclusion of juror on account of color—Fourteenth Amendment—power of Congress—selection of jurors.

*C. being a Judge of a County Court in Virginia, charged by the law of that State with the selection of jurors to serve in the Circuit and County Courts of his county, in the year 1878, was indicted in the Federal Court for the Western District of Virginia, charged with excluding and failing to select as grand jurors and petit jurors certain citizens of his county, of African race and black color, said citizens possessing all other qualifications prescribed by law, and being by him, the said C., excluded from the jury lists made out by him as such officer, on account of their race, color and previous condition of servitude, and for no other reason, against the peace, etc., of the United States, and against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Being in custody under that indictment, he presented to this court his petition for a writ of habeas corpus and a writ of certiorari, to bring up the record of the inferior court, that he might be discharged, averring that the finding of the indictment, and his arrest and imprisonment thereunder, were unwarranted by the Constitution of the United States, in violation of his rights and the rights of Virginia, whose judicial officer he is, and that the inferior court had no jurisdiction to proceed against him. A similar petition was presented by the State of Virginia. Held: 1. That while a writ of habeas corpus cannot generally be made to subvert the purposes of a writ of error; yet when a prisoner is held without any lawful authority and by an order beyond the jurisdiction of an inferior Federal Court to take, this court will, in favor of liberty, grant the writ, not to review the whole case, but to examine the authority of the court below to act at all.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice Strong.

2. The section of the Act of March 1, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 336, which enacts that "No citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person, charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors, who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen, for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not more than $5,000," examined, and held to be authorized by the 13th and 14th Amendments of the Constitution, which Congress is given power to enforce by appropriate legislation.

3. The inhibition contained in the 14th Amendment means that no agency of the State, nor of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a state government, deprives another of property, life or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. Otherwise the constitutional inhibition has no meaning and the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or evade it.

4. The constitutional Amendment was ordained for a purpose. It was to secure equal rights to all persons, and to insure to all persons the enjoyment of such rights. Power was given to Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. Such legislation must act upon persons; not upon the abstract thing denominated a State, but upon the persons who are the agents of the State in the denial of the rights which were intended to be secured. Such is the Act of March 1, 1875, and is fully authorized by the Constitution.

5. The act of the defendant, in selecting jurors, was a ministerial, not a judicial act; and being charged with the performance of that duty, although he derived his authority from the State, he was bound, in the discharge of his duties, to obey the Federal Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereof.

[No. 4, Orig.]

Argued Oct. 16, 17, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. James G. Field and W. J. Robertson, for petitioners.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen. and E. B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., opposed.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner, J. D. Coles, was arrested, and he is now held in custody under an indictment found against him in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia. The indictment charged that the said See 10 OTTO.

Coles, being a Judge of the County Court of Pittsylvania County of that State, and an officer charged by law with the selection of jurors to serve in the Circuit and County Courts of said county in the year 1878, did then and there exclude and fail to select as grand and petit jurors certain citizens of said County of Pittsylvania, of African race and black color, said citizens possessing all other qualifications prescribed by law, and being by him the said J. D. Coles, excluded from the jury lists made out by him as such Judge, on account of their race, color and previous condition of servitude, and for no other reason, against the peace and dignity of the United States, and against the form of the Statute of the United States in such case made and provided.

Being thus in custody, he has presented to us his petition for a writ of habeas corpus and a writ of certiorari, to bring up the record of the district court, in order that he may be discharged; and he avers that the District Court had and has no jurisdiction of the matters charged against him in said indictment; that they constitute no offense punishable in said district court; and that the finding of said indictment, and his consequent arrest and imprisonment, are unwarranted by the Constitution of the United States, or by any law made in pursuance thereof, and are in violation of his rights and of the rights of the State of Virginia, whose judicial officer he is.

A similar petition has been presented by the State of Virginia, praying for a habeas corpus and for the discharge of the said Coles. Accompanying both these petitions are exhibited copies of the indictment, the bench-warrant, and the return of the marshal, showing the arrest of the said Coles and his detention in custody.

Both these petitions have been considered as one case, and the first question they present is, whether this court has jurisdiction to award the writ asked for by the petitioners. The question is not free from difficulty, in view of the Constitution and the several Acts of Congress relating to writs of habeas corpus, and in view of our decisions heretofore made. If granting the writ would be an exercise of original jurisdiction, it would seem that it could not be granted, unless the fact, that one of the petitioners for the writ is the State of Virginia, makes the cases to differ. This is established by the rulings in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; and in numerous subsequent decisions. And it is not readily perceived how the fact that a State applies for the writ to be directed to one of her own citizens can make a case for our original jurisdiction.

But the appellate power of this court is broader than its original and, generally, that is in most cases, it may be said that the issue of a writ of habeas corpus by us, when it is directed to one of our inferior courts, is an exercise of our appellate jurisdiction. Without going at large into a discussion of its extent, it is sufficient for the present to notice the fact that the exercise of the appellate power is not limited by the Constitution to any particular form or mode. It is not alone by appeal or by writ of error that it may be invoked. In Matter of Metzger, 5 How., 176, it was indeed ruled that an order of commitment made by a District Judge at chambers, cannot be revised here by habeas corpus. But such an order was reviewable in no form; and, besides, the authority of that case has been much shaken. In re Kaine, 14 How., 103; Ex parte Yerger, 8 Wall., 85 [75 U.S., XIX., 332]. In the latter of these cases, it was said by Chief Justice Chase, in delivering the opinion of the court: "We regard as established, upon principle and authority, that the appellate jurisdiction by habeas corpus extends to all cases of commitment by the judicial authority of the United States, not within any exception made by Congress."

In the present case, the petitioner Coles is in custody under a bench-warrant directed by the District Court, and the averment is that the court had no jurisdiction of the indictment on which the warrant is founded.

The District Court is an inferior court and, in such a case as that exhibited by the indictment, its judgments are reviewable here. The indictment has been found for a violation of section 4 of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1875, entitled "An Act to Protect all Citizens in their Civil and Legal Rights." 18 Stat. at L., 335. The 3d section gives to the District Courts, as well as the Circuit, judicial cognizance of all offenses against the provisions of the Act; and the 5th section enacts that all cases arising under the provisions of the Act shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States, without regard to the sum in controversy, under the same provisions and regulations as are now provided by law for the review of other cases in said court. If this section applies to criminal cases as well as civil, our appellate power extends directly to the District Court, and the Act of March 3, 1879, 20 Stat. at L., 354, which allows writs of error to the Circuit Court in such cases, has not deprived us of appellate jurisdiction.

We have, then, an application to our appellate power over the action of a District Court, in a case where it is alleged that court has acted outside of its jurisdiction. It is said there is nothing to appeal from; that no decision or judgment has been given in the inferior court, and that the appeal, if any, is taken from the finding of a grand jury. This is a mistake. The bench-warrant was an order of the court, and the validity of the bench-warrant is the matter in question. It is true there has been no final judgment or decision of the whole case; but an appeal may lie, and in many courts often does lie, from a merely interlocutory order. It is said no habeas corpus was sued out either in the District or Circuit Court, and that we are not called upon to review the action of a lower court upon such a writ. This is true, and such a writ from the lower court would have been a more regular proceeding. We cannot say, however, it was indispensable, especially in view of the fact that a State is seeking release of one of her officers, and in view of former action in this court. In U. S. v. Hamilton, 3 Dall., 17, this court awarded a writ of habeas corpus, to review a commitment under a warrant of a District Judge. In Ex parte Burford, 3 Cranch, 448, such a writ was awarded to review a commitment by the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, not to review a decision of an inferior court upon a habeas corpus issued by it. So, in Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S., 727 [XXIV., 877], in which the question of our power to issue the writ was raised, and the petition only averred that the Circuit Court had exceeded its jurisdiction, this court considered the merits of the case, without regard to the fact that there had been no habeas corpus in the court below. And in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall., 163 [85 U. S., XXI., 872], it was ruled, after an examination of authorities, that when a prisoner shows that he is held under a judgment of a Federal Court, given without authority of law, this court, by writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, will look into the record, so far as to ascertain whether that is the fact, and, if it is found to be so, will discharge him. Mr. Justice Miller said, in delivering the opinion: "The authority of the court in such a case, under the Constitution of the United States, and the 14th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 73, to issue this writ and to examine the proceedings in the inferior court, so far as may be necessary to ascertain whether that court has exceeded its authority, is no longer an open question."

While, therefore, it is true that a writ of habeas corpus cannot generally be made to subvert the purposes of a writ of error, yet when a prisoner is held without any lawful authority, and by an order beyond the jurisdiction of an inferior Federal Court to make, this court will, in favor of liberty, grant the writ, not to review the whole case, but to examine the authority of the court below to act at all.

Our conclusion, then, is, that we are empowered to grant the writ in such a case as is presented in these petitions. We come now to the merits of the case.

The indictment and bench-warrant, in virtue of which the petitioner Coles has been arrested and is held in custody, have their justification if any they have, in the Act of Congress of March 1, 1875, sec. 4, 18 Stat. at L., 336. That section enacts that "No citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than $5,000." The defendant has been indicted for the misdemeanor described in this Act, and it is not denied that he is now properly held in custody to answer the indictment, if the Act of Congress was warranted by the Constitution. The whole merits of the case are involved in the question, whether the Act was thus warranted.

The provisions of the Constitution that relate to this subject are found in the 13th and 14th Amendments. The 13th ordains that "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction," and it declares that Congress shall have power to enforce the article by appropriate legislation. This has been followed by the 14th Amendment, which ordains that "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws." This Amendment also declares that "The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

One great purpose of these Amendments was to raise the colored race from that condition of inferiority and servitude in which most of them had previously stood, into perfect equality of civil rights with all other persons within the jurisdiction of the States. They were intended to take away all possibility of oppression by law because of race or color. They were intended to be, what they really are, limitations of the power of the States and enlargements of the power of Congress. They are, to some extent, declaratory of rights, and though in form prohibitions, they imply immunities, such as may be protected by congressional legislation. We had occasion in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 36 [83 U. S., XXI., 394], to express our opinion of their spirit and purpose, and to some extent of their meaning. We have again been called to consider them in the cases of Tenn. v. Davis [ante, 648] and Strauder v. West Va., just decided [ante, 664]. In this latter case we held that the 14th Amendment secures, among other civil rights, to colored men, when charged with criminal offenses against a State, an impartial jury trial by jurors indifferently selected or chosen without discrimination against such jurors because of their color. We held that immunity from any such discrimination is one of the equal rights of all persons, and that any withholding it by a State is a denial of the equal protection of the laws, within the meaning of the Amendment. We held that such an equal right to an impartial jury trial, and such an immunity from unfriendly discrimination, are placed by the Amendment under the protection of the General Government and guaranteed by it. We held, further, that this protection and this guaranty, as the 5th section of the Amendment expressly ordains, may be enforced by Congress by means of appropriate legislation.

All of the Amendments derive much of their force from this latter provision. It is not said that the judicial power of the General Government shall extend to enforcing the prohibitions and to protecting the rights and immunities guaranteed. It is not said that branch of the government shall be authorized to declare void any action of a State in violation of the prohibitions. It is the power of Congress which has been enlarged. Congress is authorized to enforce the prohibitions by appropriate legislation. Some legislation is contemplated to make the Amendments fully effective. Whatever legislation is appropriate, that is, adapted to carry out the objects the Amendments have in view, whatever tends to enforce submission to the prohibitions they contain, and to secure to all persons the enjoyment of perfect equality of civil rights and the equal protection of the laws against state denial or invasion, if not prohibited, is brought within the domain of congressional power.

Nor does it make any difference that such See 10 OTTO.

legislation is restrictive of what the State might have done before the constitutional Amendment was adopted. The prohibitions of the 14th Amendment are directed to the States, and they are to a degree restrictions of state power. It is these which Congress is empowered to enforce, and to enforce against state action, however put forth, whether that action be executive, legislative or judicial. Such enforcement is no invasion of state sovereignty. No law can be, which the people of the States have, by the Constitution of the United States, empowered Congress to enact. This extent of the powers of the General Government is overlooked, when it is said, as it has been in this case, that the Act of March 1, 1875, interferes with state rights. It is said the selection of jurors for her courts and the administration of her laws belong to each State; that they are her rights. This is true in the general. But in exercising her rights, a State cannot disregard the limitations which the Federal Constitution has applied to her power. Her rights do not reach to that extent. Nor can she deny to the General Government the right to exercise all its granted powers, though they may interfere with the full enjoyment of rights she would have if those powers had not been thus granted. Indeed, every addition of power to the General Government involves a corresponding diminution of the governmental powers of the States. It is carved out of them.

We have said the prohibitions of the 14th Amendment are addressed to the States. They are: "No States shall make or enforce a law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, * * * nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." They have reference to actions of the political body denominated a State, by whatever instruments or in whatever modes that action may be taken. A State acts by its legislative, its executive or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a state government, deprives another of property, life or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it.

But the constitutional Amendment was ordained for a purpose. It was to secure equal rights to all persons, and, to insure to all persons the enjoyment of such rights, power was given to Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. Such legislation must act upon persons, not upon the abstract thing denominated a State, but upon the persons who are the agents of the State in the denial of the rights which were intended to be secured. Such is the Act of March 1, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 336, and we think it was fully authorized by the Constitution.

The argument in support of the petition for a habeas corpus ignores entirely the power conferred upon Congress by the 14th Amendment. Were it not for the 5th section of that Amendment, there might be room for argument that the 1st section is only declaratory of the moral duty of the State, as was said in Ky. v. Dennison, 24 How., 66 [65 U. S., XVI., 717]. The Act under consideration in that case provided no means to compel the execution of the duty required by it, and the Constitution gave none. It was of such an Act Chief Justice Taney said, that a power vested in the United States to inflict any punishment for neglect or refusal to perform the duty required by the Act of Congress "Would place every State under the control and dominion of the General Government, even in the administration of its internal concerns and reserved rights." But the Constitution now expressly gives authority for congressional interference and compulsion in the cases embraced within the 14th Amendment. It is but a limited authority, true, extending only to a single class of cases; but within its limits it is complete. The remarks made in Ky. v. Dennison and in Collector v. Day, 11 Wall., 113 [78 U. S., XX., 122], though entirely just as applied to the cases in which they were made, are inapplicable to the case we have now in hand.

We do not perceive how holding an office under a State and claiming to act for the State can relieve the holder from obligation to obey the Constitution of the United States, or take away the power of Congress to punish his disobedience.

It was insisted during the argument on behalf of the petitioner that Congress cannot punish a State Judge for his official acts; and it was assumed that Judge Cole, in selecting the jury as he did, was performing a judicial act. This assumption cannot be admitted. Whether the act done by him was judicial or not is to be determined by its character, and not by the character of the agent. Whether he was a county judge or not is of no importance. The duty of selecting jurors might as well have been committed to a private person as to one holding the office of a judge. It often is given to county commissioners, or supervisors or assessors. In former times, the selection was made by the sheriff. In such cases, it surely is not a judicial act, in any such sense as is contended for here. It is merely a ministerial act, as much so as the act of a sheriff holding an execution, in determining upon what piece of property he will make a levy, or the act of a roadmaster in selecting laborers to work upon the roads. That the jurors are selected for a court makes no difference. So are court-criers, tipstaves, sheriffs, etc. Is their election or their appointment a judicial act?

But if the selection of jurors could be considered in any case a judicial act, can the act charged against the petitioner be considered such when he acted outside of his authority and in direct violation of the spirit of the state statute? That statute gave him no authority, when selecting jurors, from whom a panel might be drawn for a Circuit Court, to exclude all colored men merely because they were colored. Such an exclusion was not left within the limits of his discretion. It is idle, therefore, to say that the Act of Congress is unconstitutional because it inflicts penalties upon state judges for their judicial action. It does no such thing.

Upon the whole, as we are of opinion that the Act of Congress upon which the indictment against the petitioner was founded is constitutional, and that he is correctly held to answer it, and as, therefore, no object would be secured by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, the petitions are denied.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case, and from the reasons by which it is supported; and I will state the grounds of my dissent.

In Virginia all male citizens between the ages of twenty-one and sixty, who are entitled to vote and hold office under the Constitution and laws of the State, are liable, with certain exceptions not material to be here mentioned, to serve as jurors. The judge of each county or corporation court is required to prepare annually a list of such inhabitants of the county or corporation, not less than one hundred, nor exceeding three hundred in number, "as he shall think well qualified to serve as jurors, being persons of sound judgment and free from legal exception." The name of each person on the list thus prepared is to be written on a separate ballot, and placed in a box to be kept by the clerk of the court. From this box, the names of persons to be summoned as grand and petit jurors of the county are to be drawn.

The law, in thus providing for the preparation of the list of persons from whom the jurors are to be taken, makes no discrimination against persons of the colored race. The judge of the county or corporation court is restricted in his action only by the condition that the persons selected shall, in his opinion, be "well qualified to serve as jurors," be "of sound judgment," and "free from legal exception." Whether they possess these qualifications is left to his determination; and, as I shall attempt hereafter to show, for the manner in which he discharges this duty he is responsible only to the State whose officer he is and whose law he is bound to enforce.

The petitioner, J. D. Coles, is the Judge of the County Court of the County of Pittsylvania, in Virginia, and has held that office for some years. It is not pretended that, in the discharge of his judicial duties, he has ever selected as jurors persons who were not qualified to serve in that character, or who were not of sound judgment, or who were not free from legal exception. It is not even suggested in argument that he has not at all times faithfully obeyed the law of the State; yet he has been indicted in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia for having, on some undesignated day in the year 1873, excluded and failed to select as grand and petit jurors citizens of the county, on account of race, color and previous condition of servitude. The indictment does not state who those citizens were, or set forth any particulars of the offense, but charges it in the general words of a definition. The district court, nevertheless, issued a bench-warrant, upon which the Judge was arrested; and, refusing to give bail, he is held in custody to answer the indictment. He, therefore, petitions for a certiorari to that court to send up the record of its proceedings for our examination, and for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that its action was without jurisdiction, and that his imprisonment thereunder is unlawful; and he prays to be released therefrom.

The Commonwealth of Virginia has also presented a similar petition, declaring that she is injured by being deprived of the services of her judicial officer, by his unlawful arrest and imprisonment.

If the District Court had no jurisdiction, as alleged, of the matters charged against the County Judge, if they constitute no public offense for which he could be held, his arrest and imprisonment upon process issued upon the indictment were unlawful, and his petition should be granted.

It has been settled by this court, upon full examination and after some conflict of opinion among its members, that the writ of habeas corpus is a mode provided for the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, whenever by any unauthorized action of an inferior tribunal, whether it be by its order, decree or process, a citizen is restrained of his personal liberty; and that a certiorari will issue in connection with the writ, to bring up the record of the inferior tribunal for examination. In such cases this court will look into the record, to determine not whether the inferior tribunal has erred in its action, but whether it has exceeded its jurisdiction in the imprisonment of the petitioner. Ex parte Yeager, 8 Wall., 85 [75 U. S., XIX., 332]; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall., 166 [85 U. S., XXI., 875].

The indictment is founded upon the 4th section of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1875, "To Protect all Citizens in their Civil and Legal Rights," which declares, "That no citizen possessing all other qualifications, which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors, who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than $5,000."

In what I have to say, I shall endeavor to show that the District Court, in issuing its process for the arrest of the defendant and in imprisoning him, exceeded its jurisdiction: 1, because, assuming that the Act of 1875 is constitutional and valid legislation, the indictment describes no offense under it, but is void on its face; and, 2, because that Act in the section cited, so far as it relates to jurors in the State Courts, is unconstitutional and void.

The indictment merely repeats the general language of the statute. It avers that the defendant, being Judge of Pittsylvania County, and an officer charged by law with the selection of jurors to serve in the Circuit and County Courts of the county, excluded and failed to select as jurors, on account of race, color and previous condition of servitude, certain citizens of the county possessing all other qualifications prescribed by law; but it names no citizens who were thus excluded and, of course, designates no specific traversable offense. It is essential to a valid indictment that it should set forth the offense, with such particulars of time, place and person, that the accused may know the nature of the charge, and be able to prepare to meet it. It is not enough to repeat the definition of the offense in the general language of the statute, and then aver that the defendant has been guilty of the offense thus defined, without other specification. It is not sufficient, for example, to charge in an indictment that the defendant has been guilty of murder, without stating the time and place of the offense, and the name of the person murdered; or, if his name be unknown, giving such a description as to identify him. An indictment without such specification would be merely a collection of pointless words. This doctrine is only common learning; it is found in the hornbooks of the law; it is on the pages thumbed by the student in his first lessons in criminal procedure.

The Constitution, in its 6th Amendment, strikes with nullity all such vague accusations as are embraced in this indictment. It declares, repeating in this respect the doctrine of the common law, that, in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall "be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation" against him; and this means that all the essential ingredients of the offense charged must be stated, embracing, with reasonable certainty, the particulars of time, place and person or property. It is only by such information that the accused will be enabled to prepare his defense, and avail himself of his acquittal or conviction against any further prosecution for the same cause. "This principle," says Bishop in his treatise, "that the indictment must contain an allegation of every fact which is legally essential to the punishment to be inflicted, pervades the entire system of the adjudged law of criminal procedure. It is not made apparent to our understandings by a single case only, but by all the cases. Wherever we move in this department of our jurisprudence, we come in contact with it. We can no more escape from it than from the atmosphere which surrounds us." Sec. 81. To the same effect is the language of Archbold, in his treatise on Criminal Practice and Pleading. "The indictment," he says, "must state all the facts and circumstances comprised in the definition of the offense, by the rule of the common law or statute on which the indictment is founded. And these must be stated with clearness and certainty, otherwise the indictment will be bad." And he states that the principal rule as to the certainty required in an indictment may be laid down thus: "That where the definition of an offense, whether by a rule of the common law or by statute, includes generic terms (as it necessarily must), it is not sufficient that the indictment should charge the offense in the same generic terms as in the definition, but it must state the species; it must descend to particulars." P. 88. This doctrine is fully stated and illustrated in U. S. v. Cruikshank, both in the prevailing and dissenting opinion, 92 U. S., 558, 568 [XXIII., 593, 597]. Tested by it, the indictment here is but a string of words, presenting no specific offense and, therefore, not justifying the issue of any process for the arrest and imprisonment of the petitioner.

It is difficult to understand how an indictment so defective could have been drawn by the public prosecutor, unless we accept, as an explanation of it, the extraordinary statement of counsel, that the District Judge instructed the grand jury to the effect, that, whenever it appeared that a State Judge, in discharging the duty imposed on him by the law of the State to prepare annually a list of such inhabitants of his county as he should "think well qualified to serve as jurors, being persons of sound judgment and free from legal exception," had never put colored persons on the jury lists, it was to be presumed that his failure to do so was because of their race, color or previous condition of servitude, and that it was the duty of the grand jury to indict him for that offense. In the face of this ruling, no defense could be made by the accused, although he may have exercised at all times his best judgment in the selection of qualified persons, unless he could prove, what in most cases would be impossible, that in a county of many thousand inhabitants there was not a colored person qualified to serve as a juror. With this ruling there could be no necessity of alleging in the indictment anything beyond the general failure to put colored persons on the jury list, a fact which could not be disputed; and it would sufficiently inform the accused that he must be prepared, in order to rebut the presumption of guilt, to prove that there were no persons of the colored race in the county qualified to act as jurors. It is difficult to speak of this ruling in the language of moderation.

My second position is, that the 4th section of the Act of 1875, so far as it applies to the selection of jurors in the State Courts, is unconstitutional and void. Previous to the late Amendments, it would not have been contended, by any one familiar with the Constitution, that Congress was vested with any power to exercise supervision over the conduct of state officers in the discharge of their duties under the laws of the State, and prescribe a punishment for disregarding its directions. It would have been conceded that the selection of jurors was a subject exclusively for regulation by the States; that it was for them to determine who should act as jurors in their courts, from what class they should be taken, and what qualifications they should possess; and that their officers in carrying out the laws in this respect were responsible only to them. The States could have abolished jury trials altogether, and required all controversies to be submitted to the courts without their intervention. The 6th and 7th Amendments, in which jury trials are mentioned, apply only to the Federal Courts, as has been repeatedly adjudged.

The government created by the Constitution was not designed for the regulation of matters of purely local concern. The States required no aid from any external authority to manage their domestic affairs. They were fully competent to provide for the due administration of justice between their own citizens in their own courts; and they needed no directions in that matter from any other government, any more than they needed directions as to their highways and schools, their hospitals and charitable institutions, their public libraries, or the magistrates they should appoint for their towns and counties. It was only for matters which concerned all the States, and which could not be managed by them in their independent capacity, or managed only with great difficulty and embarrassment, that a general and common government was desired. Whilst they retained control of local matters, it was felt necessary that matters of general and common interest, which they could not wisely and efficiently manage, should be intrusted to a central authority. And so to the common government which grew out of this prevailing necessity was granted exclusive jurisdiction over external affairs, including the great powers of declaring war, making peace, and concluding treaties; but only such powers of internal regulation were conferred as were essential to the successful and efficient working of the government established, to facilitate intercourse and commerce between the people of the different States, and secure to them equality of protection in the several States.

That the central government was created chiefly for matters of a general character, which concerned all the States and their people, and not for matters of interior regulation, is shown as much by the history of its formation as by the express language of the Constitution. The Union preceded the Constitution. As happily expressed by the late Chief Justice: "It began among the Colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form and character and sanction from the Articles of Confederation." Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 725 [74 U. S., XIX., 237]. Those articles were prepared by the Continental Congress, which was called to provide measures for the common defense of the Colonies against the encroachments of the British Crown, and which, failing to secure redress, declared their independence. Its members foresaw that, when the independence of the Colonies was established and acknowledged, their condition as separate and independent States would be beset with dangers threatening their peace and safety; that disputes arising from conflicting interests and rivalries, always incident to neighboring Nations, would lead to armed collisions, and expose them to reconquest by the mother country. To provide against the possibility of evils of this kind, the Articles of Confederation were prepared and submitted to the Legislatures of the several States, and finally, in 1781, were adopted. They declared that the States entered into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense; the security of their liberties and their mutual and general welfare; and they bound themselves to assist each other against attacks on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretense. They clothed the new government created by them with powers supposed to be ample to secure these ends, and declared that there should be freedom of intercourse and commerce between the inhabitants of the several States. They provided for a general Congress, and, among other things, invested it with the exclusive power of determining on peace and war, except in case of invasion of a State by enemies, or imminent danger of such invasion by Indians; of sending and receiving ambassadors, entering into treaties and alliances; of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by the authority of the States or of the United States; of fixing the standard of weights and measures; of regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians; and of establishing and regulating postoffices from one State to another; and they placed numerous restraints upon the States. But by none of the articles was any interference authorized with the purely internal affairs of the States, or with any of the instrumentalities by which the States administered their governments and dispensed justice among their people; and they declared in terms that each State retained its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right which was not by the articles expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.

When the government of the Confederation failed, chiefly through the want of all coercive authority to carry into effect its measures, its power being only that of recommendation to the States, and the present Constitution was adopted, the same general ends were sought to be attained, namely: the creation of a central government, which would take exclusive charge of all our foreign relations, representing the people of all the States in that respect as one Nation, and would at the same time secure at home freedom of intercourse between the States, equality of protection to citizens of each State in the several States, uniformity of commercial regulations, a common currency, a standard of weights and measures, one postal system, and such other matters as concerned all the States and their people.

Accordingly, the new government was invested with powers adequate to the accomplishment of these purposes, with which it could act directly upon the people, and not by recommendation to the States, and enforce its measures through tribunals and officers of its own creation. There were also restraints placed upon the action of the States to prevent interference with the authority of the new government, and to secure to all persons protection against punishment by legislative decree, and insure the fulfillment of contract obligations. But the control of matters of purely local concern, not coming within the scope of the powers granted or the restraints mentioned, was left, where it had always existed, with the States. The new government being one of granted powers, its authority was limited by them and such as were necessarily implied for their execution. But lest, from a misconception of their extent, these powers might be abused, the 10th Amendment was at an early day adopted, declaring that "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Now, if we look into the Constitution, we shall not find a single word, from its opening to its concluding line, nor in any of the Amendments in force before the close of the civil war, nor, as I shall hereafter endeavor to show, in those subsequently adopted, which authorizes any interference by Congress with the States in the administration of their governments, and the enforcement of their laws with respect to any matter over which jurisdiction was not surrendered to the United States. The design of its framers was not to destroy the States, but to form a more perfect union between them, and, whilst creating a central government for certain great purposes, to leave to the States in all matters the jurisdiction of which was not surrendered the functions essential to separate and independent existence. And so the late Chief Justice, speaking for the court in 1869, said: "Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy to the States, through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States and the maintenance of their governments are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National Government;" and then he adds, in that striking language which gives to an old truth new force and significance, that "The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States." Texas v. White [supra.]

And Mr. Justice Nelson, also speaking for the court, in 1871, used this language: "The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the States within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the 10th Amendment, 'reserved,' are as independent of the General Government as that government within its spheres is independent of the States." And again: "We have said that one of the reserved powers was that to establish a Judicial Department; it would have been more accurate, and in accordance with the existing state of things at the time, to have said the power to maintain a Judicial Department. All of the thirteen States were in the possession of this power, and had exercised it at the adoption of the Constitution; and it is not pretended that any grant of it to the General Government is found in that instrument. It is, therefore, one of the sovereign powers vested in the States by their constitutions, which remained unaltered and unimpaired, and in respect to which the State is as independent of the General Government as that government is independent of the States." Collector v. Day, 11 Wall., 124-126 [78 U. S., XX., 126].

The cases of Texas v. White, and Collector v. Day were decided after the 13th and 14th Amendments, upon which it is sought to maintain the legislation in question, were adopted; and with their provisions the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Nelson, and the court for which they spoke, were familiar. Yet neither they, nor any other Judge of the court, suggested that the doctrines announced in the opinions, from which I have quoted, were in any respect modified or affected by the Amendments.

Nothing, in my judgment, could have a greater tendency to destroy the independence and autonomy of the States; reduce them to a humiliating and degrading dependence upon the central government; engender constant irritation and destroy that domestic tranquillity which it was one of the objects of the Constitution to insure, than the doctrine asserted in this case, that Congress can exercise coercive authority over judicial officers of the States in the discharge of their duties under state laws. It will be only another step in the same direction towards consolidation, when it assumes to exercise similar coercive authority over Governors and legislators of the States.

The Constitution declares that "A person charged in any State with treason, felony or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime." And yet in the case of Com. v. Dennison, where a fugitive from justice from Kentucky was demanded from the Governor of Ohio, and on his refusal application was made to this court for a mandamus to compel him to perform his duty in this respect it was held that there was no clause or provision in the Constitution which armed the Government of the United States with authority to compel the Executive of a State to perform his duty, nor to inflict any punishment for his neglect or refusal. "Indeed, such a power," said Mr. Chief Justice Taney, speaking for the whole court, "would place every State under the control and dominion of the General Government, even in the administration of its internal concerns and reserved rights." 24 How., 107 [65 U. S., XVI., 729]. And Mr. Justice Nelson, in the case of Collector v. Day, where it was held that it was not competent for Congress to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a State, said, that "Any government whose means employed in conducting its operations are made subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government." I could add to these authorities, if anything more were required, that all the recorded utterances of the statesmen who participated in framing the Constitution and urging its adoption, and of the publicists and jurists who have since studied its language and aided in the enforcement of its provisions, are inconsistent with the pretension advanced in this case by the counsel of the government.

The duties of the County Judge in the selection of jurors were judicial in their nature. They involved the exercise of discretion and judgment. He was to determine who were qualified to serve in that character, and for that purpose whether they possessed sound judgment, and were free from legal exceptions. The law under which he acted had been in force for many years, and had been always considered by the judicial authorities of Virginia to be in conformity with its Constitution, which inhibits the Legislature from requiring of its judges any other than judicial duties. A test as to the character of an act is found in the power of a writ of mandamus to enforce its performance in a particular way. If the act be a judicial one, the writ can only require the judge to proceed in the discharge of his duty with reference to it; the manner of performance cannot be dictated. Here the writ could not command the County Judge to select as jurors any particular persons, black or white, but only to proceed and select such as are qualified; its command in that respect being subject to the limitation incident to all commands of such writs upon judicial officers.

The 13th and 14th Amendments are relied upon, as already stated, to support the legislation in question. The 13th Amendment declares "That neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." The 14th Amendment, in its 1st section, which is the only one having any bearing upon the questions involved in this case, declares that "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The 15th Amendment, which declares that "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude," is not material to the question before us, except as showing that it was only with respect to the suffrage that an interdict was in terms placed against legislation on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. Equality in their civil rights was, in other ways, secured to persons of the colored race; and the ballot being assured to them, an effectual means against unjust legislation was placed in their hands. To each of these amendments a clause is added, authorizing Congress to enforce its provisions by "appropriate legislation."

The history of the Amendments is fresh in the recollection of all of us. They grew out of the late civil war and the events which followed it. They were primarily designed to give freedom to persons of the African race, prevent their future enslavement, make them citizens, prevent discriminating state legislation against their rights as freemen, and secure to them the ballot. The generality of the language used necessarily extends some of their provisions to all persons of every race and color; but in construing the Amendments and giving effect to them, the occasion of their adoption and the purposes they were designed to attain should be always borne in mind. Nor should it be forgotten that they are additions to the previous amendments, and are to be construed in connection with them and the original Constitution as one instrument. They do not, in terms, contravene or repeal anything which previously existed in the Constitution and those Amendments. Aside from the extinction of slavery, and the declaration of citizenship, their provisions are merely prohibitory upon the States; and there is nothing in their language or purpose which indicates that they are to be construed or enforced in any way different from that adopted with reference to previous restraints upon the States. The provision authorizing Congress to enforce them by appropriate legislation does not enlarge their scope, nor confer any authority which would not have existed independently of it. No legislation would be appropriate which should contravene the express prohibitions upon Congress previously existing, as, for instance, that it should not pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law. Nor would legislation be appropriate which should conflict with the implied prohibitions upon Congress. They are as obligatory as the express prohibitions. The Constitution, as already stated, contemplates the existence and independence of the States in all their reserved powers. If the States were destroyed, there could, of course, be no United States. In the language of this court, in Collector v. Day, "Without them the General Government itself would disappear from the family of nations." Legislation could not, therefore, be appropriate which, under pretense of prohibiting a State from doing certain things, should tend to destroy it, or any of its essential attributes. To every State, as understood in the American sense, there must be, with reference to the subjects over which it has jurisdiction, absolute freedom from all external interference in the exercise of its legislative, judicial and executive authority. Congress could not undertake to prescribe the duties of a State Legislature and the rules it should follow, and the motives by which it should be governed, and authorize criminal prosecutions against the members if its directions were disregarded; for the independence of the Legislature is essential to the independence and autonomy of the State. Congress could not lay down rules for the guidance of the state judiciary, and prescribe to it the law and the motives by which it should be controlled, and if these were disregarded, direct criminal proceedings against its members; because a judiciary independent of external authority is essential to the independence of the State, and also, I may add, to a just and efficient administration of justice in her courts. Congress could not dictate to the Executive of a State the bills he might approve, the pardons and reprieves he might grant, or the manner in which he might discharge the functions of his office, and assume to punish him if its dictates were disregarded, because his independence, within the reserved powers, is essential to that of the State. Indeed, the independence of a State consists in the independence of its legislative, executive and judicial officers, through whom alone it acts. If this were not so, a State would cease to be a self-existing and an indestructible member of the Union, and would be brought to the level of a dependent municipal corporation, existing only with such powers as Congress might prescribe.

I cannot think I am mistaken in saying that a change so radical in the relation between the federal and state authorities, as would justify legislation interfering with the independent action of the different departments of the state governments, in all matters over which the States retain jurisdiction, was never contemplated by the recent Amendments. The People, in adopting them, did not suppose they were altering the fundamental theory of their dual system of governments. The discussions attending their consideration in Congress, and before the People, when presented to the Legislatures of the States for adoption, can be successfully appealed to in support of this assertion. The Union was preserved at a fearful cost of life and property. The institution of slavery in a portion of the country was the cause of constant irritation and crimination between the People of the States where it existed and those of the free States, which finally led to a rupture between them and to the civil war. As the war progressed, its sacrifices and burdens filled the People of the loyal States with a determination that not only should the Union be preserved, but that the institution which, in their judgment, had threatened its dissolution should be abolished. The Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln expressed this determination, though placed on the ground of military necessity. The 13th Amendment carried it into the organic law. That Amendment prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude, except for crime, within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction. Its language is not restricted to the slavery of any particular class. It applies to all men; and embraces in its comprehensive language not merely that form of slavery which consists in the denial of personal rights to the slave, and subjects him to the condition of a chattel, but also serfage, vassalage, peonage, villeinage and every other form of compulsory service for the benefit, pleasure or caprice of others. It was intended to render everyone within the domain of the Republic a freeman, with the right to follow the ordinary pursuits of life without other restraints than such as are applied to all others, and to enjoy equally with them the earnings of his labor. But it confers no political rights; it leaves the States free, as before its adoption, to determine who shall hold their offices and participate in the administration of their laws. A similar prohibition of slavery and involuntary servitude was in the Constitution of several States previous to its adoption by the United States; and it was never held to confer any political rights.

On the 18th of December, 1865, this Amendment was ratified; that is, the official Proclamation of its ratification was then made; and in April of the following year the Civil Rights Act was passed. Its 1st section declares that all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are "citizens of the United States," and that "Such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, of which the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right in every State and Territory in the United States, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white persons." This legislation was intended to secure to all persons in the United States practical freedom. But its validity was questioned in many quarters entitled to consideration, and some of its provisions not long afterwards were declared by state courts to be beyond the constitutional authority of Congress. Bowlin v. Com., 2 Bush, 15. There were also complaints made that, notwithstanding the amendment abolishing slavery and involuntary servitude, except for crime, the freedmen were, by legislation in some of the Southern States, subjected to such burdensome disabilities in the acquisition and enjoyment of property, and the pursuit of happiness, as to render their freedom of little value. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 36 [83 U. S., XXI., 394]. There were, besides, complaints of the existence, in those sections, of a feeling of dislike towards citizens of the North seeking residence there, and towards such of their own citizens as had adhered to the National Government during the war, which could not fail to find expression in hostile and discriminating legislation. It is immaterial whether these complaints were justified or not; they were believed by many persons to be well founded. To remove the cause of them; to obviate objections to the validity of legislation similar to that contained in the 1st section of the Civil Rights Act; to prevent the possibility of hostile and discriminating legislation in future by a State against any citizen of the United States, and the enforcement of any such legislation already had; and to secure to all persons within the jurisdiction of the States the equal protection of the laws, the 1st section of the 14th Amendment was adopted. Its first clause declared who are citizens of the United States and of the States. It thus removed from discussion the question, which had previously been debated, and though decided, not settled, by the judgment in the Dred Scott Case, 19 How., 393 [60 U. S., XV., 691], whether descendants of persons brought to this country and sold as slaves were citizens, within the meaning of the Constitution. It also recognized, if it did not create, a national citizenship, as contradistinguished from that of the States. But the privilege or the duty, whichever it may be called, of acting as a juror in the courts of the country, is not an incident of citizenship. Women are citizens; so are the aged above sixty, and children in their minority; yet they are not allowed in Virginia to act as jurors. Though some of these are, in all respects, qualified for such service, no one will pretend that their exclusion by law from the jury list impairs their rights as citizens.

The second clause of the 1st section of the Amendment declares that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." In the Slaughter-House Cases, it was held by a majority of the court that this clause had reference only to privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, as distinguished from those of citizens of the States and, therefore, did not apply to those fundamental civil rights which belong to citizens of all free governments, such as the right to acquire and enjoy property and pursue happiness, subject only to such just restraints as might be prescribed for the general good. If this construction be correct, there can be no pretense that the privilege or duty of acting as a juror in a State Court is within the inhibition of the clause. Nor could it be within that inhibition if a broader construction were given to the clause, and it should be held, as contended by the minority of the court in Slaughter-House Cases, that it prohibits the denial or abridgment by any State of those fundamental privileges and immunities which of right belong to citizens of all free governments; and with which the Declaration of Independence proclaimed that all men were endowed by their Creator, and to secure which governments were instituted among men. These fundamental rights were secured, previous to the Amendment, to citizens of each State in the other States, by the 2d section of the 4th article of the Constitution, which declares that "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." Among those privileges and immunities it was never contended that jury duty or jury service was included.

The 3d clause in the 1st section of the Amendment declares that no State "Shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law." It will not be contended that this clause confers upon the citizen any right to serve as a juror in the State Courts. It exists in the Constitution of nearly all the States, and is only an additional security against arbitrary deprivation of life and liberty, and arbitrary spoliation of property. It means that neither can be taken, or the enjoyment thereof impaired, except in the course of the regular administration of the law in the established tribunals. The existence of this clause in the Amendment is to me a persuasive argument that those who framed it, and the Legislatures of the States which adopted it never contemplated that the prohibition was to be enforced in any other way than through the judicial tribunals, as previous prohibitions upon the States had always been enforced. If Congress could, as an appropriate means to enforce the prohibition, prescribe criminal prosecutions for its infraction against legislators, judges, and other officers of the States, it would be authorized to frame a vast portion of their laws; for there are few subjects upon which legislation can be had, besides life, liberty and property. In determining what constitutes a deprivation of property, it might prescribe the conditions upon which property shall be acquired and held, and declare as to what subjects property rights shall exist. In determining what constitutes deprivation of liberty, it might prescribe in what way and by what means the liberty of the citizen shall be deemed protected. In prescribing punishment for deprivation of life, it might prescribe a code of criminal procedure. All this and much more might be done if it once be admitted, as the court asserts in this case, that Congress can authorize a criminal prosecution for the infraction of the prohibitions. It cannot prescribe punishment without defining crime and, therefore, must give expression to its own views as to what constitutes protection to life, liberty and property.

The 4th clause in the 1st section of the Amendment declares that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Upon this clause the counsel of the District Judge chiefly rely to sustain the validity of the legislation in question. But the universality of the protection secured necessarily renders their position untenable. All persons within the jurisdiction of the State, whether permanent residents or temporary sojourners, whether old or young, male or female, are to be equally protected. Yet no one will contend that equal protection to women, to children, to the aged, to aliens, can only be secured by allowing persons of the class to which they belong to act as jurors in cases affecting their interests. The equality of protection intended does not require that all persons shall be permitted to participate in the government of the State and the administration of its laws, to hold its offices, or be clothed with any public trusts. As already said, the universality of the protection assured repels any such conclusion.

The equality of the protection secured extends only to civil rights as distinguished from those which are political, or arise from the form of the government and its mode of administration. And yet the reach and influence of the Amendment are immense. It opens the courts of the country to everyone, on the same terms, for the security of his person and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; it assures to everyone the same rules of evidence and modes of procedure; it allows no impediments to the acquisition of property and the pursuit of happiness, to which all are not subjected; it suffers no other or greater burdens or charges to be laid upon one than such as are equally borne by others; and in the administration of criminal justice it permits no different or greater punishment to be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offenses. It secures to all persons their civil rights upon the same terms; but it leaves political rights, or such as arise from the form of government and its administration, as they stood previous to its adoption. It has no more reference to them than it has to social rights and duties, which do not rest upon any positive law, though they are more potential in controlling the intercourse of individuals. In the consideration of questions growing out of these Amendments much confusion has arisen from a failure to distinguish between the civil and the political rights of citizens. Civil rights are absolute and personal. Political rights, on the other hand, are conditioned and dependent upon the discretion of the elective or appointing power, whether that be the People acting through the ballot, or one of the departments of their government. The civil rights of the individual are never to be withheld, and may be always judicially enforced. The political rights which he may enjoy, such as holding office and discharging a public trust, are qualified because their possession depends on his fitness, to be adjudged by those whom society has clothed with the elective authority. The 13th and 14th Amendments were designed to secure the civil rights of all persons, of every race, color and condition; but they left to the States to determine to whom the possession of political powers should be intrusted. This is manifest from the fact that when it was desired to confer political power upon the newly made citizens of the States, as was done by inhibiting the denial to them of the suffrage on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, a new amendment was required.

The doctrine of the District Judge, for which the counsel contend, would lead to some singular results. If, when a colored person is accused of a criminal offense, the presence of persons of his race on the jury by which he is to be tried is essential to secure to him the equal protection of the laws, it would seem that the presence of such persons on the Bench would be equally essential, if the court should consist of more than one judge, as in many cases it may; and if it should consist of a single judge, that such protection would be impossible. A similar objection might be raised to the composition of any appellate court to which the case, after verdict, might be carried.

The position that, in cases where the rights of colored persons are concerned, justice will not be done to them unless they have a mixed jury, is founded upon the notion that in such cases white persons will not be fair and honest jurors. If this position be correct, there ought not to be any white persons on the jury where the interests of colored persons only are involved. That jury would not be an honest or fair one, of which any of its members should be governed in his judgment by other considerations than the law and the evidence, and that decision would hardly be considered just, which should be reached by a sort of compromise, in which the prejudices of one race were set off against the prejudices of the other. To be consistent, those who hold this notion should contend that, in cases affecting members of the colored race only, the juries should be composed entirely of colored persons, and that the presiding judge should be of the same race. To this result the doctrine asserted by the District Court logically leads. The jury de medietate lingue, anciently allowed in England for the trial of an alien, was expressly authorized by statute, probably as much because of the difference of language and customs between him and Englishmen, and the greater probability of his defense being more fully understood, as because it would be heard in a more friendly spirit by jurors of his own country and language.

If these views as to the purport and meaning of the 13th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution be correct, there is no warrant for the Act of Congress under which the indictment in this case was found, and the arrest and imprisonment of the petitioner was unlawful, and his release should be ordered.

The case is one which should not be delayed for the slow process of a trial in the court below, and a subsequent appeal, in case of conviction, to this court, to be heard years hence. The Commonwealth of Virginia has represented to us that the services of her judicial officer are needed in her courts for the administration of justice between her citizens, and she asks that the highest tribunal of the Union will release him from his unlawful arrest, in order that he may perform the duties of his office. Those who regard the independence of the States in all their reserved powers—and this includes the independence of their Legislative, Judicial and Executive Departments—as essential to the successful maintenance of our form of government, cannot fail to view, with the gravest apprehension for the future, the indictment, in a court of the United States, of a judicial officer of a State for the manner in which he has discharged his duties under her laws, and of which she makes no complaint. The proceeding is a gross offense to the State; it is an attack upon her sovereignty, in matters over which she has never surrendered her jurisdiction. The doctrine which sustains it, carried to its logical results, would degrade and sink her to the level of a mere local municipal corporation; for if Congress can render an officer of a State criminally liable for the manner in which he discharges his duties under her laws, it can prescribe the nature and extent of the penalty to which he shall be subjected on conviction; it may imprison him for life, or punish him by removal from office. And if it can make the exclusion of persons from jury service on account of race or color a criminal offense, it can make their exclusion from office on that account also criminal; and, adopting the doctrine of the District Judge in this case, the failure to appoint them to office will be presumptive evidence of their exclusion on that ground. To such a result are we logically led. The legislation of Congress is founded, and is sustained by this court, as it seems to me, upon a theory as to what constitutes the equal protection of the laws, which is purely speculative, not warranted by any experience of the country, and not in accordance with the understanding of the people as to the meaning of those terms since the organization of the government.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Clifford concurs with me in this opinion.

NORTHWESTERN UNION PACKET COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF ST. LOUIS.

Wharfage fees—power of corporation.

*1. A municipal corporation, owning improved wharves and other artificial means, which it has provided and maintains at its own cost, for the benefit of those engaged in commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States, is not prohibited by the National Constitution from charging and collecting from those using its wharves and facilities, such reasonable fees as will fairly remunerate it for the use of the property.

2. Packet Co. v. Keokuk [XXIV.], affirmed.

Argued Dec. 16, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. James H. Davidson and D. D. Duncan for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Leverett Bell, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error is a Corporation of the State of Iowa and, during the years 1870, 1871, and up to March 28, 1872, was engaged with steamboats and barges of which it was the owner, in the business of commerce and navigation on the Mississippi River, between ports and places in different States. Its steamboats and barges, in the course of such business, landed at St. Louis and, during the period named, it paid to that City, upon the demand of its constituted authorities, large sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to $6,571.35. These sums were exacted as wharfage dues, in virtue of certain ordinances of the City, one of which was entitled "An Ordinance Establishing and Regulating the Harbor Department," and the other, "An Ordinance to Reduce the Rate of Wharfage in the City of St. Louis."

The authority of the City to collect these fees is referred to section 30 of the ordinance first named, which is as follows:

"There shall be collected from each and every boat, of whatever kind or description, * * * for each and every time the same shall come within the harbor of said City, and land at any wharf or landing, or be made fast thereto, or to any boat thereto fastened, or shall receive or discharge any freight or passengers in this City, or shall tow coal or any other article in the harbor, seven and one half cents for each ton of said boat's burden, by custom-house measurement, as wharfage dues. If the boat have no custom-house measurement, or if the harbor-master be not satisfied as to the correctness of said boat's custom-house measurement, he is hereby empowered and directed to ascertain the tonnage of said boat by measurement, according to the rules and regulations of the United States in the measurement of boats, and wharfage shall be collected according to such measurement: Provided, That any boat making regular daily, semi-weekly, tri-weekly or weekly trips, or is engaged in the business of towing, and ferry-boats, may pay wharfage dues at a different or special rate, as may be provided by this ordinance."

The payments in question were made by the Company whenever demanded, but always under protest, and without waiving any right it had to recover the same from the City by an action at law.

This action was instituted to compel the repayment of the sums thus collected, upon the ground that the ordinances in question, and particularly the section above quoted, was in conflict: 1, with the clause prohibiting any State, without the consent of Congress, from laying any duty of tonnage; 2, with the clause which declares that "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State; no preference shall be given any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of any one State over those of another; nor shall any vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another;" 3, with the clause conferring upon Congress the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes; 4, with the "Treaty of Paris, 1783, 8 Stat. at L., 80," which declares that "The navigation of the River Mississippi, from its source to the ocean, shall forever remain free and open to the subjects of Great Britain and the citizens of the United States;" 5, with the Treaty of Spain, concluded October 27, 1795, 8 Stat. at L., 138, which declares: " * * * And His Catholic Majesty has likewise agreed that the navigation of the said river, in its whole breadth, from its source to the ocean, shall be free only to his subjects and the citizens of the United States;" 6, with the Ordinance of 1787, 1 Stat. at L., 51, N, which, among other things, provides "That the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of the said territory as to the citizens of the United States, that may be admitted into the Confederacy, without any tax, impost or duty therefor."

The court below, the Circuit and District Judges concurring, was of opinion that the plaintiff in error was legally bound to pay the sums so exacted and paid as wharfage fees, under the ordinances to which we have referred. Judgment was, accordingly, given for the City. Whether the facts set forth in the special finding are sufficient to sustain the judgment, is the controlling question arising upon this writ of error.

The elaborate argument of counsel for the Company is directed to the support of the first, second and third of the foregoing propositions. He withholds any suggestion or argument in support of the remaining propositions, for the obvious reason, as we suppose, that the case must fail altogether unless the plaintiff in error can successfully maintain the invalidity of the ordinances, under some one or more of the constitutional provisions by him cited. If the particular section of the ordinance, by virtue of which these collections were made, is not in conflict with the Federal Constitution, there would be no ground whatever for holding that it was inconsistent with either of the Treaties referred to, or with the Ordinance of 1787. We will, therefore, only consider whether the City of St. Louis was inhibited by any provision of the Federal Constitution from charging and collecting the fees, to enforce the repayment of which is the object of this action.

By the charter of the City, its Mayor and Council were invested with authority to regulate the stationing, anchoring and mooring of vessels, within the City, and to charge and collect wharfage on firewood, lumber, logs, etc., brought to the Port of St. Louis. The Council was also required, from time to time, to provide, by ordinance, for the levy and collection of taxes, licenses, wharfage, and other dues, under penalty for neglect or refusal to pay the same; also, for maintaining the permanency of and improving the wharf and harbor, and for opening and extending the wharf, applying, in its discretion, all the net receipts from wharfage to the credit of the wharf funds.

Under the authority thus conferred, the City passed the ordinance regulating and establishing its harbor department and prescribing the duties of the harbor-master.

By that ordinance it is declared that the harbor of the City comprises the bed of the Mississippi River, its channels, sloughs, bayous, bars and islands, from the mouth of the Missouri River to the southern boundary of the City. The jurisdiction of the harbor-master is made to extend over all the lands, river bank, and beach dedicated, condemned, occupied or used for wharf purposes, within the City, and over so much of the Mississippi River, and to the middle of the main channel thereof as lies immediately in front of the City, over which the City has control.

It is made his duty to direct the landing and stationing of all water-craft arriving at any point within the limits of the City, and to direct the discharge and removal of their cargoes, so as to prevent interference between different vessels and their cargoes; to superintend the arrangement of freight, merchandise and materials for repairs in the river bank, so that the same shall occupy as little space as possible; to see that all combustible materials on the landing are sufficiently protected from fire; to keep the wharf and the river along the shore free from improper obstructions; to keep in repair the ring-bolts provided for fastening vessels; to regulate and control by proper rules to be established and published, all vehicles traversing the wharf or landing, and to remove thence such as unnecessarily obstruct free passage upon said wharf or landing, and generally to exercise complete supervision and control over the wharf, river bank, landing and Front Street.

It is also made his duty, under the direction of the Mayor, to provide, at the expense of the City, whenever the same shall be deemed necessary, suitable posts and ring-bolts for boats and rafts to make fast to and keep the same in repair; also to extend the steamboat landing, north and south, as soon as the wharf was made suitable for the landing of merchandise and the depth of the water shall justify, so as to give room required by boats for the handling, receiving and discharging of freight, and for the free passage of drays and other vehicles, and to designate the boundary of each class of boats, according to the wants of different trades at the time of such extension.

The duties thus imposed upon the harbor-master, if faithfully discharged, must, it will be conceded, materially advance and not obstruct or burden trade and business on the Mississippi River, especially at the Port of St. Louis. Services rendered by him in the execution of those duties would be in aid, and not a hindrance, of commerce and navigation. Besides, as the special finding discloses, the City acquired, at its own expense, and owns the property within its limits along the west bank of the Mississippi River, and for the purposes of a wharf has improved, paved and maintains in repair, at its own cost, one and a half miles of the same at an enormous expense. That wharf was used by the plaintiff in error in conducting its business, at all stages of water, for the purpose of receiving and discharging freight, and for the convenience of passengers in getting on and off its boats. Its boats landed at and used only the improved wharf. And it is found as a fact in the case that the fees demanded from and paid by the Company, under the city ordinances, "Were reasonable in amount, and a reasonable compensation for the use of defendant's wharf, if defendant (the City) was entitled to collect any sums whatever under said ordinance."

From this analysis of the special finding and the ordinance establishing and regulating the Harbor Department of St. Louis, it is not difficult to apprehend the nature and scope of the question before us. Briefly stated, it is, whether a municipal corporation, owning improved wharves and other artificial means which it has provided and maintains, at its own cost, for the benefit of those engaged in commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States, is prohibited by the National Constitution from charging and collecting from those using its wharves and facilities, such reasonable fees as will fairly remunerate it for the use of its property.

This precise question has heretofore received careful consideration by this court, and we recognize nothing in this case which has not been concluded by former adjudications, or which requires extended discussion.

In Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall., 577 [87 U. S., XXII., 417], upon writ of error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, we had occasion to consider the constitutional validity of an ordinance of the City of New Orleans, whereby "levee and wharfage dues" were imposed upon steamboats mooring or landing "in any part of the port" of that City, the amount of such duties to be determined, at a fixed rate, by the tonnage of such vessels. That case is relied upon here as sustaining the ground upon which the plaintiff in error assails the validity of the ordinance passed by the municipal authorities of St. Louis. We do not, however, assent to any such construction of our opinion in that case. It was in evidence there, that not more than one tenth of the twenty miles and more of the levee and banks of the Mississippi, within the corporate limits of New Orleans, had any wharf, and that vessels often landed at various places, within the City, where no wharfage facilities existed. It does not appear from the opinion of the court, or from the reporter's statement of that case, where the landings of Cannon's steamer were actually made, whether at the improved wharf of the City, or at points where no wharf accommodations were furnished for the use of vessels. We, therefore, held, that the ordinance, interpreted in the light of the admitted condition of the river and its banks within the City, imposed a duty of tonnage for the mere privilege of stopping, mooring or landing at the Port of New Orleans, and that the charges exacted could not, in view of the special circumstances disclosed by the evidence, be regarded or supported, as compensation simply for the use of the City's wharves. But we there expressly recognized, as essential to the interests of commerce and navigation, and as entirely consistent with the provisions of the National Constitution, the right of a municipal corporation, thereunto authorized by the State which created it, to demand from those engaged in commerce just compensation for the use of wharves, or other artificial facilities, provided and maintained at its expense.

That such was the import of our decision in Cannon v. New Orleans is shown in the recent case of Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80 [XXIV., 377], where the question under consideration was again and very fully examined in connection with an ordinance of Keokuk, which, in its main features, is like the St. Louis now under examination. By the Keokuk ordinance wharfage fees were charged whenever a steamboat should make fast to any part of the wharf of that city, or to any vessel, or other thing at or upon said wharf, or should receive or discharge any passengers or freight thereon, or should use any part of the wharf for the purpose of discharging, receiving, or landing any freight or passenger; the fees, in such cases, to be measured by the tonnage of the boat using the wharf. The unanimous judgment of the court was that the Keokuk ordinance was not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States; that the wharfage fees collectible thereunder were by way of compensation to the city for the use of its property, and were not duties, taxes or burdens for the mere privilege of entering the Port of Keokuk or remaining in it or departing from it.

We need not repeat the reasons there given for the distinction between tonnage duties, which the States are prohibited from levying without the consent of Congress, and wharfage dues, properly so called, imposed in good faith, and to the extent only of fair remuneration for wharf accommodations furnished for the convenience of trade and commerce. We adhere to the doctrines announced in that case. They are decisive of the present one. The sums paid by the plaintiff in error were exacted and paid as compensation for the use of an improved wharf and not for the mere privilege of entering or stopping at the Port of St. Louis, or for landing at the shore, in its natural condition, where there were no conveniences which could be called a wharf. The amount paid is conceded to have been just and reasonable compensation for vessels and barges such as those owned by the plaintiff in error. It was not out of proportion to the advantages and benefits enjoyed in the use of the improved wharf. The one was a fair equivalent for the other. Nor is there any ground whatever to suppose that these wharfage fees were exacted for the purpose of increasing the general revenue of the City beyond what was necessary to meet its outlay, from time to time, in maintaining its wharves in such condition as the immense business and trade of that locality required. We are not at liberty, from anything disclosed by the record, to suppose that the City intended its ordinance as a mere cover for laying duties of tonnage within the meaning of the Federal Constitution.

What has been said renders it unnecessary to consider any other question presented in argument.

To avoid misapprehension, it is, perhaps, well to say that we express no opinion as to the validity of any of the provisions of the city charter or ordinances except such as have direct reference to the case before us. We restrict our decision to the single point that the City was not prohibited by the Federal Constitution from collecting the wharfage fees in question as reasonable compensation for the use of its wharves by the plaintiff in error.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOHN W. TOBIN ET AL.

Rates of wharfage—valid ordinance.

1. The ordinance of the City of Vicksburg, passed July 12, 1865, entitled "An ordinance establishing the rate of wharfage to be collected from steamboats and other water-craft, landing and lying at the City of Vicksburg," is constitutional and valid.

NOTE.—Wharfs; right to construct; right to charge wharfage; lien for. See note to Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S., XXIV., 373.

2. Such ordinance does not intrench upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, nor does it lay a duty of tonnage, in the sense of the Constitution.

Argued Jan. 15, 1880. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. L. Nugent, and P. Phillips, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. W. B. Pittman and A. B. Pittman, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error involves the constitutional validity of an ordinance of the City of Vicksburg, passed July 12, 1865, entitled "An ordinance establishing the rate of wharfage to be collected from steamboats and other water-craft, landing and lying at the City of Vicksburg."

The ordinance declares that all steamboats "landing at this (that) City" shall pay wharfage at the following rates: all packets terminating their trips at the City, per week, $10; all steamboats under 1,000 tons burthen, passing and re-passing, for each landing, $10; and, for each one exceeding 1,000 tons, $1 for every 100 tons excess; circus or exhibition boats, $5 per day.

The ordinance further provides that, if the captain or officer in command of any steamboat or water-craft shall refuse to comply with its provisions, on conviction thereof he shall be charged $100 for each landing thereafter, until the settlement of the litigated claim.

Within the six years immediately preceding the commencement of this action, the City of Vicksburg collected from the defendants in error (without protest or objection on their part, although they knew the rates established by the city) the sum of $5,400, "for and on account," as the special verdict of the jury recites, "of wharfage for the landing of plaintiffs' (defendants in error) boats at the city landing of Vicksburg on the Mississippi, plaintiffs' boats being at the time engaged in the coasting trade on said river, between New Orleans and Vicksburg, and other ports above Vicksburg."

This action was instituted to recover from the City the sums thus exacted from the defendants in error. Judgment upon the special verdict of the jury was rendered against the City, to reverse which this writ of error is prosecuted.

It appeared, upon the trial in the circuit court, that the Corporation of Vicksburg has been the riparian owner of the city landing, on account of which these charges were made, since 1851; that the former owner uniformly collected wharfage from steamboats stopping at said landing up to 1851, and that the City had done the same ever since that date, but at higher rates; that the landing is comprised in a river front in the City, covering a length of about 1800 feet between high and low water-mark; that the landing is worth $50,000, in the repair and improvement of which the City had expended, within the six years preceding the trial $40,000; that the only improvement made by the City at the landing was the grading and piling of the bank to prevent caving; that, although the landing was not paved or covered with plank, it was a good landing in dry weather, but too muddy in wet weather to use as a place of deposit for freight; that the annual net receipts by the City from the use of the landing did not exceed $11,500; that the wharf and harbor-master demanded and received from each boat stopping at the city landing $10, and no more, without reference to the tonnage of the boat or the time it lay at the landing.

It was also in evidence that, during the whole period for which collections were made from defendants in error, the Merchants' Wharf-Boat Association had a wharf-boat lying at the city landing, and, for the privilege of occupying the space necessary therefor, had paid the City $2,000 per annum; that, during that period, the boats of the defendants in error had touched the city landing only about twenty times, upon all other occasions landing against or fastening to the boat of the Merchant's Association.

The record discloses other facts; but they do not seem to be material in the determination of the case.

The judgment rests mainly upon the ground that the ordinance by virtue of which the money sued for was demanded and collected was in conflict, as well with the clause of the Constitution of the United States conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States, as with the clause inhibiting the States from laying duties of tonnage.

This question is disposed of by the opinion just rendered in the case of Packet Co. v. St. Louis [ante, 688]. It is, in substance, the same question as that decided in Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80 [XXIV., 377]. The latter case had not been determined in this court, when the judgment now complained of was rendered. Here, as in the cases concerning the ordinances of Keokuk and St. Louis, the sums sued for were exacted and received as wharfage fees, by way of compensation for the use of an improved wharf, purchased and maintained by a municipal corporation at its own cost, for the benefit of commerce and navigation. They were not exacted for the mere privilege of entering or remaining in or departing from the Port of Vicksburg. The ordinance in question does not, therefore, intrench upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, nor does it lay a duty of tonnage in the sense of the Constitution.

It is contended that this ordinance, in explicit language, imposes a tax for merely landing at the City, and at points on the shore where there may have been, in fact, no wharf. If the ordinance was susceptible of that construction, a question would be presented for our determination altogether different from the one before us. Clearly, the City could not collect wharfage for the use of the unimproved shore of the river, or for that which was not, in any fair business sense, a wharf. Here there was an improved wharf and, as such, it was used by the boats of the defendants in error. The sums demanded were paid as and for wharfage dues, collectible under an ordinance which, rightly construed, only authorized the imposition of dues, by way of reasonable compensation, for the use, not of the river shore in its natural condition, but of the wharves of the City, erected and maintained at public expense.

One other point deserves notice. The circumstance that the defendants in error paid the Merchant's Wharf-Boat Association its regular charges for landing at or against its boat does not affect the right of the City to demand from vessels the wharfage dues prescribed by the ordinance in question. It does not appear that the City, by granting the privilege which it did to that association, waived or intended to surrender its claim for wharfage from vessels landing against the association wharf-boat. All freight received by or discharged from such vessels necessarily passed over the City's wharf to its destination. It is not to be presumed that the City intended, by the special privileges granted to the Merchants' Wharf-boat Association, to waive its claim for wharfage dues from vessels landing against that boat, and using the City's wharf.

In view of what has been said touching the validity of the city ordinance, it is unnecessary to inquire whether, had such ordinance been held to be unconstitutional, the defendants in error, under the evidence in this action, could recover back what they had paid without protest or objection, and with a full knowledge of all the facts.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, with directions to render judgment for the City upon the special verdict of the jury.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Henry B. Kelly, Henry L. Lazarus and B. F. Jonas, for appellants.

Messrs. Joseph P. Hornor and W. S. Benedict, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The controversy in this case relates to a certain plantation in the Parish of Plaquemines, called the New Hope or Cedar Grove Plantation. The appellee, Sawyer, claims it as purchaser at sheriff's sale under a judgment rendered in February, 1872, by the Fifth District Court of Orleans, at the suit of one James E. Zunts against William and Haywood Stackhouse. The appellant claims under a mortgage executed in 1873, by Sarah F. Brooks, widow of Haywood Stackhouse, and tutrix of his minor heirs. It is conceded that the plantation belonged to William and Haywood Stackhouse at the time of the latter's death in December, 1869; and that after that it belonged to the said William and the succession of Haywood up to and after the time of Zunts's judgment. It is contended by the appellants that this judgment was void as against the undivided half of Haywood Stackhouse, because he was dead when the judgment was rendered, and the suit, as they contend, had never been revived against the succession of his estate.

The circumstances of the case are briefly as follows:

William and Haywood Stackhouse were partners owning several plantations, and in January, 1865, to secure to Zunts the payment of certain notes amounting to $50,000, executed to him a mortgage on a plantation called the Bellechasse Plantation. The notes not being paid, Zunts, in January, 1867, attempted to collect the same by executory process against the Bellechasse plantation. The Stackhouses set up a defense, filed a counter petition, and obtained an injunction. The decision being against them, they appealed to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, and pending this appeal, in December, 1869, as before stated, Haywood Stackhouse died. His widow, Sarah F. Brooks, in her own right and as tutrix of their minor children, was made a party in the cause, and the suit proceeded to judgment, the papers being entitled, as before, in the name of William and Haywood Stackhouse v. James E. Zunts. In May, 1871, the Supreme Court annulled the judgment of the district court, and remanded the cause for a new trial. On the 20th of February, 1872, the district court rendered the judgment in question, which was entered and signed in these words.

"FIFTH DISTRICT COURT FOR THE PARISH OF ORLEANS.

v.

JAMES E. ZUNTS.

No. 18850.

In this case, for the reasons assigned in the written opinion of the court, this day delivered and on file, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that there be judgment in favor of defendant; that the injunction herein be dissolved with costs, and that the said defendant, James E. Zunts, do have and recover of plaintiffs, William and Haywood Stackhouse, and their surety in the injunction bond, in solido, twenty per cent damages on the amount of the judgment herein enjoined, together with eight per cent interest as allowed in the order of seizure and sale.

It is further ordered that the claim for attorney's fees herein be dismissed.

Judgment rendered February 20, 1872.

Judgment signed March 3, 1872.

(Signed) CHAS. LEAUMONT.

Judge 5th District Court, Parish of Orleans."

A certified copy of this judgment, in the above words, was recorded in the recorder's office of Plaquemines on the 17th of April, 1872.

Meanwhile, the plaintiffs moved for a new trial, and that being refused, on the 18th of March, 1872, they moved for and obtained a suspensive appeal. The order allowing the appeal was as follows, the appeal bond being signed by all the appellants:

v.
No. 18850.

On motion of Roselius & Philips and Horner & Benedict, of counsel for Wm. Stackhouse, Sarah F. Brooks, widow in community of Haywood Stackhouse, deceased and natural tutrix of her minor children, Herbert, Maude, Blanche and Mabel Stackhouse, and Lilla Stackhouse, wife of J. W. Bryant, duly authorized and assisted by her husband, and the legal heirs of James P. Waters, dec'd, to wit: Henrietta A. Waters, wife of William Stackhouse, and by her husband duly assisted and authorized Mrs. Widow Mary Upton, widow of Wheelock S. Upton, dec'd, and William H. Waters, and on suggesting to the court that said appearers and movers have been informed and believe that there is error to their prejudice in the final judgment rendered in the above entitled case by this hon. court, on the 20th February, 1872, and that they are desirous of appealing suspensively from the same to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana, and on showing that the clerk requires time till the third Monday of April next to make the transcript of appeal, it is ordered that a suspensive appeal be accorded to said appearers and movers from said final judgment to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, the same to be therein returnable on the third Monday of April, 1872, upon said appearers giving bond and security conditioned according to law in the sum of $30,000."

The cause then proceeded in the Supreme Court, entitled as before. On the 31st of May, 1873, the court affirmed the judgment below. A petition for a rehearing was presented in the names of all the appellants; and, amongst other things, stated, that pending the first appeal Haywood Stackhouse died, and that the petitioners were made parties to the appeal by means of an order which they recite; but that when the cause went back to the court below for retrial, Zunts omitted to make the petitioners parties to the proceedings in that court, and that they never made themselves parties by voluntary appearance by counsel or personally; that, on the contrary, the case was proceeded with by Zunts and his counsel, and by the former counsel of William and Haywood Stackhouse, as if the latter were alive; and the petition, in a labored argument, contended that the making of the petitioners parties to the first appeal did not make them parties to the subsequent proceedings. All the points taken in this suit on the subject of want of parties were taken in the said petition for a rehearing.

On the 15th of December, 1873, the petition for rehearing was refused, and the judgment of the district court stood affirmed. No notice was taken by the court of the point referred to. Whether it was regarded as untenable, or whether the judgment was left to stand at Zunt's own risk, good, at all events, as against William Stackhouse, does not appear.

After the recording of the judgment of the district court, to wit: on the 7th of May, 1872, a partition was made between William Stackhouse and the succession of Haywood Stackhouse, of the various pieces of property belonging to the firm of W. & H. Stackhouse, by which the Bellechasse plantation was set off to William, subject to Zunts' claim; and the New Hope plantation was set off to the succession of Haywood.

On the 6th of February, 1873, Sarah F. Brooks, as widow and tutrix as aforesaid, mortgaged the New Hope plantation to Ernst & Co., to secure the payment of certain notes specified in the mortgage.

On the 20th of January, 1875, Zunts filed a petition in the District Court of Plaquemines for executory process against the New Hope plantation and other property, to obtain satisfaction of the amount of damages recovered by the judgment of February 20, 1872, being $10,833.66, claiming that the same was a judicial mortgage against all the property in the parish belonging to William Stackhouse and the succession of Haywood Stackhouse. A writ was issued accordingly, and the said New Hope plantation, together with certain shares of bank stock, secured by mortgage thereon, were sold by the sheriff to the appellee, Silas W. Sawyer, and an act of sale, dated 28th April, 1875, was duly passed and recorded.

The appellants, Montgomery and Leng and Ogden, having become the owners of the notes secured by the mortgage given by Sarah F. Brooks to Ernst & Co., on the 15th of December, 1876, filed a bill in the Circuit Court of the United States against her as widow and tutrix, and against one of the heirs who had become of age and married, praying for the issue of executory process for the sale of the undivided half of the New Hope plantation belonging to the succession of Haywood Stackhouse, conceding that Zunts' judgment was a valid judicial mortgage as against the other undivided half belonging to William Stackhouse; and a writ of seizure and sale was issued pursuant to the prayer of the bill.

It was to enjoin proceedings under the last named writ, and to establish his own title, that the appellee, Sawyer, filed the bill in this case.

All the material facts appear from the documents submitted by the parties, and the question is one of law alone.

From this statement it would seem to be very clear that the widow and heirs of Haywood Stackhouse were parties to the proceedings in which the judgment was rendered, which, therefore, might have been, though it was not, rendered against the succession of Haywood Stackhouse jointly with William Stackhouse. But even if valid to bind said succession in any way, the question remains as to its effect against third persons. It is in form a judgment against William Stackhouse and another person not in being, but who had died more than two years before it was rendered. And in this form it was recorded. By the law of Louisiana a judgment, at least as to third persons, has no effect as a judicial mortgage until it is recorded. When recorded it has that effect against all the immovables of the debtor situated in the parish. Civil Code, arts. 3922, 3346. Here one of the nominal debtors against whom the judgment was rendered was dead, and of course had no immovables to be affected thereby. Without the existence of some very artificial rule of procedure, it is difficult to see how such a judgment, quoad the deceased person, or his estate in succession, can have any binding effect without being amended.

By the common law, if a defendant died after the commencement of a term, a judgment entered against him during the term had relation back to the first day of the term, and was deemed valid. This fiction was allowed to subserve the ends of justice. But no such rule can be invoked in the present case. Here the judgment could have no effect against the general immovable property of the debtor until it was recorded. The record is all that third persons have to look to for their protection; and in this case it only showed a judgment against a person not in existence, and did not show a judgment against his succession; and did not show that his representatives had been made parties to the cause.

In a case somewhat similar, differing in the fact that the heir accepted the succession purely and simply, and did not appear in the proceedings until after the judgment in question was entered, the Supreme Court of Louisiana said: "If defendant die after issue joined, his heir should be cited; until this is done, judgment cannot be given against the succession. McMicken v. Smith, 5 Mart. (N. S.), 431. A judgment against one, who, though cited, dies before issue joined, is null. R. R. Co. v. Bossworth, 8 La. Ann., 80. When H. R. W. Hill died, it was necessary to make the legal representative a party, otherwise the judgment was inoperative as to either, and the recording of it created no judicial mortgage on the property left by H. R. W. Hill. The fiction of law or its express enactment, by which he was a party to the proceedings, did not make his heirs or legal representatives parties in his person, and the insertion of the word 'heirs' in the decree gave no force to the judgment against his heir and legatee, any more than a judgment against any person, eo nomine, who is not cited. The subsequent appearance of J. D. Hill as a party to the proceedings, in order to appeal from the circuit court to the Supreme Court, may have made him personally liable under the judgment rendered on appeal, but it could not retroact so as to give force to the inscription of the judgment of the district court. Inscriptions of mortgages are stricti juris, and must, of themselves, be complete and give all the information which the law intends is necessary for third parties. Douglass v. Curtis, 5 Mart. (N. S.), 112; Ford v. Tilden, 7 La. Ann., 533. The judgment recorded was against H. R. W. Hill; but plaintiff alleges that H. R. W. Hill died before the judgment was rendered. * * * The inscription does not contain the name of J. D. Hill (heir of H. R. W. Hill). At the time of the rendering and recording of the judgment against H. R. W. Hill, the property did not belong to him, and no judgment against J. D. Hill, was recorded at the date of his sale to defendant. Consequently, no judicial mortgage attached to the property sold by J. D. Hill to the defendant by recording the judgment in question against H. R. W. Hill, rendered after his death." Norton v. Jamison, 23 La. Ann., 102.

It seems to us that the views here expressed are conclusive so far as relates to the validity of the judgment as a judicial mortgage operating against the appellants. Whether the judgment may not in some manner, or to some extent, be binding against the succession of Haywood Stackhouse, it is not necessary to inquire. The difficulty consists in the fact that no judgment has been rendered or recorded against said succession. The mere entitling of the suit against William and Haywood Stackhouse might not have prejudiced the effect of the judgment, had it been rendered against the proper parties. The title of the suit is employed only for the purpose of identification of the cause. But here the judgment itself is defective. It is conceded to be good as against the interest of William Stackhouse; but as to third persons, at least, it is void as a judicial mortgage against the property of Haywood Stackhouse or his estate in succession.

It follows from this that the appellee, Sawyer, by his purchase at sheriff's sale, acquired only the undivided half interest of William Stackhouse, and that his bill should have been dismissed.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill of complaint.

KNICKERBOCKER LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JULES E. SCHNEIDER, Admr. of C.
SCHNEIDER ET AL.

Life insurance policy.

In an action on a policy of life insurance, where the pleadings admit the death of the insured, and place the defense on the ground that, on the facts of the case, his death was not covered by the policy, it is not necessary for the plaintiff, in order to recover, to show that he had notified the company of such death, and made the necessary preliminary proofs required by the policy.

Submitted Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

[N ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Thos. J. Semmes, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Joseph P. Hornor and W. S. Benedict, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit on a policy of insurance for $20,000, issued by the plaintiff in error on the life of Gustav Osterman in favor of Schneider & Zuberbier, his creditors. The policy provided for payment within three months after due and satisfactory proof of the death of Osterman. The petition set forth his death on the 15th of September, 1876, and averred that the Company was immediately notified thereof and that due proof of the death, "Made under the forms and directions of said Insurance Company, were duly forwarded and their receipt acknowledged by said Company." The Company answered the petition, denying "All and singular the facts and allegations therein contained, so far as the same may have a tendency to give said plaintiff any right or cause of action against said respondent," and then averring that Osterman, at the date of application for insurance and of the policy, "Was, and continued up to the time of his death to be, so far intemperate as to impair his health and shatter his constitution; * * * that he was addicted to gambling, a duelist, a debaucher of women, * * * and an idle and roaming character; leading such a dissolute, profligate and wandering life, as not only materially affected his health, but also considerably shortened the period of his life." There were other averments sufficient to make this a good defense to the action, if the allegations were true. It was also averred that the debt of Osterman to the plaintiffs was barred by the Statute of Limitations; that certain warranties contained in the application for the policy had been broken, and that false answers were made to certain interrogatories propounded by the Company's medical examiner. The issues being made up by the pleadings, a trial was had before a jury. On the trial, the plaintiffs, after proving the policy and the death of Osterman, rested. The Company then offered evidence tending to prove that the habits of Osterman at the time of making the application were so far intemperate as to impair his health and shorten his life. Evidence in rebuttal was given, and both parties rested. The Company then asked the court to charge the jury, "That plaintiffs, having failed to produce any evidence to show that previous to the institution of this suit they had given notice of the death of said Osterman, in conformity with the provisions printed on the back of the policy, and in fact as the plaintiffs had failed to adduce any evidence tending to show that plaintiffs had furnished, prior to the institution of this suit, any proof whatever of the death of Osterman, said plaintiffs could not recover." This request was refused and the jury, in substance, told that if they found for the plaintiffs on the other issues, their verdict must be in favor of the plaintiffs for the full amount of the policy and interest from the commencement of the suit, because the pleadings, in effect, admitted the death of Osterman and placed the defense on the ground that, under the facts of the case, his death was not covered by the policy. A judgment having been rendered against the Company, this writ of error was brought.

The only question presented by the assignment of errors is, whether, under the issues made by the pleadings, it was necessary for the plaintiffs, before they could recover, to show by evidence that they had notified the Company of the death of Osterman, and made the necessary preliminary proofs required by the policy before the suit was begun. We think it was not. It is directly averred in the petition that such notice was given and proof made. The answer is to be construed as a whole. There has been no attempt to set up separate defenses, such as is allowed in common law pleadings. No direct issue is made upon the fact of notice and proof, but the whole effort is to show that, notwithstanding such notice and proof, the plaintiffs can not recover. It is true there is a general denial of all and singular the allegations of the petition, "So far as the same may have a tendency to give said plaintiffs any right or cause of action against the respondent;" but this we understand to be no more than a denial of such averments as are inconsistent with See 10 Orto.

the specific defenses set out in the other parts of the answer. Taken as a whole, the answer in legal effect admits that the plaintiffs must recover unless the specific defenses relied on are sustained. This evidently was the understanding of all parties at the time of the trial, for the objection now insisted upon was not made until the case on both sides had been closed and the court was about to charge the jury.

The judgment is affirmed, and as it is apparent to our minds that this writ was sued out for delay, damages to the amount of $1,000 are awarded in addition to interest.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

This was an action brought in the court below by the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, now defendant in error, against the plaintiff in error, to recover damages for an alleged refusal on the part of the officers of the Crescent City National Bank to permit a transfer of certain shares of its capital stock.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. J. D. Rouse and Wm. Grant, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. A. Pitot, M. M. Cohen and Ed. Janin, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Associations formed under the Act to Provide a National Currency are required to enter into articles of agreement, specifying the object of the association; and the articles may contain other regulations, not inconsistent with the Act which the association may see fit to adopt for the conduct of their business and affairs. Such an association may make contracts, sue and be sued, and complain and defend in any court of law or equity as fully as natural persons. They may also elect directors; and the Board of Directors may appoint a president, vice-president, cashier and other officers, and define their duties. 13 Stat. at L., 101; R. S., sec. 5136; Knight v. Bk., 3 Cliff., 429, 431.

Sufficient appears, to show that the plaintiff

Bank discounted for the firm named in the transcript their promissory note, in the sum of $20,000, payable to the order of the Bank in thirty days; and that the promisors, to insure the payment of the note, pledged to the holders two hundred and twenty shares of the capital stock of the Bank of which the defendant is the receiver, part standing in the name of the debtor firm, and part in the name of their senior partner. Authority was given to the pledgees, at the time the stock was pledged, in case the note was not paid at maturity, to sell the shares pledged at public or private sale, the pledgers agreeing to sign all required transfers of the same necessary in the premises.

Payment of the note, when it fell due, was refused; and the pledgees of the stock, having found purchasers for the same at the rate specified in the declaration, requested the Bank of which the defendant is the receiver for permission to transfer the stock to the purchasers of the same; and the charge is that the Bank peremptorily refused the request, on the ground that the promisors of the note were indebted to the Bank, and that their stock could not be transferred before payment of their indebtedness.

Nothing appears to show when the indebtedness of the pledgers of the stock was contracted to the defendant Bank; but it is not alleged that it preceded the pledge of the stock, nor is it claimed that the defendant Bank had any lien on the stock for the payment of the alleged indebtedness.

Process was served, and the defendant Bank appeared and filed a peremptory exception to the declaration: (1) Because the supposed cause of action did not accrue within one year next before the commencement of the suit. (2) Because the petition or declaration does not disclose any cause of action against the defendant.

Hearing was had, and the court overruled the exception. Proceedings now unimportant followed, when defendant again appeared and filed an answer, denying all the material allegations of the petition. Issue being joined, the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff; and the defendant excepted, and sued out the present writ of error.

Since the cause was entered here, errors have been assigned to the effect following: (1) That the circuit court erred in holding and instructing the jury that the action arose ex contractu, and that it was not prescribed by one year. (2) That the circuit court erred in instructing the jury that the defendant was liable for the refusal of the cashier to permit the stock to be transferred. (3) That the circuit court erred in refusing the two prayers for instruction presented by the defendant. (4) That the circuit court erred in ordering the receiver to pay the amount of the judgment or to certify the same to the Comptroller.

By-laws were adopted by the defendant Bank, which provide that the stock of the Bank shall be assignable only on the books of the Bank, subject to the provisions and restrictions of the Act of Congress, and that a transfer book shall be kept, in which all the assignments of stock shall be made. Certificates of stock signed by the president and cashier may, as the by-laws provide, be issued to stockholders; but the requirement is, that the certificate shall state upon the face thereof that the stock is transferable only upon the books of the Bank, the further requirement being that, when stock is transferred, the existing certificates shall be canceled and returned, and that new ones shall be issued.

Provision is made by the Code of the State that persons are responsible for the damage they occasion, not merely by their acts but by their negligence, their imprudence, and their want of skill, which is not different in its application to this case from the rule which prevails at common law. Rev. Code La., arts. 2315, 2316.

Whenever an agent violates his duties or obligation to his principal, and loss ensues to the principal, he is responsible therefor, says Judge Story, and is bound to make a full indemnity. Story, Ag., 6th ed., sec. 217 a.

Actions for injurious words, whether verbal or written, and those for damages caused by animals, or resulting from offenses, or quasi offenses, are prescribed by one year in the jurisprudence of the State. Rev. Code, La., sec. 3536. And the first proposition of the defendant is that the circuit court erred in holding that the action in this case was not barred by that article of the Code.

Causes of action resulting from offenses or quasi offenses are barred by the lapse of one year, and the defendant Bank contends that the cause of action set forth in the petition in this case falls within the one or the other of those designations. Argument to show that it was not an offense is certainly unnecessary, as the proposition if made would be wholly without merit, from which it follows that the theory must be wholly rejected, unless the act for which the damages are claimed in this case can properly be regarded as a quasi offense within the meaning of that provision.

Even suppose the terms of the provision apply to such a cause of action, it is by no means certain that the admission, if made, would benefit the defendant, as the Supreme Court of the State has decided that prescription in respect to a promissory note is interrupted so long as the holder is in possession of collaterals pledged by the maker to secure its payment. Blanc v. Herteog, 23 La. Ann., 199.

Stocks pledged as security for a loan, the same court holds, constitute a standing acknowledgment of the debt which interrupts prescription during the time the securities pledged remain in the possession of the creditor. Police Jury v. Duralde, 22 La. Ann., 107; Bk. v. Knapp, 22 La. Ann., 117.

Suppose, however, the claim for damages resulting from the refusal of the Bank to transfer the stock must be considered as a cause of action wholly distinct from the note and the collaterals, then it becomes necessary to examine the objections taken by the plaintiff Bank to the validity of the defense of prescription. Coming to that defense, the plaintiff Bank contends that the cause of action does not fall within the rule of prescription by the lapse of a year, because the act which gives rise to the claim was neither an offense nor a quasi offense within the meaning of that article of the Revised Code. Precisely the same question was presented to the Supreme Court of the State, and was decided by that court adversely to the views of the defendant. Campbell v. Miltenberger, 26 La. Ann., 73.

Compensation was claimed by the plaintiff in that case for damages occasioned by the defective and improper construction of a fence around his dwelling and premises by the defendant. The prescription of one year was pleaded, setting up the same article of the Code, but the court decided that the rule of prescription of one year only applied to cases arising from damages caused by the commission of an offense, or quasi offense, and overruled the defense as inapplicable to the case.

Actions arising under the article referred to survive, in case of the death of the injured party, for the space of one year in favor of the minor children and widow of the deceased. Rev. Code, art. 2315.

Personal actions are not, in general, prescribed in that State short of ten years, even when the creditor is present, nor short of twenty years if he be absent. Rev. Code, art. 3544.

Many decisions have been made in the State upon the subject, but a few of each of the classes in question will be sufficient to show that the act which gave rise to the cause of action in this case cannot be regarded either as an offense or quasi offense within the rules of decision adopted in that State.

Willful trespass in cutting wood upon another man's land and refusing to account for the same when accused of the act was held to be prescribed by that provision. Whitehead v. Dugan, 25 La. Ann., 409.

Where damages were claimed for the illegal and wrongful seizure of the defendant's property by virtue of an execution against another party, whereby much of the property was lost or destroyed, it was held that the claim for damages fell within the category of that rule. De Lizardi v. Canal and Bkg. Co., 25 La. Ann., 414.

Claim for injuries occasioned by a railroad to individuals, or for the destruction of domestic animals, are held to fall within the same category as charges of quasi offenses. But the right to recover of a banker for failure to protest a note, whereby the indorser is charged, is only prescribed by ten years. Eichelberger v. Pike, 22 La. Ann., 142; Rev. Code, 3544.

So an action against a telegraph company for loss on goods by a mistake in the message may be maintained unless prescribed by ten years. La Grange v. Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann., 383.

Cases in great number of a like character might be cited, but it must suffice to refer to one other, which seems to be decisive of the point. Percy v. White, 7 Rob. (La.), 513. It was an action by the stockholders against the directors to recover damages for losses sustained through their negligence, fraud and mismanagement, and the court held that it was not prescribed short of ten years from the acts which were the subject of complaint. Such a case, everyone must admit, is much stronger than the case at bar, as the directors were directly charged as wrongdoers, and as guilty of negligence, fraud and mismanagement in the performance of their official duties.

Opposed to that the defendant refers to the case of Taylor v. Graham, as being inconsistent with the prior case; but the court is not inclined to adopt that view, as the notary is a public officer and the charge against him was See 10 OTTO.

that of gross negligence in the performance of his official duty. 15 La. Ann., 418.

Promptitude and fidelity are expected of notaries in giving notice of protest in all jurisdictions where that duty is required of those officers, and it cannot be doubted that the court regarded the charge as imputing a quasi offense. In the case at bar the demand of transfer was made by the plaintiff Bank in behalf of the purchaser of the stock, and the cashier answered that by order of the directors he could not allow the transfer, as the holder of the certificates was indebted to the Bank. Instructions from the directors were obligatory upon the cashier, who, in point of fact, assumed no responsibility. He acted by order of the directors, who for that purpose constituted the Bank, it appearing that he merely obeyed their instructions not to transfer any stock whose owner had discounted notes in the Bank unpaid.

2. Evidence was introduced by the plaintiffs tending to show that the cashier of the defendant Bank was the officer intrusted by the directors with the transfer of stock, and they also gave in evidence the note secured by the pledge of the stock, but they gave no other evidence to show that the note was due and unpaid, or that any effort had been made to collect the same of the maker, or that the maker was insolvent; nor was any evidence introduced to show that anything had occurred to interrupt or suspend prescription.

Both parties having closed, the defendant Bank requested the court to instruct the jury that the defendant is not liable for the refusal of its cashier or other officer to transfer the stock, unless he acted in the premises under the authority of the charter or by-laws of the Bank or pursuant to some general or special authority derived from the Corporation through its Board of Directors; but the court refused to give the requested instruction, and instructed the jury that if they found that a person representing the plaintiff, having in his possession the certificates of the stock, sent to the defendant Bank during the ordinary hours of business and found there the cashier, and that he was the officer customarily intrusted by the directors to make such transfer of stock; and that he, the person having the certificates, demanded the transfer of the cashier, at the same time offering to deliver up the old certificates; and that the cashier refused to allow the transfer, upon the ground that the owner was indebted to the defendant Bank, that such a refusal was a refusal of the Bank.

Compare the instruction given with that requested, and it will be seen that the introductory part of the request is fully given in the instruction given to the jury. They were told that if they found that a person representing the plaintiff, having the certificates of the shares in his possession, went to defendant Bank and there found the cashier, and that he was the officer customarily intrusted by the directors to make the transfers, which was fully equivalent to the request, though stated in the affirmative and not in the negative form. Unless the jury found all those facts to be true, they were not authorized to find a verdict for the plaintiff; and, inasmuch as the verdict returned was in favor of the plaintiff, it must be assumed by the appellate court that the entire theory of fact involved in the instruction is proved.

Suppose that is so; then it is plain that the whole instruction is correct, as it is not controverted that the demand was regularly made, nor that the cashier refused to allow the transfer.

Cashiers of a bank are held out to the public as having authority to act according to the general usage, practice and course of business conducted by such institutions; and their acts, within the scope of such usage, practice and course of business, will, in general, bind the Bank in favor of third persons "possessing no other knowledge." Minor v. Bk., 1 Pet., 46.

Neither the public at large nor third persons usually have any other knowledge of the powers of a cashier than what is derived from such usage, practice and course of business; and it would be the height of injustice to hold that the Bank as the principal to the cashier may set up their secret and private instructions to the officer, limiting his authority in respect to a particular case, and thus to defeat his acts and transactions as such agent, when the party dealing with him had not and could not have any notice of the secret instructions. Story, Ag. 6th ed., sec. 127.

Such an officer is virtute officii intrusted with the notes, securities and other funds of the Bank, and is held out to the world by the Bank as its general agent for the transaction of its affairs, within the scope of authority, evidenced by such usage, practice and course of business.

Where the by-laws of a bank require that the transfer of the shares of the capital stock shall be entered in the books of the bank, the entry is usually made by the cashier, and the evidence introduced by the plaintiff tended to show that the practice of the defendant Bank was in accordance with the general usage. Evidence to that effect having been introduced, it was certainly competent for the court to submit it to the jury, and the Judge might have instructed them that, in view of that evidence, they would be warranted, if they believed the testimony, in finding that the cashier had the authority to make the transfer. Wild v. Bk., 3 Mas., 505.

Official acts may be performed by a cashier which constitute the ordinary and customary functions of such an officer, and persons dealing with the bank are warranted in believing that the cashier is duly authorized to perform any customary duty falling within the scope of that category, and may to that extent hold the bank responsible, as if he was so authorized, however the fact may be, save only in cases where his want of authority is affirmatively proved, and actual knowledge of that fact is brought home to the third party.

Concede that, and it follows that the cashier, unless the charter or by-laws of the bank forbid it, may properly make or superintend the transfer of shares of the capital stock, and that a person showing a prima facie legal right to claim such a transfer to himself may demand it from that officer or any other principal officer left in general charge and superintendence of the bank, during the regular hours appointed by the bank for the transaction of banking business. Smith v. Bk., 4 Cush., 1, 11; Morse, Bkg., 3d ed., pp. 155, 177.

Authorities to show that the acts of a cashier or other officer of a bank, within the scope of the general usage, practice and course of business of banking institutions, are binding on the corporation in favor of third persons transacting business with it, are quite numerous, provided it appears that the persons dealing with the officer did not know at the time that he was transacting his authority. Lloyd v. Bk., 15 Pa., 172; Bk. v. Warren, 7 Hill, 91; Bk. v. Steward, 37 Me., 519, 522.

It may be fairly presumed, says Chancellor Walworth, that the principal officer or clerk in attendance at the bank during the usual hours of business is authorized to permit the transfer of shares when the case presented is one proper to be allowed. Bk. v. Kortright, 22 Wend., 348, 350.

Assumpsit in the form of a special action on the case will lie against a corporation for improperly refusing to make a transfer of shares of capital stock, in the name of the party injured by the refusal. Kortright v. Bk., 20 Wend., 91; Ang. & A. Corp., 9th ed., sec. 381.

Enough has already been remarked to show that it is immaterial whether the declaration or petition is regarded as an action ex contractu or ex delicto, as it is clear that it is not barred by the prescription of one year, so that the point in any view cannot avail the defendant Bank. R. R. Co. v. Heirne, 2 La. Ann., 129; Ware v. Barataria Co., 15 La., 169; Elting v. Bk., 7 Rob. (La.), 459.

No further remarks are required to show that the refusal of the court to grant the first prayer of the defendant was not error, in view of the instruction given, as that given was quite as favorable to the defendant as the law would allow. Nor is there any just ground of complaint on the part of the defendant that the court refused to give the third request. Instead of giving that, the court instructed the jury that in order to enable the plaintiff to recover, they, the jury, must be satisfied from the evidence that the debt of the owners of the stock was still due and unpaid, and that if that has not been established the jury must find for the defendant.

Comment upon these instructions is needless, as it is clear that the verdict finds that the note is still unpaid.

Exceptions not assigned for error will be passed over without remark as not necessarily re-examinable in this court.

Nothing appears in the case to show that the defendant Bank ever adopted any by-law providing for a lien on the shares of a stockholder in case of his indebtedness to the Bank, nor is it even shown in this case that the debt, if any, of the owner of the shares to the Bank was contracted before the stock was pledged to the plaintiff, nor is there anything given in evidence by the defendant to show that it was inequitable for the plaintiff to claim the benefit of the collaterals which the Bank held to secure the payment of the note they discounted for the owners of the stock.

Beyond all doubt, the validity of their debt is established by the verdict and judgment; and, if so, it requires neither argument nor authorities to show that the order given by the circuit court to provide for the payment of the amount recovered was proper and correct.

Judgment affirmed.

Division of a town—debts of old corporation—town merged in others.

1. Where a new town is formed from portions of an old one, the old corporation owns all the public property within its new limits, and is responsible for all the debts of the corporation contracted before the Act of separation was passed, unless the Legislature otherwise provide.

2. Debts previously contracted must be paid entirely by the old corporation. The new municipality owns the public property, which falls within its boundaries.

3. Where one town is merged in two others by a legislative Act, unless the Legislature regulate the rights and duties of the two latter, they succeed to all the public property and immunities of the extinguished municipality, and they become liable for all the debts previously contracted by it.

[Nos. 39, 283.]

Argued Apr. 23, 24, 1879. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. L. S. Dixon and John T. Fish, for appellants:

The circuit court, in effect, held that the Legislature of Wisconsin, by merely abolishing the Town of Racine or Orwell, and by merely attaching the territory formerly within the Town, to the appellants, imposed upon them, without their consent, liability to pay the debt of Racine or Orwell, incurred in the purchase of railroad stocks.

The court so held under an Act, the language of which evinced no such purpose or intent on the part of the Legislature, even if the Legislature had the power, which is denied. The power, if it existed, could not be said to have been exercised by a statute which was silent upon the subject.

To hold that the Legislature possessed any such power, even if attempt had been made to exercise it, would be to hold that the Legislature could do, by indirect means, that which it could not do by direct means. Had the Legislature, by express Act, attempted to impose liability upon the Towns of Mt. Pleasant and Caledonia, without their consent, it would have been void upon fundamental principles of our law.

Hampshire Co. v. Franklin Co., 16 Mass., 76; Barclay v. Levee Comrs., 1 Woods, 254; Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall., 1-14 (74 U. S., XIX., 53-56).

The case presented is far different from a case of the division of the territory of an existing corporation, and the creation of one or more new corporations within its former territorial limits. In such case it has been held that the Legislature, by the Act so dividing and creating new corporations, may apportion the debt of the old corporation between them. In such case, the new corporations, carved out of the territory of the old, are regarded as in some sense identical with it; as being the original debtors already subject to the burden of an obligation to which they have given their assent. The burden is not imposed by the Act of the Legislature in such case, but is only divided or apportioned, which may be lawfully done. No consent of the newly created corporation or corporations is required, because such consent has already been given, and the Legislature merely apportions the common burden. Cases of that nature, therefore, differ very widely from the case at bar, and the principle upon which they proceed furnishes no ground for the decision of the court below. The principle is in entire harmony with the rule for which we contend, and sustains that rule instead of militating against it.

The Legislature of Wisconsin never imposed or attempted to impose this indebtedness upon the Towns of Mount Pleasant and Caledonia. If the Legislature had done so, the Act would have been nugatory and void.

Mr. William P. Lynde, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Explicit authority from the Legislature was given to the Supervisors of the Town of Racine to subscribe for the stock of the railroad company mentioned in the Act conferring the power, to an amount not exceeding $50,000, provided a majority of the legal voters of the municipality, at a meeting of the town duly called and held for the purpose, shall vote in favor of making the proposed subscription. Sess. L. Wis., 1853, p. 11.

Pursuant to that authority, the proper officers of the Town, on the 6th of December, 1853, subscribed for the capital stock of the railroad company to the amount of $50,000, and issued one hundred bonds of the Corporation, each in the sum of $500, in payment of the subscription for the stock, the bonds being made payable in twenty years from date, with coupons attached for annual interest at the rate of seven per cent. Twenty of those bonds with their coupons are now held by the complainant, numbered from seventy to eighty-nine, inclusive, and of which he became the lawful holder within one month subsequent to their date, all of which, as he alleges, remain wholly unpaid, principal and interest.

Various facts and circumstances are alleged in the bill of complaint of an equitable nature, and which the complainant insists are of a character to show that he has no remedy at law, and which tend strongly to show that he is entitled to relief in equity. Appended to those several allegations is the prayer of the complainant, that the three respondents may answer the matters charged, and that the court will ascertain the respective liabilities of the respondents to the complainant, and decree the amount due to him from each of the respondent municipalities, and for general relief.

Service was made, and the respective respondents appeared and separately demurred to the bill of complaint. Hearing was had, and the court overruled the several demurrers and directed that the respondents should answer the matters charged in the bill of complaint by a given day. Separate answers were accordingly filed by the respective respondents, no objection being made that they were not filed in time.

Sufficient appears to show that on the 2d of January, 1838, the Town of Racine and the Town of Mount Pleasant were, by the same Act, created municipal corporations, with boundaries as set forth in the bill of complaint. Private L. Wis., 1838, 168.

Four years later, the Town of Caledonia was incorporated, her territory being taken from the two Towns before mentioned, without any provision being made that the new Town should bear any portion of the indebtedness of either of the old Towns. Private L., Wis., 1842, 10.

Both parties concur in these propositions, and it appears that the City of Racine, which is a distinct municipality from the Town by the same name, was incorporated by the Act of the 8th of August, 1848, with boundaries as correctly set forth in the transcript. Private L., Wis., 1848, 80.

Subsequent changes, if any, made in the boundaries of these municipalities, not herein made the subject of comment, are regarded as immaterial in the present investigation.

Additional territory was subsequently taken from the Town of Racine and was annexed to the City of Racine, and by a still later Act another fraction of her territory was annexed to the Town of Mount Pleasant, neither Act containing any regulations as to existing indebtedness. Private L. Wis., 1856, 148-416.

Prior to that, to wit: on the 6th of March in the same year, the Legislature of the State, by an Act of that date, annexed a much larger tract, taken from the Towns of Racine and Mount Pleasant, to the City of Racine, as described in the record; but the Supreme Court of the State decided that a certain feature of the Act was unconstitutional and void. Stawson v. Racine, 13 Wis., 398.

In consequence of that decision, the Towns from which the territory annexed was taken continued to exercise jurisdiction over it for the period of fifteen years longer, until a portion of the same territory then constituting a part of the Town of Mount Pleasant was again annexed to the City of Racine, on the condition that the City "Shall assume and pay so much of the municipal indebtedness of the Town as the lands described in the 1st section of that Act may be or become legally chargeable with and liable to pay." Private L. Wis., 1871, 723.

Throughout these several changes, except the last, the annexation in every instance was made without any regulation that the Town to which the territory was annexed should pay any portion of the indebtedness of the Town from which the territory annexed was taken. Still not satisfied, the Legislature, by the Act of the 23d of February, 1857, re-arranged the boundaries of each of the three Towns, as therein is fully set forth and described. Private L. Wis., 1857, 103.

Two years later, the county supervisors changed the name of the Town of Racine to Orwell; but the prior name will be used throughout in this opinion, as less likely to produce confusion in the statement of facts. From the time the Legislature re-arranged the boundaries of the three Towns they remained without alteration until the Legislature, March 30, 1860, by a public Act, vacated and extinguished the Corporation and body politic known as the Town of Racine, then called Orwell, and enacted that thereafter it should have no existence as a body politic and corporate. Sess. L. Wis., 1860, p. 218.

Section 2 of the Act also provided that all that part of the territory of the Town lying north of the described line should be annexed to and hereafter form a part of the Town of Caledonia, and that all that part of the territory lying south of that line should become and continue to be a part of Mount Pleasant.

Each of the respondent Towns refer in their answer to the legislation of the State in respect to their incorporation and boundaries, which need not be reproduced, as they are accurately set forth in the preceding statement.

Two of the respondents, to wit: the Town of Mount Pleasant and the Town of Caledonia, deny in their answers that any statute of the State has ever been passed which would authorize the municipal authorities of those Towns to levy and collect a tax to pay either the principal or interest of the bonds described in the bill of complaint, and allege that the corporate authorities of those Towns have never assumed or undertaken any trust or duty in the premises, or have ever, in any way, recognized the acts of the Towns which issued the bonds or the validity of the same. Nor does the answer of the other respondent, to wit: the City of Racine, differ very materially from those filed by the two Towns first named, except that the pleader avers that the City was only made liable for such portion of the indebtedness of the old Town as is described in the Act enlarging the limits of the respondent City, and pleads as a separate defense that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law.

Replications were filed by the complainant, and the parties entered into a stipulation that the proofs should be taken by the master, and that they might be read and used at the final hearing as the evidence in the case, subject to legal objection. Proofs were accordingly taken by the master, and he reported the depositions of the witnesses examined, with an agreed statement of facts. Arguments of counsel followed, and the circuit court entered a decree in favor of the complainant against each respondent.

Two of the Towns, to wit: Mount Pleasant and Caledonia, appealed to this court, and assign for error the following causes: (1) That the circuit court erred in holding that the appellants are liable to pay the debt of the Town of Racine incurred in the purchase of stock in the aforesaid railroad company, or that the debt of that Town became the debt of the appellants, to be enforced against them in any form of proceeding. (2) That the circuit court erred in holding that the property of the individuals within the jurisdiction of that Town constituted the primary fund to which the complainant had the right to look for the payment of his debt, and that the transfer of their property to the jurisdiction of the appellants rendered them liable to pay the debts due to the creditors of the Town whose powers and jurisdiction terminated by the transfer. (3) That the circuit court erred in holding that the power of taxation previously vested in the Town which issued the bonds in question was, by the Act annexing its territory to the appellant Towns, transferred to the appellants to be severally exercised by them upon all the taxable property within their respective jurisdictions. (4) That the circuit court erred in holding that it had jurisdiction in equity of the case, or that the appellants are in equity and good conscience liable to pay the claim of the complainant against the Town whose territory was annexed to the appellant Corporations.

Counties, cities and towns are municipal corporations created by the authority of the Legislature, and they derive all their powers from the source of their creation, except where the Constitution of the State otherwise provides. They have no inherent jurisdiction to make laws or to adopt governmental regulations, nor can they exercise any other powers in that regard than such as are expressly or impliedly derived from their charters or other statutes of the State.

Corporations of the kind are composed of all the inhabitants of the territory included within the political organization, each individual being entitled to participate in its proceedings; but the powers of the organization may be modified or taken away at the mere will of the Legislature, according to its own views of public convenience, and without any necessity for the consent of those composing the body politic. Corporate rights and privileges are usually possessed by such municipalities; and it is equally true that they are subject to certain legal obligations and duties, which may be increased or diminished at the pleasure of the Legislature, from which all their powers are derived.

Institutions of the kind, whether called cities, towns or counties, are the auxiliaries of the State in the important business of municipal rule; but they cannot have the least pretension to sustain their privileges or their existence upon anything like a contract between themselves and the Legislature of the State, because there is not and cannot be any reciprocity of stipulation between the parties, and for the further reason that their objects and duties are utterly incompatible with everything partaking of the nature of compact.

Instead of that, the constant practice is to divide large municipalities and to consolidate small ones, or set off portions of territory from one and annex it to another, to meet the wishes of the residents or to promote the public interests as understood by the Legislature; it being everywhere understood that the Legislature possesses the power to make such alterations and to apportion the common property and burdens as to them may seem just and equitable.

Alterations of the kind are often required to promote the public interests or the convenience and necessities of the inhabitants; and the public history shows that it has been the constant usage in the States to enlarge or diminish the power of towns, to divide their territory by set-off and annexation, and to make new towns whenever the Legislature deems it just and proper that such a change should be made. Old towns may be divided and new ones incorporated out of parts of the territory of those previously organized; and in enacting such regulations the Legislature may apportion the common property and the common burdens, and may, as between the parties in interest, settle all the terms and conditions of the division of their territory, or the alteration of the boundaries, as fixed by any prior law.

State legislation may regulate the subject; but if the Legislature omits to do so, the presumption, as between the parties, is that they did not consider that any regulation was necessary. Where none is made, in case of division the old corporation owns all the public property within her new limits, and is responsible for all the debts of the corporation contracted before the Act of separation was passed. Debts previously contracted must be paid entirely by the old corporation, nor has the new municipality any claim to any portion of the public property, except what falls within her boundaries, and to that the old corporation has no claim whatever. Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S., 307 [XXIII., 552]; Bristol v. New Chester, 3 N. H., 524.

Apply these principles to the admitted facts of the case, and it is clear that everyone of the described changes made in the limits and boundaries of the respondent municipalities become wholly immaterial in this investigation, except the last two, as hereafter more fully explained.

Before the passage of those two Acts, the claim of the complainant against the Town of Racine was, beyond all question, valid and collectible. Nobody controverts that proposition, and it is clear that no defense to the action could have been sustained for a moment. By the Act of March 30, 1860, the Legislature of the State vacated and extinguished the corporation and body politic formerly known as Racine, then called Orwell, and annexed the whole area of the territory included in the municipality to the two adjacent Towns of Mount Pleasant and Caledonia, in the proportions and by the boundary lines described in the 2d section of the legislative Act. Had legislation stopped there, it is clear that the City of Racine would not have been liable for any portion of the debt of the extinguished municipal corporation; but it did not stop there, as appears by what follows.

Prior to the passage of that Act, the old Town of Racine was the sole obligor in the bonds held by the complainant; and there certainly is nothing in the provisions of that Act which tends in the least degree to create any liability on the part of any other municipality for the indebtedness of that Town, except the Towns of Mount Pleasant and Caledonia. Nothing had previously occurred to create any liability on the part of the City of Racine to pay any proportion of the debts of the old Town of Racine, which issued the bonds described in the bill of complaint.

Until the passage of the Act of the 17th of March, 1871, the rights of all parties remained unchanged. By that Act, a portion of the territory formerly belonging to the old Town of Racine was set off from the Town of Mount Pleasant and was annexed to the City of Racine. Appended to that Act, and a part of it, was the provision that the City to which the described territory was annexed "Shall assume and pay so much of the indebtedness of the Town of Racine as the lands described in the 1st section of the Act may be or become legally chargeable with and liable to pay." Private L. Wis., 1871, 723.

Enough appears in that provision of direct legislation to show that the City of Racine was thereby made liable for the debts of the extinguished Town of Racine in the proportion therein described, and the clear inference from the provision is that the Town of Mount Pleasant, prior to the passage of that Act, was liable for the debts of that old municipality in proportion to the whole extent of the territory annexed to her by the prior Act which extinguished the old municipal corporation. None, it is presumed, will deny the liability of the City of Racine for those debts in the proportion described in the Act creating the liability, and hence it is that the corporate authorities of the City acquiesced in the decree of the circuit court without appeal.

Parties who do not appeal from the final decree of the circuit court cannot be heard in opposition to the same when the case is regularly brought here by other proper parties. They may be heard in support of the decree and in opposition to every assignment of error, but they cannot be heard to show that the decree below was erroneous. The Stephen Morgan, 94 U. S., 599 [XXIV., 266].

Concede that, and it follows that the only question open in the case for examination is, whether the other two respondent municipal Corporations are liable to any extent for the debts of the extinguished municipality, portions of whose territory were transferred by the Legislature into their respective jurisdictions. We say, liable to any extent, because the question of amount was submitted to the master, and the record shows that neither of the appellants excepted to the master's report. Gordon v. Lewis, 2 Sum., 143; McMicken v. Perin, 18 How., 507 [59 U. S., XV., 504]. Nor do either of the assignments of error allege that the master committed any error in that regard. Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How., 691.

Viewed in that light, as the case should be, it is clear that if the appellants are liable at all, they are liable for the respective amounts specified in the decree. Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat., 103; Storry v. Livingston, 13 Pet., 359.

Where one town is by a legislative Act merged in two others, it would, doubtless, be competent for the Legislature to regulate the rights, duties and obligations of the two towns whose limits are thus enlarged; but if that is not done, then it must follow that the two towns succeed to all the public property and immunities of the extinguished municipality. Morgan v. Beloit, 7 Wall., 613, 617 [74 U. S., XIX., 203, 204].

It is not the case where the Legislature creates a new town out of a part of the territory of an old one, without making provision for the payment of the debts antecedently contracted, as in that case it is settled law that the old corporation retains all the public property not included within the limits of the new municipality, and is liable for all the debts contracted by her before the Act of separation was passed. Depere v. Bellevue, 31 Wis., 120, 125.

Instead of that, it is the case where the charter of one corporation is vacated and rendered null, the whole of its territory being annexed to two others. In such a case, if no legislative arrangements are made, the effect of the annulment and annexation will be that the two enlarged corporations will be entitled to all the public property and immunities of the one that ceases to exist, and that they will become liable for all the legal debts contracted by her, prior to the time when the annexation is carried into operation.

Speaking to the same point, the Supreme Court of Missouri held that where one corporation goes entirely out of existence by being annexed to or merged in another, if no arrangements are made respecting the property and liabilities of the corporation that ceases to exist, the subsisting corporation will be entitled to all the property and be answerable for all the liabilities. Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo., 176, 177.

Grant that; and it follows that when the corporation first named ceases to exist there is then no power left to control in its behalf any of its funds, or to pay off any of its indebtedness. Its property passes into the hands of its successor, and when the benefits are taken the burdens are assumed, the rule being that the successor who takes the benefits must take the same cum onere, and that the successor town is thereby stopped to deny that she is liable to respond for the attendant burdens. Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall., 254, 274 [76 U. S., XIX., 554, 560]; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El., 474.

Powers of a defined character are usually granted to a municipal corporation, but that does not prevent the Legislature from exercising unlimited control over their charters. It still has authority to amend their charters, enlarge or diminish their powers, extend or limit their boundaries, consolidate two or more into one, overrule their legislative action whenever it is deemed unwise, impolitic or unjust, and even abolish them altogether, in the legislative discretion, and substitute in their place those which are different. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 232.

Municipal corporations, says Mr. Justice Field, so far as they are invested with subordinate legislative powers for local purposes, are mere instrumentalities of the State for the convenient administration of their affairs; but when authorized to take stock in a railroad company, and issue their obligations in payment of the stock, they are, to that extent, to be deemed private corporations, and their obligations are secured by all the guaranties which protect the engagements of private individuals. Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S., 266, 269 [XXIII., 896, 897].

Modifications of their boundaries may be made, or their names may be changed, or one may be merged in another, or it may be divided and the moieties of their territory may be annexed to others; but in all these cases, if the extinguished municipality owes outstanding debts, it will be presumed in every such case that the Legislature intended that the liabilities as well as the rights of property of the corporation which thereby ceases to exist shall accompany the territory and property into the jurisdiction to which the territory is annexed. Colchester v. Seaber, 3 Burr., 1866.

Neither argument nor authority is necessary to prove that a State Legislature cannot pass a valid law impairing the obligations of a contract, as that general proposition is universally admitted. Contracts under the Constitution are as sacred as the Constitution that protects them from infraction, and yet the defense in this case, if sustained, will establish the proposition that the effect of state legislation may be such as to deprive a party of all means of sustaining an action of any kind for its enforcement. Cases, doubtless, may arise when the party cannot collect what is due under the contract; but he ought always to be able, by some proper action, to reduce his contract to judgment.

Suppose it be admitted that the Act of the State Legislature annulling the charter of the municipality indebted to the complainant, without making any provision for the payment of outstanding indebtedness, was unconstitutional and void, still it must be admitted that the very Act which annulled that charter annexed all the territory and property of the municipality to the two appellant Towns, and that they acquired with that the same power of taxation over the residents and their estates that they previously possessed over the estates of the inhabitants resident within their limits before their boundaries were enlarged.

Extinguished municipal corporations neither own property nor have they any power to levy taxes to pay debts. Whatever power the extinguished municipality had to levy taxes when the Act passed annulling her charter terminated, and from the moment the annexation of her territory was made to the appellant Towns, the power to tax the property transferred, and the inhabitants residing on it became vested in the proper authorities of the Towns to which the territory and jurisdiction were by that Act transferred; from which it follows that, for all practical purposes, the complainant was left without judicial remedy to enforce the collection of the bonds or to recover judgment for the amounts they represent.

When the appellant Towns accepted the annexation, their authorities knew or ought to have known that the extinguished municipality owed debts, and that the Act effecting the annexation made no provision for their payment. They had no right to assume that the annulment of the charter of the old Town would have the effect to discharge its indebtedness, or to impair the obligation of the contract held by its creditors to enforce the same against those holding the territory and jurisdiction by the authority from the Legislature and the public property and the power of taxation previously held and enjoyed by the extinguished municipality.

Express provision was made by the Act annulling the charter of the debtor municipality for annexing its territory to the appellant Towns; and, when the annexation became complete, the power of taxation previously vested in the inhabitants of the annexed territory as a separate municipality ceased to exist, whether to pay debts or for any other purpose—the reason being that the power, so far as respected its future exercise, was transferred with the territory and the jurisdiction over its inhabitants to the appellant Towns, as enlarged by the annexed territory; from which it follows, unless it be held that the extinguishment of the debtor municipality discharged its debts without payment, which the Constitution forbids, that the appellant Towns assumed each a proportionate share of the outstanding obligations of the debtor town when they acquired the territory, public property, and municipal jurisdiction over everything belonging to the extinguished municipality.

Corporations of a municipal character, such as towns, are usually organized in this country by special Acts or pursuant to some general state law; and it is clear that their powers and duties differ in some important particulars from the towns which existed in the parent country before the Revolution, where they were created by special charters from the Crown, and acquired many of their privileges by prescription, without any aid from Parliament. Corporate franchises of the kind granted during that period partook much more largely of the nature of private corporations than do the municipalities created in this country, and known as towns, cities and counties. Power exists here in the Legislature, not only to fix the boundaries of such a municipality when incorporated, but to enlarge or diminish the same subsequently, without the consent of the residents, by annexation or set-off, unless restrained by the Constitution, even against the remonstrance of every property holder and voter within the limits of the original municipality.

Property set off or annexed may be benefited or burdened by the change, and the liability of the residents to taxation may be increased or diminished; but the question, in every case, is entirely within the control of the Legislature, and, if no provision is made, every one must submit to the will of the State, as expressed through the Legislative Department. Inconvenience will be suffered by some, while others will be greatly benefited in that regard by the change. Nor is it any objection to the exercise of the power, that the property annexed or set off will be subjected to increased taxation, or that the town from which it is taken or to which it is annexed will be benefited or prejudiced, unless the Constitution prohibits the change, since it is a matter, in the absence of constitutional restriction, which belongs wholly to the Legislature to determine. Courts everywhere in this country hold that, in the division of towns, the Legislature may apportion the burdens between the two, and may determine the proportion to be borne by each. Sill v. Corning, 15 N.Y., 297; Mayor v. State, 15 Md., 376; Olney v. Harvey, 50 Ill., 458; Borough of Dunmore's App., 52 Pa., 374.

Public property and the subordinate rights of a municipal corporation are within the control of the Legislature; and it is held to be settled law that, where two separate towns are created out of one, each, in the absence of any statutory regulation, is entitled to hold in severalty the public property of the old corporation which falls within its limits. N. Hempstead v. Hempstead, 2 Wend., 109; Hartford Br. Co. v. E. Hartford, 16 Conn., 149, 171.

Extensive powers in that regard are, doubtless, possessed by the Legislature; but the Constitution provides that no State shall pass any "law impairing the obligation of contracts," from which it follows that the Legislature, in the exercise of any such power, cannot pass any valid law impairing the right of existing creditors of the old municipality. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp., 2d ed., sec. 41; Van Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall., 535, 554 [71 U. S., XVIII., 403, 409]; Lee Co. v. Rogers, 7 Wall., 181, 184 [74 U. S., XIX., 160, 161]; Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575, 583 [75 U. S., XIX., 490, 493]; Furman v. Nichol, 8 Wall., 44, 62 [75 U. S., XIX., 370, 377].

Where a municipal corporation has the power to contract a debt, it has, says Dixon, C. J., by necessary implication, authority to resort to the usual mode of raising money to pay it, which, undoubtedly, is taxation. Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 25 Wis., 122, 133.

Whenever the charter of a city, at the time of the issue of bonds, made it the duty of the city authorities to levy and collect the amount, when reduced to judgment, like other city charges, the same court held that a subsequent Act of the Legislature prohibiting the city from levying such a tax would be repugnant to the Constitution. Soutter v. Madison, 15 Wis., 30.

State control over the division of the territory of the State into cities, towns and districts, unless restricted by some constitutional limitation, is supreme, but the same court admits that it cannot be exercised to annul another regulation of the Constitution. Chandler v. Boston, 112 Mass., 200; Ops. of Justices, etc., 6 Cush., 580.

Cities or towns, whenever they engage in transactions not public in their nature, act under the same pecuniary responsibility as individuals, and are as much bound by their engagements as are private persons, nor is it in the power of the Legislature to authorize them to violate their contracts. Saving Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa., 175, 185.

Text writers concede almost unlimited power to the State Legislatures in respect to the division of towns and the alteration of their boundaries, but they all agree that in the exercise of these powers they cannot defeat the rights of creditors nor impair the obligation of a valid contract. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp., sec. 128; Blanchard v. Bissell, 11 Ohio, 96; Lansing v. Co. Treas., 1 Dill. (C. C.), 522, 528.

Concessions of power to municipal corporations are of high importance; but they are not contracts, and, consequently, are subject to legislative control without limitation, unless the Legislature oversteps the limits of the Constitution. Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann., 515.

Bonds having been issued and used by a city for purchasing land for a park, which was pledged for the payment of the bonds, held, that a subsequent Act of the Legislature authorizing a sale of a portion of the park, free of all liens existing by virtue of the original Act, was in violation of the Federal Constitution, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Brooklyn Park Com. v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y., 234, 247.

Laws passed by a State impairing the obligation of a contract are void, and if a State cannot pass such a law, it follows that no agency can do so which acts under the State with delegated authority. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 241; Ang. & A., Corp., 9th ed., secs. 332, 333.

Municipal debts cannot be paid by an Act of the Legislature annulling the charter of the municipality, and, if not, then the creditors of such a political division must have some remedy after the annulment takes place. Without officers, or the power of electing such agents, a municipal corporation, if it can be so called, would be an entity very difficult to be subjected to judicial process or to legal responsibility; but when the entity itself is extinguished, and the inhabitants with its territory and other property are transferred to other municipalities, the suggestion that creditors may pursue their remedy against the original contracting party is little less than a mockery. Public property, with the inhabitants and their estates, and the power of taxation, having been transferred by the authority of the Legislature to the appellants, the principles of equity and good conscience require that, inasmuch as they are and have been for nearly twenty years in the enjoyment of the benefits resulting from the annexation, they shall in due proportions also bear the burdens. New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S., 644, 654 [XXIV., 521, 522].

Equitable rules of decision are sufficiently comprehensive in their reach to do justice between parties litigant, and to overcome every difficulty which can be suggested in this case. States are divided and subdivided into such municipalities, called counties, cities, towns and school districts, and the Legislature of every State is required every year to pass laws modifying their charters and enlarging or diminishing their boundaries. Nor are the questions presented in this case either new in principle or difficult of application. New forms are given to such charters in every day's experience, when the limits of an old corporation are changed by annexation of new territory, or portions of the territory of the old municipality are set off and annexed to another town. Both corporations, in such a case, continue, though it may be that the charters are much changed, and that the inhabitants of the territory annexed or set off fall under different officers and new and very diverse regulations. Beckwith v. Racine, 7 Biss., 142, 149.

Pecuniary burdens may be increased or diminished by the change; but, in the absence of express provisions regulating the subject, it will be presumed in every case where both municipalities are continued, that the outstanding liabilities of the same remain unaffected by such legislation. Unlike that in this case, the charter of the old town was vacated and annulled; from which it follows that the same principles of justice require that the appellant Towns, to which the territory, property and inhabitants of the annulled municipality were annexed, should become liable for its outstanding indebtedness.

Hearing was had in this case during the last Term of this court and the case now numbered 283 was heard at the same time. Both cases, it is agreed by the parties, depend upon substantially the same facts, and, of course, they must be decided in the same way.

Decree in each case is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Miller, dissenting:
Mr. Justice Field, Mr. Justice Bradley and myself are of opinion that it requires legislation to make a legal obligation against the new Town, and make the apportionment of the debt; and we dissent, on that ground, from the judgment and from the opinion of the court in this case.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, ex rel. CHAUNCEY P. WILLIAMS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM J. WEAVER ET AL., Constituting the BOARD OF ASSESSORS OF THE CITY OF ALBANY.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 539-547.)

State taxation of national banks—assessment of —New York law.

*1. The provision of the national bank law, that state taxation on the shares of the banks shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of citizens of the State, has reference to the entire process of assessment and includes the valuation of the shares as well as the ratio of percentage charged on such valuation.

2. A statute of a State, therefore, which establishes a mode of assessment by which the shares of the national banks are valued higher, in proportion to their real value, than other moneyed capital, is in conflict with the Act of Congress, though no greater percentage is levied on that valuation than on the valuation of other moneyed capital.

3. The Statute of New York of 1866, which permits a debtor to deduct the amount of his debts from the valuation of all his personal property including moneyed capital, except his bank shares, taxes those shares at a greater rate than other moneyed capital and is, therefore, void as to the shares of national banks.

Argued Mar. 28, 1879. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. F. Edmunds and Matthew Hale, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. R. W. Peckham and Lyman Tremaine, for defendants in error.

(See briefs of argument and authorities in No. 693, next preceding case.)

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The law of the State of New York for taxation in the County of Albany, enacted in the year 1850, contained the following section:

"Section 9. If any person shall, at any time before the assessors shall have completed their assessments, make affidavit that the value of his real estate does not exceed a certain sum, to be specified in such affidavit, or that the value of the personal estate owned by him, after deducting his just debts, and his property invested in the stock of any corporation or association liable to be taxed therefor, does not exceed a certain sum, to be specified in the affidavit, it shall be the duty of the Board of Assessors to value such real or personal estate, or both, as the case may be, at the sum specified in such affidavit, and no more."

In the year 1866, the Legislature of that State enacted on this subject another law, the 1st section of which reads as follows:

"Section 1. No tax shall hereafter be assessed upon the capital of any bank or banking association organized under the authority of this State or of the United States; but the stockholders in such banks and banking associations shall be assessed and taxed on the value of their shares of stock therein; said shares shall be included in the valuation of the personal property of such stockholder in the assessment of taxes at the place, town or ward where such bank or banking association is located, and not elsewhere, whether the said stockholder reside in said place, town or ward or not, but not at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals in this State. And, in making such assessment, there shall also be deducted from the value of such shares such sum as is in the same proportion to such value as is the assessed value of the real estate of the bank or banking association, and in which any portion of their capital is invested, in which said shares are held, to the whole amount of the capital stock of said bank or banking association. And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to exempt from taxation the real estate held or owned by any such bank or banking association; but the same shall be subject to State, county, municipal and other taxation to the same extent and rate and in the same manner as other real estate is taxed."

The defendants in error constituted the Board of Assessors of the City of Albany for the year 1875 and assessed the plaintiff for taxation the sum of $38,250, on account of shares owned by him in the National Albany Exchange Bank, organized under the general Banking Act of Congress. He appeared before this Board in due time, and demanded the reduction of this sum to the amount of $1, and accompanied the demand with this affidavit:

"CITY AND COUNTY OF ALBANY, ss.:

I, Chauncey P. Williams, being duly sworn, do depose and say that the value of personal estate owned by me, including my bank stock, after deducting my just debts and my property invested in the stock of corporations or associations liable to be taxed therefor, and my investments in the obligations of the United States, does not exceed the sum of one dollar.

C. P. WILLIAMS.

Subscribed and sworn before me, this 28th day of September, 1875.

JAMES MAHER, Notary Public."

The defendants refused to make this deduction; and, under the procedure in the courts of New York, which allows of an amicable suit on an agreed statement of facts, the case finally came to the Court of Appeals of that State. The judgment there being in favor of defendants, the plaintiffs bring the record to this court by writ of error. Three questions were raised and decided in the Supreme Court, and its judgment affirmed in the Court of Appeals. They are thus stated in the record:

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

See 10 OTTO.

"The case coming on for argument on the submission thereof, after hearing Mr. Hale, of counsel for relator, and Mr. Peckham, of counsel for defendants, the court decides:

1. That it was not the duty of the defendants, as Assessors of the City of Albany, to comply with the demand made by said relator, and reduce his assessments to the sum of one dollar, and answer the first question submitted in the negative.

2. That, under the law of the State of New York, referred to in the second question, and passed April 23, 1866, the defendants, as such assessors, were justified in refusing to reduce the relator's assessment on his shares of bank stock mentioned in said submission to the sum of one dollar, and answers the second question in the affirmative.

3. That the said law of the State of New York, passed April 23, 1866, is not in violation of any law of the United States relating to the amount of taxes on shares of national banking associations, and answers the third question submitted in the negative.

Judgment is, therefore, ordered for the defendants against the relator, with costs."

Of the second of these propositions this court has no jurisdiction, but must accept the decision of the highest court of the State, that the Act of 1866 took the money invested in bank shares out of the general provision of the Law of 1850, which allowed a deduction of the debts owing by the shareholder from the value of the personal property as a basis for laying the tax. In that respect, we are bound by the decision of the Court of Appeals as the true construction of the state statute. The first proposition is but the necessary result of the case, if the other two are decided in favor of defendants by that court. We have thus left for our consideration the third proposition, which, being decided against a right asserted by plaintiff under the Act of Congress establishing the national banking system, presents a question reviewable by this court. We proceed to consider it.

The Court of Appeals delivered no formal opinion in the present case; but, in the entry of their judgment, which is part of the record, they say: "This judgment is upon the authority of the former decision of this court, rendered in the case of People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y., 59."

The opinion in that case is before us, and it decides directly the question now presented, and, if sound, it justifies the judgment of the court in this case. We have given it the careful consideration which the high character of the court demands at our hands. The question arises on the provision of the National Bank Law concerning taxation of the shares of the banks, which is thus expressed in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, in force at the time of this assessment:

"Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the association is located, * * * subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other money capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by non-residents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere."

It cannot be disputed—it is not disputed here—nor is it denied in the opinion of the state court, that the effect of the state law is to permit a citizen of New York, who has money capital invested otherwise than in banks, to deduct from that capital the sum of all his debts, leaving the remainder alone subject to taxation, while he whose money is invested in shares of bank stocks can make no such deduction. Nor can it be denied that, inasmuch as nearly all the banks in that State and in all others are national banks, that the owner of such shares who owes debts is subjected to a heavier tax on account of those shares than the owner of moneyed capital otherwise invested, who also is in debt, because the latter can diminish the amount of his tax by the amount of his indebtedness, while the former cannot. That this works a discrimination against the national bank shares as subjects of taxation, unfavorable to the owners of such shares, is also free from doubt. The question we are called to decide is, whether Congress, in passing the Act which subjected these shares to taxation by the State, intended, by the very clause which was designed to prevent discrimination between national bank shares and other moneyed capital, to authorize such a result.

That the provision which we have cited was necessary to authorize the States to impose any tax whatever on these bank shares, is abundantly established by the cases of McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat., 316; Osborn v. Bk., 9 Wheat., 738; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet., 449.

As Congress was conferring a power on the States which they would not otherwise have had, to tax these shares, it undertook to impose a restriction on the exercise of that power, manifestly designed to prevent taxation which should discriminate against this class of property as compared with other moneyed capital. In permitting the State to tax these shares, it was foreseen—the cases we have cited from our former decisions showed too clearly—that the state authorities might be disposed to tax the capital invested in these banks oppressively.

This might have been prevented by fixing a precise limit in amount. But Congress, with due regard to the dignity of the States, and with a desire to interfere only so far as was necessary to protect the banks from anything beyond their equal share of the public burdens, said: you may tax the real estate of the banks as other real estate is taxed, and you may tax the shares of the bank as the personal property of the owner to the same extent you tax other moneyed capital invested in your State. It was conceived that by this qualification of the power of taxation equality would be secured and injustice prevented.

That such was the intent of Congress can admit of no doubt. Have they given expression to that intent so that courts can see and enforce it, or have they expressed themselves so unfortunately that the States may, by a narrow interpretation of the Act of Congress and by skillfully framed statutes of their own, exercise the power thus granted so as not only to reap its full benefit, but at the same time cause the burden of supporting the State Government to fall with unequal weight on the subject of taxation thus surrendered to it by the National Government?

The argument by which this view is supported is founded on the assumption that while Congress limited the state authorities in reference to the ratio or percentage levied on the value of these shares, which could not be greater than on other moneyed capital invested in the State, it left the matter of the relative valuation of the shares and of other moneyed capital wholly to the control of state regulation. The State can, therefore, adopt any arbitrary or conventional system of valuation as a basis of taxation, however unequally or unjustly it may operate and however it may discriminate against bank shares, provided the percentage of the tax levied in this valuation is the same in all cases. If, for instance, the tax is two per cent. on all personal property, the argument is, that the Act of Congress is not violated if the valuation on the money of the citizen invested in state bonds is, by statute, one half its real value, and that on bank shares is its full value, or, as in the Statute of the State now under consideration, the tax payer is allowed an exemption from taxation in whole or in part, as regards his state bonds, while none is allowed in reference to bank shares.

"Taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals." Seizing upon the word rate in this sentence as if disconnected from the word assessment, and construing it to mean percentage on any valuation that might be made, the Court of Appeals arrive at the conclusion that, since that percentage is the same in all cases, the Act of Congress is not infringed. If this philological criticism were perfectly just, we still think the manifest purpose of Congress in passing this law should prevail. We have already shown what that was. But the criticism is not sound. The section to be construed begins by declaring that these shares may be "Included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the association is located." This valuation, then, is part of the assessment of taxes. It is a necessary part of every assessment of taxes which is governed by a ratio or percentage. There can be no rate or percentage without a valuation. This taxation, says the Act, shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital. What is it that shall not be greater? The answer is, taxation. In what respect shall it be not greater than the rate assessed upon other capital? We see that Congress had in its mind an assessment, a rate of assessment, and a valuation; and, taking all these together, the taxation on these shares was not to be greater than on other moneyed capital.

"When taxes have been properly decided upon, an assessment may become an indispensable proceeding in the establishment of any individual charge, against either person or property. This is always requisite when the taxes are to be levied in proportion to an estimate either of values, of benefits, or the results of business." "An assessment, strictly speaking, is an official estimate of the sums which are to See 10 Orto.

constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within the district. As the word is more commonly employed, an assessment consists in the two processes listing the persons, property, etc., to be taxed, and of estimating the sums which are to be the guide in an apportionment of the tax between them. * * * Taxation by valuation cannot be apportioned without it." Cooley, Tax., 258, 259; Burroughs, Tax., p. 198, sec. 94. So, also, Judge Bouvier defines assessment to be determining the value of a man's property or occupation for the purpose of levying a tax. Determining the share of a tax to be paid by each individual. Levying a tax. 1 Bouvier, 154. These definitions show that, in the best use of the language employed by Congress, we are justified in looking to the rule of valuation adopted by the State in assessing taxes on these shares, as well as to the uniformity of percentage to ascertain whether the congressional restriction has been violated.

It is said, however, that the judgment of the state court is supported by the decision of this court in the case of the People v. Comrs., 4 Wall., 244 [71 U. S., XVIII., 344]. The specific question now before us was not involved in that case. The only matter before the court was, whether the holder of the bank shares was entitled to deduct from their value a due proportion of the sum which the bank had invested in government bonds. This was decided in the negative, and it is all that was decided, or could be decided. The sentence in Mr. Justice Nelson's opinion, on which the argument is founded, reads thus: "The answer is, that, upon a true construction of this clause of the Act, the meaning and intent of the law-makers were that the rate of taxation of the shares should be the same, or not greater, than upon the moneyed capital of the individual citizen which is subject or liable to taxation. That is, no greater proportion or percentage of tax in the valuation of the shares should be levied than upon other moneyed taxable capital in the hands of the citizens."

If we give to the phrase "rate of taxation" in this sentence no more than its proper force, and if we observe that the learned Judge speaks of the proportion or percentage in the valuation, not on it as it is misquoted, we have the idea which we have already supposed to be the true one in the minds of the law-makers. However this may be, we feel quite sure that the question of limiting the effect of the Act of Congress to a discrimination in the percentage levied as a tax, without regard to equality in the valuation on which that tax was levied, was not before the court, and was not intended to be decided. And in our view such a proposition is untenable.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the Statute of New York, as construed by the Court of Appeals, in refusing to plaintiff the same deduction for debts due by him, from the valuation of his shares of national bank stock, that it allows to those who have moneyed capital otherwise invested, is in conflict with the Act of Congress, and the judgment of that court is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings in conformity to this opinion.

Federal question—liability of judicial officer.

1. Where the New York Court of Appeals decided that, in the absence of fraud or intentional wrong, the assessors of a city were not personally liable in damages for any error in an assessment of national bank stock, held: that whether that court decided that question correctly or not, is not a federal question which this court is authorized to review.

2. An officer whose duty personally, is mainly judicial, is no more liable for a mistaken construction of an Act of Congress than he would be for mistaking the common law or a state statute.

Argued Mar. 27, 28, 1879. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. F. Edmunds and Matthew Hale, for plaintiff in error:

It is conceded by the court below and must be regarded as settled, as well by this court as by the courts of New York, that the defendants as assessors, violated the law in the mode adopted by them for assessing bank shares in the City of Albany, viz.: by assessing them at their par value, without reference to their actual value.

Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall., 480 (90 U. S., XXIII., 112); People v. Comrs., 67 N. Y., 516; People v. Assessors, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 583.

But it is found by the referee and held by the courts of New York, that the defendants, as such assessors, in making the assessments complained of, had jurisdiction of the property, and persons and corporations assessed, and acted in good faith and without malice, and that their proceedings were regular and, therefore, that they are not liable in this action.

This raises the important question in this case: had the defendants, as assessors of the City of Albany, jurisdiction to make such assessments? If they acted without jurisdiction, either of the person or of the property owned, their action was void and they are liable.

Mygatt v. Washburn, 15 N. Y., 316; Dorwin v. Strickland, 57 N. Y., 492; Bk. v. Elmira, 53 N. Y., 49.

It is insisted on the part of the plaintiff in error, that the defendants, in making the assessment in question, acted without jurisdiction, and are liable for the damages resulting from such assessment.

1. The capital of the National Exchange Bank or its equivalent was all invested in bonds of the United States.

2. It is well established by a long series of decisions of this court, that a tax imposed by any State, without the permission of Congress, directly or indirectly, upon any bonds or other securities issued by the United States Government, is unconstitutional and void.

McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat., 426; Osborn v. Bk., 9 Wheat., 738; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet., 449; Bk. v. N. Y., 2 Black, 628 (67 U. S., XVII., 454); Bank Tax Case, 2 Wall., 200 (69 U. S., XVII., 793); Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall., 573 (70 U. S., XVIII., 229).

The National Banking Act, ch. 106 of 1864, permitted such shares to be included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner in the assessment of taxes imposed under state authority, subject to the limitations that the amount should not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State, and that the tax imposed should not exceed the rate imposed upon the shares of any state bank.

See 13 Stat. at L., 112, sec. 41.

4. This court, in Van Allen v. Assessors (supra), held unanimously that a state tax upon shares of a national bank not imposed in conformity with these limitations was void.

See, Mr. Justice Nelson's opinion (supra, 233), Chief Justice Chase's opinion (supra, 235); R. S. of U. S., p. 1015, sec. 5219.

The defendants, then, had no jurisdiction to assess the shares of the National Exchange Bank, unless they observed the restriction, "That the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State." Disregarding it, their action was void. The observance of this restriction was necessary to give them jurisdiction. This was expressly decided in the case of Van Allen v. Assessors (supra).

The defendants, in fact, utterly disregarded this restriction. They did not inquire or endeavor to ascertain the actual or market value, either of the national or the state bank shares; although the National Exchange Bank and the Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank published reports in the public newspapers of the City of Albany, showing that one share of the state bank was of more than double the value of a share of the national bank, the defendants assessed both at their par value, excluding real estate, making the assessment upon a share of the national bank actually greater than that upon a share of the state bank, worth twice as much. In other words, the rate assessed by defendants upon plaintiff's moneyed capital, invested in the National Exchange Bank, was double that imposed by them upon the other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens of the State, invested in the Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank, a state institution.

The defendants did not act judicially in making these assessments. If they had endeavored in good faith to conform to the restrictions imposed by the law of Congress, perhaps this might have been said. It is not necessary to contend that a mistake in judgment as to actual value would make them liable. But they made no inquiry, no effort.

There can be no question, upon the facts found by the referee, that the national bank shares of plaintiff and his assignors, were assessed at a higher rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State. Moneyed capital certainly includes investments in stocks, bonds or other securities.

Waite, C. J., 23 Wall., 484 (90 U. S., XXIII., 112).

The acts of the defendants being illegal, unauthorized, in violation of the laws of the United States, and without jurisdiction, the right of the plaintiff to recover the damages sustained by reason of such unlawful act cannot be questioned.

Ad. Torts, 1; 1 Hill. Torts, 94; Mygatt v. Washburn (supra); Dorwin v. Strickland (supra); Rigby v. Hewitt, 5 Exch., 240.

Mr. R. W. Peckham, for defendants in error:

The assessment of the shares of stock belonging to plaintiff was valid.

The taxation was not at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State.

People v. Comrs., 4 Wall., 244 (71 U. S., XVIII., 344); People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y., 59; Adams v. Nashville, 95 U. S., 19 (XXIV., 369).

The claim to deduct the personal indebtedness from the total value of the personal property, and for that purpose to include the valuation of the bank shares in the valuation of the balance of the personal property of the owner, is not valid.

The act of the assessors was judicial in its character, and, even if erroneous, no liability attaches to them on that account. If this court determines to examine this question, I would say:

(I.) In this case, the finding is that the defendants acted in good faith in their assessment; that there had been no judicial opinion expressed, at the time of the assessment, as to how it should be made; that there was no malice on defendants' part and that they acted in good faith. The leading case on the subject of the irresponsibility of assessors for a judicial act, in the State of New York, is Weaver v. Devendorf, 3 Den., 117, and this same principle is decided, or assumed to exist, in all the following cases:

Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y., 238; Swift v. Poughkeepsie, 37 N. Y., 511; R. R. Co. v. Supervisors of Erie Co., 48 N. Y., 93; Clark v. Norton, 49 N. Y., 243; Bk. v. Elmira, 53 N. Y., 49; Dorwin v. Strickland, 57 N. Y., 493; Yountans v. Simmons, 7 Hun, 466.

(II.) Of course, if there be a lack of jurisdiction in the assessors to make the assessment, then they are liable. Such are the cases in 53 N. Y., 49, and 57 N. Y., 492 (supra), and Overing v. Foote, 65 N. Y., 263.

(III.) There is claimed to have been a lack of jurisdiction here, because, as plaintiff alleges, the defendants have taxed him at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital, which, as plaintiff alleges, they had no right to do; and doing it, their action is without jurisdiction. It would seem that the fallacy of that argument is plain.

1. It is not claimed that the defendants did not have: (a) Jurisdiction of the person of the plaintiff; or (b) Jurisdiction to make some assessment of value, to be determined by the judgment of the assessors upon the shares of the plaintiff. The two statutes give them such jurisdiction in terms. (c) The question, then, as to the amount of the assessment is one, of all others, judicial in its nature.

2. It is entirely different from jurisdiction to assess an individual, provided he is a resident, and no jurisdiction to assess in case he is a non-resident. In such case, the fact of residence must exist, or there is no jurisdiction, and the fact of residence or non-residence is not altered by a decision of the assessors upon the subject. So as to the time in which an assessment may be made; if made outside of it, there is no jurisdiction, because a fact upon which jurisdiction depends does not exist when the assessment is made.

3. Here, the case is wholly different. The assessors have jurisdiction of the person of the plaintiff, and jurisdiction to make an assessment upon the property. The only question for the assessors to determine is the amount of such assessment.

(IV.) Having jurisdiction to decide upon such amount, it would seem clear that their decision upon such question was judicial in its nature, and if erroneous, liable to be corrected by a proceeding taken for that purpose, but such error not rendering them personally liable therefor.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This, though a suit between the same parties, and coming here by writ of error to the same court as the preceding case, is of a very different character. In the action as brought in the Supreme Court, the plaintiff seeks to hold these parties individually liable for the sum which he and many others have been compelled to pay as taxes on their shares of national bank stock, by reason of the wrongful assessment for the year 1874, made by the defendants in their official character as the Board of Assessors for the City of Albany.

The errors in assessments complained of are numerous and of a varied character, most of them having relation to improper discrimination to the prejudice of the rights of the plaintiff and his assignors, as holders of shares in national banks.

The Court of Appeals, in its opinion, conceding that the assessment was in many respects erroneous to the prejudice of plaintiff, held that, in the absence of fraud or intentional wrong, the defendants were not personally liable in damages for any error in their assessment. Whether that court decided that question correctly or not, it is not a federal question, but one of general municipal law, to be governed either by the common law or by the statute law of the State. In either case it presents no question on which this court is authorized to review a judgment of the state court.

That decision is also conclusive of the whole case. For if assessors in the exercise of their function of assessing property for taxation are not personally liable for any error they may commit, it can make no difference that the error consisted in a misconstruction of an Act of Congress. An officer whose duty, as the Court of Appeals of New York holds, is mainly judicial, is no more liable in damages personally for a mistaken construction of an Act of Congress than he would be for mistaking the common law or a state statute.

We may observe, also, that the federal right mainly relied on here as having been violated, namely: the right to have plaintiff's indebtedness deducted from the valuation of his bank shares, was not raised, because the plaintiff did not make the necessary affidavit and demand, as he did in the previous case.

On the whole, there is no error in the judgment of the Court of Appeals which this court can review, and its judgment is affirmed.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF MAHONING COUNTY, OHIO.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 548-563.)

County seat of Ohio County—interpretation of statute.

* In the year 1846 the Legislature of Ohio passed an Act whereby it was provided that the county seat of Mahoning County should be permanently established at Canfield, upon the fulfilment of certain prescribed terms and conditions, which were fully complied with. The county seat was established accordingly and remained at Canfield for about thirty years. In 1874 the Legislature passed another Act, providing for its removal to Youngstown.

This bill was filed, setting forth that the Act of 1846, and what was done under it, constituted an executed contract within the meaning and protection of the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States and praying for a perpetual injunction against the removal contemplated by the later Act. Held:

I. That the contract clause of the Constitution had no application.

II. That the Act of 1846 was a public law, relating to a public subject, with respect to which a prior had no power to bind a subsequent Legislature.

III. Conceding there was a contract as claimed, it was satisfied, on the part of the State, by establishing the county seat at Canfield, with the intent that it should remain there.

IV. There was no stipulation that the county seat should be kept or remain there in perpetuity.

V. The rule of interpretation in cases like this, as against the State, is, that nothing is to be taken as conceded but what is given in express and explicit terms or by an implication equally clear. Silence is negation and doubt is fatal to the claim.

Argued Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio.

This action was brought in the Court of Common Pleas for the County of Mahoning, in the State of Ohio, by the plaintiffs in error, in behalf of themselves and others citizens of the County of Mahoning, for the purpose of obtaining an injunction against the Board of County Commissioners, now defendants in error, to prevent the removal of the county seat of said County from Canfield to the City of Youngstown.

The Court of Common Pleas dismissed the petition, and the plaintiffs appealed to the District Court. That court ordered that the case be reserved for decision in the Supreme Court of the State. That court rendered a decree dismissing the plaintiff's petition, and the plaintiffs sued out the present writ of error.

Messrs. Luther Day and J. A. Garfield, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. T. W. Sanderson, for defendant in error.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice SWAYNE.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed in behalf of the plaintiffs in error that the Act of the 16th February, 1846, and what was done under it, constituted an executed contract which is binding on the State; and that the Act of April 9, 1874, and the steps taken pursuant to its provisions, impair the obligation of that contract, and bring the case within the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States. Art. 1, sec. 10.

These allegations are the ground of our jurisdiction. They present the only question argued before us, and our remarks will be confined to that subject.

The case may be properly considered under two aspects:

Was it competent for the State to enter into such a contract as is claimed to have been made?

And if such a contract were made, what is its meaning and effect?

Undoubtedly, there are cases in which a State may, as it were, lay aside its sovereignty and contract like an individual, and be bound accordingly. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How., 304; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall., 203 [83 U. S., XXI., 447].

The cases in which such contracts have been sustained and enforced are very numerous. Many of them are cases in which the question was presented whether a private Act of incorporation, or one or more of its clauses, is a contract within the meaning of the National Constitution. There is no such restraint upon the British Parliament. Hence the adjudications of that country throw but little light upon the subject.

The Dartmouth Coll. Case [4 Wheat., 518], was the pioneer in this field of our jurisprudence.

The principle there laid down, and since maintained in the cases which have followed and been controlled by it, has no application where the statute in question is a public law relating to a public subject within the domain of the general legislative power of the State, and involving the public rights and public welfare of the entire community affected by it. The two classes of cases are separated by a broad line of demarcation. The distinction was forced upon the attention of the court by the argument in the Dart. Coll. Case. Mr. Chief Justice Marshall said:

"That, anterior to the formation of the Constitution, a course of legislation had prevailed in many, if not in all, of the States, which weakened the confidence of man in man, and embarrassed all transactions between individuals, by dispensing with a faithful performance of engagements. To correct this mischief by restraining the power which produced it, the State Legislatures were forbidden 'to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts;' that is, of contracts respecting property, under which some individual could claim a right to something beneficial to himself; and that since the clause in the Constitution must, in construction, receive some limitation, it may be confined, and ought to be confined, to cases of this description; to cases within the mischief it was intended to remedy.

The general correctness of these observations cannot be controverted. That the framers of the Constitution did not intend to restrain the States in the regulation of their civil institutions, adopted for internal government, and that the instrument they have given us is not to be so construed, may be admitted. The provision of the Constitution never has been understood to embrace other contracts than those which respect property, or some object of value, and confer rights which may be asserted in a court of justice. It never has been understood to restrict the general right of the Legislature to legislate on the subject of divorces. * * * If the Act of incorporation be a grant of political power; if it create a civil institution to be employed in the administration of the government; or if the funds of the college be public property; or if the State of New Hampshire, as a government, be alone interested in its transactions, the subject is one in which the Legislature of the State may act according to its own judgment, unrestrained by any limitation of its power imposed by the Constitution of the United States."

The judgment of the court in that case proceeded upon the ground that the college was "A private eleemosynary institution, endowed with a capacity to take property for purposes unconnected with the government, whose funds are bestowed by individuals on the faith of the charter."

In the later case of E. Hartford v. Br. Co., [10 How., 511], this court further said: "But it is not found necessary for us to decide finally on this first and most doubtful question, as our opinion is clearly in favor of the defendant in error on the other question, namely: that the parties to this grant did not, by their charter, stand in the attitude towards each other of making a contract by it, such as is contemplated in the Constitution, and so could not be modified by subsequent legislation. The Legislature was acting here on the one part, and public municipal corporations on the other. They were acting, too, in relation to a public object, being virtually a highway across the river, over another highway up and down the river. From this standing and relation of these parties, and from the subject-matter of their action, we think that the doings of the Legislature as to this ferry must be considered rather as public laws than as contracts. They related to public interests. They changed as those interests demanded. The grantees likewise, the towns being mere organizations for public purposes, were liable to have their public powers, rights and duties modified or abolished at any moment by the Legislature. * * *

It is hardly possible to conceive the grounds on which a different result could be vindicated, without destroying all legislative sovereignty, and checking most legislative improvements and amendments, as well as supervision over its subordinate public bodies."

The legislative power of a State, except so far as restrained by its own Constitution, is at all times absolute with respect to all offices within its reach. It may at pleasure create or abolish them, or modify their duties. It may also shorten or lengthen the term of service. And it may increase or diminish the salary or change the mode of compensation. Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How., 402.

The police power of the States, and that with respect to municipal corporations, and to many other things that might be named, are of the See 10 OTTO.

same absolute character. Cooley, Const. Lim., pp. 232, 342; The Regents v. Williams, 9 Gill. & J., 365.

In all these cases, there can be no contract and no irrevocable law, because they are "governmental subjects," and hence within the category before stated.

They involve public interests, and legislative Acts concerning them are, necessarily, public laws. Every succeeding Legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power with respect to them as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil.

All these considerations apply with full force to the times and places of holding courts. They are both purely public things, and the laws concerning them must, necessarily, be of the same character.

If one may be bargained about, so may the other. In this respect there is no difference in principle between them.

The same reasoning, pushed a step further in the same direction, would involve the same result with respect to the seat of government of a State.

If a State Capital were sought to be removed, under the circumstances of this case with respect to the county seat, whatever the public exigencies or the force of the public sentiment which demanded it, those interested, as are the plaintiffs in error, might, according to their argument, effectually forbid and prevent it; and this result could be brought about by means of a bill in equity and a perpetual injunction.

It is true a State cannot be sued without its consent, but this would be a small obstacle in the way of the assertion of so potent a right. Though the State cannot be sued, its officers, whose acts were illegal and void, may be. Osborne v. Bk., 9 Wheat., 738; Davis v. Gray [supra].

A proposition leading to such consequences must be unsound. The parent and the offspring are alike. Armstrong v. Comrs., 4 Blackf., 208, was, in some of its features, not unlike the case before us. The Act declared that "So soon as the public buildings are completed in the manner aforesaid, at the place designated, the same shall be forever thereafter the permanent seat of justice of said County of Dearborn." Certain private individuals there, as here, had stipulated to build a court-house, and their compliance was a condition precedent. The condition had been performed. It was held that "the Act did not create a contract." The subject was fully considered. It was held further, that a subsequent Legislature might competently pass an Act for the removal of the county seat so established. In that case, both had been done and both were sustained. The reasoning of the court was substantially the same with ours touching the 8th section of the Act of 1846 here in question. Elwell v. Tucker, 1 Blackf., 285, was also a case arising out of the removal of a county seat. The court said: "The establishment of the time and place of holding courts is a matter of general legislation, respecting which the Act of one session of the General Assembly cannot be binding on another." See, also, Adams v. Logan Co., 11 Ill., 336, and Bass v. Pontleroy, 11 Tex., 698. They are to the same effect.

Second. But conceding, for the purposes of this opinion, that there is here a contract, as claimed by the plaintiffs in error, then the question arises: what is the contract? or, in other words, to what does it bind the State?

The rules of interpretation touching such contracts are well settled in this court. In Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall., 527 [89 U. S., XXII., 805], we said: "But the contract must be shown to exist. There is no presumption in its favor. Every reasonable doubt should be resolved against it. Where it exists, it is to be rigidly scrutinized, and never permitted to extend either in scope or duration beyond what the terms of the concession clearly require." There must have been a deliberate intention clearly manifested on the part of the State to grant what is claimed. Such a purpose cannot be inferred from equivocal language. Bk. v. Billings, 4 Pet., 514; Gilman v. Sheboygan, 2 Black, 510 [67 U. S., XVII., 305.]

It must not be a mere gratuity. There must be a sufficient consideration, or, no matter how long the alleged right has been enjoyed, it may be resumed by the State at its pleasure. Christ Ch. v. Philadelphia, 24 How., 300 [65 U. S., XVI., 602]. No grant can be raised by mere inference or presumption, and the right granted must be clearly defined. Charles R. Br. v. Warren Br., 11 Pet., 420.

"The rule of construction in this class of cases is that it shall be most strongly against the corporation. Every reasonable doubt is to be resolved adversely. Nothing is to be taken as conceded but what is given in unmistakable terms or by an implication equally clear. The affirmative must be shown. Silence is negation, and doubt is fatal to the claim." This doctrine is vital to the public welfare. It is axiomatic in the jurisprudence of this court." Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S., 659 [XXIV., 1036].

The 8th section of the Act of 1846 declares, "That before the seat of justice shall be considered permanently established at the Town of Canfield, the proprietors or citizens thereof shall" do certain things, all of which, it is admitted, were done in due time. This is the whole case of the plaintiffs in error. It will be observed that there is nothing said about the county seat remaining, or being kept, at Canfield forever, or for any specified time, or "permanently." At most, the stipulation is that it shall be considered as permanently established there when the conditions specified are fulfilled. If the Legislature had intended to assume an obligation that it should be kept there in perpetuity, it is to be presumed it would have said so. We cannot—certainly not in this case—interpolate into the statute a thing so important, which it does not contain. The most that can be claimed to have been intended by the State is, that when the conditions prescribed were complied with, the county seat should be then and thereupon "permanently established" at the designated place. We are, therefore, to consider what is the meaning of the phrase "permanently established." Domicil is acquired by residence and the animus manendi, the intent to remain. A permanent residence is acquired in the same way. In neither case is the idea involved that a change of domicil or of residence may not thereafter be made. But this in nowise affects the pre-existing legal status of the individual in either case while it continues. So the county seat was permanently established at Canfield when it was placed there with the intention that it should remain there. This fact, thus complete, was in nowise affected by the further fact that thirty years later the State changed its mind and determined to remove, and did remove, the same county seat to another locality. It fulfilled at the outset the entire obligation it had assumed. It did not stipulate to keep the county seat at Canfield perpetually, and the plaintiffs in error have no right to complain that it was not done. Keeping it there is another and a distinct thing, in regard to which the 8th section of the Act is wholly silent. In Mead v. Ballard, 7 Wall., 290 [74 U. S., XIX., 190]; land was conveyed on the 9th of August, 1848, "Upon the express understanding and condition" that a certain institution of learning then incorporated "shall be permanently located on said land," between the date of the deed and the same day in the succeeding year. The trustees passed a resolution, within the year, locating the institution on the premises, and at once contracted for the erection of the necessary buildings. The buildings were completed, and the institution was in full operation by November, 1849.

In the year 1857 the buildings were destroyed by fire and were not rebuilt. A part of the land was sold by the grantee. The heir of the grantor sued in ejectment to recover the premises. This court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "It is clear to us * * * that when the trustees passed their resolution locating the buildings on the land, with the intention that it should be the permanent place of conducting the business of the corporation, they had permanently located the institution, within the true construction of the contract. Counsel for the plaintiff attach to the word 'permanent' a meaning inconsistent with the obvious intent of the parties—that the condition was one which might be fully performed within a year. Such a construction is something more than a condition to locate. It is a covenant to build and rebuild; a covenant against removal at any time; a covenant to keep up an institution of learning on that land forever, or for a very indefinite time. This could not have been the intention of the parties."

In Harris v. Shaw, 13 Ill., 463, land was conveyed on condition that the county seat should be "permanently located" upon it. The location was made accordingly with that intent, but some years later the county seat was removed. The grantor sued to recover the land. The court said it was no part of the contract that the country seat should remain forever on the premises; that the grantor must be presumed to have known that the Legislature had the power to remove it at pleasure, and that he must be held to have had in view at least the probability of such a change when he made the deed.

There is no point arising under either the former or the present Constitution of Ohio which, in our judgment, requires any remark.

The results of the elaborate research of one of the counsel for the defendants in error show that the phrase "permanently established" is a formula in long and frequent use in Ohio, with respect to county seats established otherwise than temporarily. Yet it is believed this is the first instance in the juridical history of the State in which such a claim as is here made has been set up.

This practical interpretation of the meaning of the phrase, though by no means conclusive, is entitled to grave and respectful consideration.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio is affirmed.

Order of sale in foreclosure—inverse order of alienation.

*1. The doctrine that real estate subject to a judgment or mortgage lien, different parcels of which have been alienated to several persons at different times, shall be subjected to its payment in the inverse order of alienation, is in this case considered and sustained as the prevailing doctrine in courts of equity.

2. As it is the first time this court has been called to consider it, except as an established rule of property in a State, the subject is fully considered, and the authorities, English and American, are reviewed.

Argued Jan. 16, 19, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. S. Cox, Jas. M. Johnson, and John F. Hanna, for appellants.

Mr. Enoch Totten, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

Samuel P. Brown, being seised in fee of a large number of lots constituting the subdivision of a tract of land into the Town of Mount Pleasant, had a judgment rendered against him, March 3, 1870, in favor of one Jolly, for the sum of $4,694.05, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the lots being within the District, the judgment became from that day a lien on them. On the 20th day of June of that year, Mr. Brown borrowed of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company the sum of $10,000, and executed to Daniel L. Eaton a deed of trust conveying a part of the lots owned by him in Mount Pleasant, as security for the repayment of the loan. Under this deed of trust the lots were sold and bought in for the Freedman's Bank, and they have resold several of them and guaranteed the title to the purchasers.

A few months after the execution of the deed of trust above mentioned by Brown, he began to borrow money from the National Savings Bank, the appellant in this case, and gave deeds of trust on other lots in the same subdivision to secure the payment of these loans. In July, 1874, the National Savings Bank, fearing the loss of their security by the judgment against Brown of March 3, 1870, purchased that judgment, and ordered an execution to be issued on it, which was levied on the lots conveyed to Eaton for the benefit of the Freedman's Bank. That Bank having passed into the control of Creswell and others, as commissioners appointed to wind up its affairs, they brought the present bill in chancery to release those lots from sale under that execution.

The court granted such relief as is authorized by the principle, that where real estate is subjected to a lien in the hands of its owner, and he sells or mortgages separate parcels of that property subsequently to different persons and at different times, these parcels shall be subjected to payment of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation.

The facts show that the conveyances to secure the Savings Bank were made subsequently to that made to secure the Freedman's Bank, and if the rule we have mentioned be a sound one, and there be no special reason to exempt this case from its operation, the Freedman's Bank was entitled to have the lots conveyed to the Savings Bank applied to the extent of their value in payment of the judgment, before their lots could be subjected to that payment.

There are one or two matters relied on by appellant to take this case out of the rule.

1. It is said that appellants had no actual notice of the deed of trust to Eaton when it took its mortgages, and a large part of the argument of counsel is devoted to this subject. But it does not appear that the Bank in its answer set up the defense of a bona fide purchaser without notice, nor that any such question was raised in the court below. The main foundation of the suggestion, however, namely: that there is no evidence that the deed to Eaton was recorded, which appeared to be so by the transcript, is removed by the production of the original deed, having on it the certificate of the register of deeds, that it was properly recorded. This removes the foundation of the argument, and it must fail.

Another objection is, that the defendant sets out in its answer that other persons had bought lots of Brown, after the rendition of the judgment, and were proper parties to this suit, and that as plaintiff failed to bring them before the court, the decree in favor of the Freedman's Bank is erroneous, and must be reversed for that reason.

But while the answer says that, as the defendant is informed and believes, there was a considerable amount of other property than that described in the bill, owned by said Brown, and subject to the lien of the judgment, which was sold and conveyed by him after his conveyance to secure the debt of the defendant, it does not describe the property or name the purchasers or fix the date of their purchases.

As the purchases are said to be subsequent to the creation of defendant's lien, it was the interest of defendant to set out the facts necessary to enable the plaintiff to bring them before the court. Nothing in the decree as rendered prevents defendant from selling these lots under his execution. The plaintiff, therefore, was not bound to hunt up the parties and the transactions to which defendant merely alludes in such vague and indefinite language.

Lastly, the appellants argue that the subjection of the property covered by the lien of the judgment to its satisfaction, in the inverse order of its alienation, is not the prevailing rule in courts of equity, nor the rule of property in the District of Columbia.

Though the attention of counsel was directed during the argument to the production of any authoritative decision of the courts of the District or of Maryland which would be conclusive of the question, none could be found, after several days' opportunity for examination, and the decree of the district court must rest on the general equity doctrine, if it be sustained at all.

The question is, also, a new one in this court, for the case of Oreis v. Powell [ante, 239] was decided on the ground that the principle had become a rule of property in Illinois, and this court would follow it in reference to lands in that State. And the case of Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat., 490, does not raise the question before us now, much less decide it. That was merely a question whether improvements constructed on the land after the execution of the mortgage became subject to its operation.

The proposition we are called on to consider is one on which the authorities, though numerous, are by no means in harmony. Mr. Justice Story, in his work on Equity, Vol. II., sec. 1233 b, approves the rule, so far as any of the property subject to the lien remains in the hands of the party against whom the lien was first established, but he says there is great reason to doubt whether it can be applied as between subsequent purchasers from that party, when it has been alienated at different times and to several persons. "On the contrary," he says, in such case "there seems strong ground to contend that the original incumbrance or lien ought to be borne ratably between them, according to the relative value of the estates. And so the doctrine has been asserted in the ancient as well as the modern English cases on the subject."

The older cases cited for this proposition scarcely sustain it. In Sir William Harbert's Case, reported 3 Coke, 11, it was resolved that "If A be seised of three acres, and acknowledge a recognizance or statute, and enfeof B of one acre and C of another acre, and the third descends to his heir, and if execution be sued out against the heir he shall not have contribution against the purchasers, for the heir sits in the seat of his ancestor." Among them is, also, the case of Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atk., 444, in which Lord Hardwicke says: "Suppose a person who has two real estates, mortgages both to one person, and afterwards only one estate to a second mortgagee, who had no notice of the first; the court, in order to relieve the second mortgagee, have directed the first to take his satisfaction out of that estate only which is not in mortgage to the second mortgagee, if that is sufficient to satisfy the first mortgage, in order to make room for the second mortgagee, even though the estates descended to two different persons." This seems to be a pretty clear statement of the rule adopted in many of the States of the Union at the present day, though based rather upon the principle applicable to marshaling assets, that he who has a right to resort to two funds, in one of which alone another party has a subsidiary lien, shall be compelled to exhaust the one to which the other cannot resort before coming upon the one in which they both have an interest, than on the ground now relied on in the courts of this country.

That ground is, that the first purchaser has a right to suppose that the part of the mortgaged property which he leaves with the mortgagor, will, in his hands, be first subjected to the payment of the mortgage he has made. To this Judge Story assents. But the principle goes further, and holds that when a second purchaser from the mortgagor buys either all or a part of the incumbered property which remains, he cannot place himself in a better position than his grantor, and revive the burden on the first purchaser's land, from which it had been wholly or partially relieved by its primary pressure on the land left by him in the hands of the mortgagor.

No very clear decision of the question seems to have been rendered in the English courts on the subject, though occasionally alluded to, until the case of Averall v. Wade, decided in the Irish Chancery by Lord Chancellor Sugden in 1835 [L. & G., 252; 10 Cond. Ch., 498], whose great authority in all that concerned titles to real estate will not be disputed. Looking to the question as governed by the doctrine of marshaling assets, he appears to decide against its application in cases like the one now before us, and refers to an opinion of Lord Eldon in [Adrick v. Cooper] 8 Vesey, 382, in which, while this point was not directly in issue, the argument of that eminent Chancellor leaned that way.

But while these latter are authorities of great weight, it is to be remembered that they were made long after the time to which this court has looked to the English chancery practice as governing ours, while the case of Sir William Harbert and Lord Hardwicke's decision were before; and that the English courts have not considered, as far as we know, the principle on which the rule is based in this country.

That principle was stated by Chancellor Kent, with his usual force and clearness, in 1821, in the case of Clowes v. Dickenson, which has become the leading case on the subject in this country. 5 Johns. Ch., 235.

After referring to the case of Sir William Harbert, he says: "This case settles the question as between the vendor and purchaser, or the heirs of the vendor and the purchaser; and if there be several purchasers in succession, at different times, I apprehend in that case, also, there is no equality and no contribution as between these purchasers. Thus, for instance, if there be a judgment against a person owning at the time three acres of land, and he sells one acre to A, the two remaining acres are first chargeable in equity with the payment of the judgment debt, as we have already seen, whether the land be in the hands of the debtor himself or of his heirs. If he sells another acre to B, the remaining acre is then chargeable in the first instance with the debt as against B, as well as against A; and if it should prove insufficient, then the acre sold to B ought to supply the deficiency in preference to the acre sold to A; because, when B purchased, he took his land chargeable with the debt in the hands of the debtor, in preference to the land already sold to A. In this respect we may say of him as it is said of the heir, he sits in the seat of his grantor, and must take it with all its equitable burdens; it cannot be in the power of the debtor, by the act of assigning or selling his remaining land, to throw the burden of the judgment or a ratable part of it back upon A." The doctrine and the reason upon which it is founded cannot be better stated than in this extract from the opinion.

We may, as an additional reason, suggest a principle often called into action in recent times in the courts, namely: that where one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss, it should fall on him who, by reasonable diligence or care, could have protected himself, rather than on him who could not. In the case supposed, the second purchaser, at the time of his purchase, knowing that the land which he buys is subject to the incumbrance before that already sold, can exact of the vendor security or protection against the incumbrance, which it is out of the power of the first vendor to do at the time his risk is increased by the very act of the second purchaser.

Since the decision in the case of Clowes v. Dickenson, the doctrine there announced has been followed by much the larger number of courts of the different States, though there are a few of very high authority which have held that as between vendees of land subject to a prior incumbrance, equality is justice, and the debt shall bear equally upon all the parcels originally subject to it, in proportion to their values.

The cases are collected in the briefs of counsel on both sides in this case, to which reference is here made as they will be given by the reporter, and in Aldrich v. Cooper, L. Cas., in Eq., Vol. II., pt. 1, p. 291, ed. of 1877.

We are of opinion that the preponderance of authority as shown by judicial decisions, as well as the weight of sound argument, is in favor of the rule laid down by Chancellor Kent, and the decree in this case is, accordingly, affirmed.

HABEAS CORPUS CASES.

EX PARTE IN THE MATTER OF AUGUSTUS F. CLARKE, Petitioner.

Election law of Congress—offense under—habeas corpus—jurisdiction.

* An officer of election, at an election for a representative to Congress in the City of Cincinnati, was convicted of a misdemeanor in the Circuit Court of the United States, under section 5515 of the Revised Statutes, for a violation of the law of Ohio, in not conveying the ballot-box, after it had been sealed up and delivered to him for that purpose, to the county clerk, and for allowing it to be broken open. Held, according to the decision in Ex parte Siebold [post], that Congress had power to pass the law under which the conviction was had, and that the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of the offense.

In such a case, a habeas corpus for discharge from imprisonment under the conviction was rightfully issued by a Justice of this court, returnable before himself; and said Justice had the right, if it could be done without injury to the prisoner, to refer the matter to this court for its determination, it being a case which involved the exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

Had the case been one involving original jurisdiction only, this court could not have taken jurisdiction of it.

[No. 6. Orig.]

Argued Oct. 23, 24, 1879. Decided Mar. 8, 1880.

PETITION for writ of habeas corpus.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Headly, Johnson & Colston and R. T. Merrick, for petitioner.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., opposed.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us on the return to a writ of habeas corpus, issued by order of one of the Justices of this court. The petition for a habeas corpus was addressed to the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, by Augustus F. Clarke, who states therein that he is a member of the City Council of Cincinnati and, as such, one of the Judges of Election of Precinct A in said City; in which capacity he acted at the state, congressional, county and municipal elections held in said City in October, 1878; that, on the 24th of October, 1878, he was indicted in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio for unlawfully neglecting to perform the duty required of him, as such judge of election, by the laws of the State of Ohio in regard to said election in this: that, having accepted one of the poll-books of said election, sealed and directed according to law, for the purpose of conveying the same to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of Hamilton County, in said State, at his office, he neglected to do so; and, in another count, that he permitted the said poll-book, sealed and directed for the purpose aforesaid, to be broken open before he conveyed the same to said clerk; that a motion to quash said indictment and a demurrer thereto having been successively overruled, he pleaded not guilty, and at the February Term, 1879, was tried and found guilty; and having unsuccessfully moved for a new trial, and in arrest of judgment, he was sentenced by said court to be imprisoned in the jail of Hamilton County for twelve months, and to pay a fine of $200 and the cost of prosecution; that, in pursuance of said sentence, he had been arrested and imprisoned, and is now imprisoned and restrained from his liberty by the Marshal of the United States for said district. The petition then asserts that the said Circuit Court had no jurisdiction in the premises, and that its acts were wholly void and his imprisonment unlawful. He, therefore, prays a habeas corpus to the said Marshal, and a certiorari to the clerk of said court, if necessary; and that he may be discharged from custody. A certified copy of the indictment, proceedings and judgment in the Circuit Court is annexed to the petition, from which it appears that the first count charged that the petitioner on the 9th of October, 1878, in the County of Hamilton, in the State of Ohio, being an officer of election at which a representative in Congress was voted for, to wit: a judge of said election at precinct A of the eighth ward of Cincinnati, and being duly appointed such judge of election under the laws of Ohio, did unlawfully neglect to perform a duty required of him by the laws of said State in regard to said election, specifying said neglect, to wit: that he neglected to convey the poll-book to the county clerk, which had been sealed up by the judges and delivered to him for that purpose; contrary to the form of the statute and against the peace and dignity of the United States. The second count charged that the petitioner, as such judge of election, violated a duty required of him by the laws of said State in regard to said election, specifying the violation, namely: that having received the poll-book in the manner and for the purpose aforesaid, he permitted it to be broken open before he conveyed it to the county clerk, contrary to the form of the statute, etc.

It is conceded that this indictment was found under section 5515 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which is in the following words: (This section is set forth in the previous [following] case of Ex parte Siebold) [post, 717].

The law of Ohio which the petitioner is charged with violating is as follows:

"(32.) Section XIX. That, after canvassing the votes in the manner aforesaid, the judges, before they disperse, shall put under cover one of the poll-books, seal the same, and direct it to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of the county wherein the return is to be made; and the poll-book, thus sealed and directed, shall be conveyed by one of the judges (to be determined by lot if they cannot agree otherwise) to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of the county, at his office, within two days from the day of the election; and the other poll-book, where the same is not otherwise disposed of by this Act, shall be deposited with the township clerk, or clerk of the election district (as the case may be), within three days from the day of election, there to remain for the use of the persons who may choose to inspect the same."

On the 31st day of July, 1879, the said petition was presented to Mr. Justice Strong, and a writ of habeas corpus was allowed by him, returnable forthwith before himself, at the Catskill Mountain House, in the State of New York. On the 11th of August, 1879, return being made, of the body of the petitioner, according to the command of the writ, with a copy of the judgment of the Circuit Court, and the warrant of commitment issued thereon, Justice Strong made an order postponing the hearing of the cause into this court, to be heard upon the second Tuesday of October, 1879 (being the first day of the present Term), and admitted the petitioner to bail in the sum of $5,000 to abide the rule of the Supreme Court in the premises.

The case was argued at the same time with the previous [following] case of Ex parte Siebold [supra]; and most of the questions involved have been considered in that case.

One question, however, has been raised by the counsel for the government which it is necessary to consider. It is objected that this court cannot proceed upon a writ of habeas corpus which was originally presented to a Justice of this court, and was postponed and referred by him to the court for its determination.

We have considered this point with some care, inasmuch as in Kaine's Case, reported in 14 How., 103, the court held that it could not act upon a writ thus referred to it by Mr. Justice Nelson. But the ground taken there was, that the writ had been issued by him in virtue of his original jurisdiction; though the court was of opinion that it could issue a new writ upon the papers before it, in virtue of its own appellate jurisdiction, and would do so if the case required it; but being of opinion that there was no case on the merits the application was discharged. But in this case, however it may have been in that, it is clear that the writ, whether acted upon by the Justice who issued it, or by this court, would in fact require a revision of the action of the Circuit Court by which the petitioner was committed, and such revision would necessarily be appellate in its character. This appellate character of the proceeding attaches to a large portion of cases on habeas corpus, whether issued by a single judge or by a court. The presence of this feature in the case was no objection to the issue of the writ by the associate Justice, and is essential to the jurisdiction of this court. The Justice who issued it could undoubtedly have disposed of the case himself, though not, at the time, within his own circuit. A Justice of this court can exercise the power of issuing the writ of habeas corpus in any part of the United States where he happens to be. But as the case is one of which this court also has jurisdiction, if the Justice who issued the writ found the questions involved to be of great moment and difficulty, and could postpone the case here for the consideration of the whole court without injury to the petitioner, we see no good reason why he should not have taken this course, as he did. It had merely the effect of making the application for a discharge one addressed to the court, instead of one addressed to a single justice. This has always been the practice of English judges in cases of great consequence and difficulty, and we do not see why it may not be done here. Under the Habeas Corpus Act, indeed, it was the regular course to take bail and recognize the party to appear in the King's Bench or Assizes; though the judge would discharge absolutely if the case was clearly one of illegal imprisonment. Hab. Corp. Act, sec. 3; Com. Dig. Hab. Corp., F; Bac Abr. Hab. Corp., B, 13; 1 Chit. Gen. Pr., 685-688. Of course, under our system, no justice will needlessly refer a case to the court when he can decide it satisfactorily to himself, and will not do so in any case in which injury will be thereby incurred by the petitioner. No injury can be complained of in this case, since the petitioner was allowed to go at large on reasonable bail.

As to the merits of the case, there can be no serious question that the indictment charges an offense specified in the Act of Congress. R. S., sec. 5515. Any defect of form in making the charge would be at most an error, of which this court could not take cognizance on habeas corpus. The principal question is, whether Congress had constitutional power to enact a law for punishing a state officer of election for the violation of his duty under a state statute in reference to an election of a representative to Congress. As this question has been fully considered in the previous [following] case, it is unnecessary to add any thing further on the subject. Our opinion is, that Congress had constitutional power to enact the law; and that the cause of commitment was lawful and sufficient.

The petitioner, therefore, must be remanded to the custody of the Marshal for the Southern District of Ohio; and it is so ordered.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Field, and Mr. Justice Clifford.

HABEAS CORPUS CASES.

Ex Parte ALBERT SIEBOLD ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 371-399; 404-422.)

Habeas Corpus—jurisdiction as to—erroneous decision—personal liberty—constitutionality of law—power of Congress—Enforcement Act—election law—officers of election—collision of jurisdiction—paramount national authority—marshals—exclusive power—state officers—supervisors of election.

*1. The appellate jurisdiction of this court, exercisable by habeas corpus, extends to a case of imprisonment upon conviction and sentence in an inferior court of the United States, under and by virtue of an unconstitutional Act of Congress, whether this court has jurisdiction to review the judgment by writ of error or not.

2. The jurisdiction of this court by habeas corpus, when not restrained by some special law, extends, generally, to imprisonment by inferior tribunals of the United States which have no jurisdiction of the cause, or whose proceedings are otherwise void and not merely erroneous; and such a case occurs when the proceedings are had under an unconstitutional Act.

3. But when the court below has jurisdiction of the cause, and the matter charged is indictable under a constitutional law, any errors committed by the inferior court can only be reviewed by writ of error.

4. Where personal liberty is concerned, the judgment of an inferior court affecting it is not so conclusive but that the question of its authority to try and imprison the party may be reviewed on habeas corpus by a superior court or judge having power to award the writ.

5. Certain Judges of Election in the City of Baltimore, appointed under state laws, were convicted in the Circuit Court of the United States, under sections 5515 and 5522 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for interfering with and resisting the Supervisors of Election and Deputy-Marshals of the United States in the performance of their duty at an election of Representatives to Congress, under sections 2016, 2017, 2021, 2022, title XXVI, of the Revised Statutes. Held, that the question of the constitutionality of said laws is good ground for this court to issue a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the legality of the imprisonment under such conviction; and if the laws are determined to be unconstitutional, the prisoner should be discharged.

6. Congress had power by the Constitution to pass the sections referred to, viz.: section 5515 of the Revised Statutes, which makes it a penal offense against the United States for any officer of election, at an election held for a Representative in Congress, to neglect to perform, or to violate, any duty in regard to such election, whether required by a law of the State or of the United States, or knowingly to do any act unauthorized by any such law, with intent to affect such election, or to make a fraudulent certificate of the result, etc.; and section 5522, which makes it a penal offense for any officer or other person, with or without process, to obstruct, hinder, bribe or interfere with a Supervisor of Election or Marshal or Deputy-Marshal, in the performance of any duty required of them by any law of the United States, or to prevent their free attendance at the places of registration or election, etc.; also, sections 2011, 2012, 2016, 2017, 2021, 2022, title XXVI, of the Revised Statutes, which authorize the circuit courts to appoint supervisors of such elections, and the marshal to appoint special deputies to aid and assist them, and which prescribe the duties of such Supervisors and Deputy-Marshals, these being the laws provided by Congress in the Enforcement Act of May 31, 1870, and the supplement thereto of February 28, 1871, for supervising the elections of Representatives, and for preventing frauds therein.

7. The circuit courts have jurisdiction of indictments under these laws, and a conviction and sentence in pursuance thereof is lawful cause of imprisonment, from which this court has no power to relieve on habeas corpus.

8. In making regulations for the election of Representatives, it is not necessary that Congress should assume entire and exclusive control thereof. By virtue of that clause of the Constitution which declares that "The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators," Congress has a supervisory power over the subject, and may either make entirely new regulations, or add to, alter or modify the regulations made by the State.

9. In the exercise of such supervisory power, Congress may impose new duties on the officers of election, or additional penalties for breach of duty or for the perpetration of fraud; or provide for the attendance of officers to prevent frauds and see that the elections are legally and fairly conducted.

10. The exercise of such power can properly cause no collision of regulations or jurisdiction, because the authority of Congress over the subject is paramount, and any regulations it may make necessarily supersede inconsistent regulations of the State. This is involved in the power to "make or alter."

11. There is nothing in the relation of the state and the national sovereignties to preclude the co-operation of both in the matter of elections of Representatives. If both were equal in authority over the subject, collisions of jurisdiction might ensue; but the authority of the National Government being paramount, collisions can only occur from unfounded jealousy of such authority.

12. Congress had power by the Constitution to vest in the circuit courts the appointment of Supervisors of Election. It is expressly declared that "Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments." Whilst, as a question of propriety, the appointment of officers whose duties appertain to one department ought not to be lodged in another, the matter is, nevertheless, left to the discretion of Congress.

13. The provision which authorizes the Deputy-Marshals to keep the peace at the elections is not unconstitutional. The National Government has the right to use physical force in any part of the United States to compel obedience to its laws, and to carry into execution the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.

14. The concurrent jurisdiction of the National Government with that of the States, which it has in the exercise of its powers of sovereignty in every part of the United States, is distinct from that exclusive jurisdiction which it has by the Constitution in the District of Columbia, and in those places acquired for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, etc.

15. The provisions adopted for compelling the state officers of election to observe the state laws regulating elections of Representatives, not altered by Congress, are within the supervisory powers of Congress over such elections. The duties to be performed in this behalf are owed to the United States as well as to the State; and their violation is an offense against the United States which Congress may rightfully inhibit and punish. This, necessarily, follows from the direct interest which the National Government has in the due election of its Representatives and from the power which the Constitution gives to Congress over this particular subject.

[No. 7 Orig.]

Argued Oct. 24, 1879. Decided Mar. 8, 1880.

PETITION for writ of habeas corpus to John M. McClintock, the Marshal of the United States for the District of Maryland, and to James H. Irvin, Warden of the Jail of the City of Baltimore, and for certiorari to the Circuit Court of the United States for said District.

The case is further stated by the court.

Messrs. Hoadly, Johnson and Colston and Chas. J. M. Gwinn, for petitioners.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty. Gen., contra.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioners in this case were Judges of Election at different voting precincts in the City of Baltimore, at the election held in that city, and in the State of Maryland, on the 5th day of November, 1878, at which Representatives to the 46th Congress were voted for.

At the November Term of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, an indictment against each of the petitioners was found in said court, for offenses alleged to have been committed by them respectively at their respective precincts whilst being such Judges of Election; upon which indictments they were severally tried, convicted and sentenced by said court to fine and imprisonment. They now apply to this court for a writ of habeas corpus to be relieved from imprisonment.

Before making this application, each petitioner, in the month of September last, presented a separate petition to the Chief Justice of this court (within whose circuit Baltimore is situated), at Lynn, in the State of Connecticut, where he then was, praying for a like habeas corpus to be relieved from the same imprisonment. The Chief Justice thereupon made an order that the said Marshal and Warden should show cause, before him, on the second Tuesday of October, in the City of Washington, why such writs should not issue. That being the first day of the present Term of this court, at the instance of the Chief Justice the present application was made to the court by a new petition addressed thereto, and the petitions and papers which had been presented to the Chief Justice were, by consent, made a part of the case. The records of the several indictments and proceedings thereon were annexed to the respective original petitions, and are before us. These indictments were framed partly under section 5515 and partly under section 5522 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and the principal questions raised by the application are, whether those sections, and certain sections of the title of the Revised Statutes relating to the elective franchise, which they are intended to enforce, are within the constitutional power of Congress to enact. If they are not, then it is contended that the circuit court has no jurisdiction of the cases, and that the convictions and sentences of imprisonment of the several petitioners were illegal and void.

The jurisdiction of this court to hear the case is the first point to be examined. The question is, whether a party imprisoned under a sentence of a United States Court, upon conviction of a crime created by and indictable under an unconstitutional Act of Congress, may be discharged from imprisonment by this court on habeas corpus, although it has no appellate jurisdiction by writ of error over the judgment. It is objected that the case is one of original and not appellate jurisdiction and, therefore, not within the jurisdiction of this court. But we are clearly of opinion that it is appellate in its character. It requires us to revise the act of the circuit court in making the warrants of commitment upon the convictions referred to. This, according to all the decisions, is an exercise of appellate power. Ex parte Burford, 3 Cranch, 448; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 100, 101; Ex parte Yerger, 8 Wall., 98 [75 U. S., XIX., 336].

That this court is authorized to exercise appellate jurisdiction by habeas corpus directly is a position sustained by abundant authority. It has general power to issue the writ, subject to the constitutional limitations of its jurisdiction, which are, that it can only exercise original jurisdiction in cases affecting ambassadors, public ministers and consuls, and cases in which a State is a party; but has appellate jurisdiction in all other cases of federal cognizance, "With such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make." Having this general power to issue the writ, the court may issue it in the exercise of original jurisdiction where it has original jurisdiction; and may issue it in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction where it has such jurisdiction, which is in all cases not prohibited by law except those in which it has original jurisdiction only. Ex parte Bollman [supra]; Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 202; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet., 568; Ex parte Wells, 18 How., 307, 328 [59 U. S., XV., 421, 431]; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How., 506 [62 U. S., XVI., 169]; Ex parte Yerger, 8 Wall., 85 [75 U. S., XIX., 332].

There are other limitations of the jurisdiction, however, arising from the nature and objects of the writ itself, as defined by the common law, from which its name and incidents are derived. It cannot be used as a mere writ of error. Mere error in the judgment or proceedings, under and by virtue of which a party is imprisoned, constitutes no ground for the issue of the writ. Hence, upon a return to a habeas corpus, that the prisoner is detained under a conviction and sentence by a court having jurisdiction of the cause, the general rule is, that he will be instantly remanded. No inquiry will be instituted into the regularity of the proceedings, unless, perhaps, where the court has cognizance by writ of error or appeal to review the judgment. In such a case, if the error be apparent and the imprisonment unjust, the appellate court may, perhaps, in its discretion, give immediate relief on habeas corpus, and thus save the party the delay and expense of a writ of error. Bac. Abr. Hab. Corp., B, 13; Bethell's Case, Salk., 348; 5 Mod., 19. But the general rule is, that a conviction and sentence by a court of competent jurisdiction is lawful cause of imprisonment, and no relief can be given by habeas corpus.

The only ground on which this court, or any court, without some special statute authorizing it, will give relief on habeas corpus to a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court is the want of jurisdiction in such court over the person or the cause, or some other matter rendering its proceedings void.

This distinction between an erroneous judgment and one that is illegal or void is well illustrated by the two cases of Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall., 163 [85 U. S., XXI., 872], and Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S., 18 [XXIII., 787]. In the former case, we held that the judgment was void, and released the petitioner accordingly; in the latter, we held that the judgment, whether erroneous or not, was not void, because the court had jurisdiction of the cause; and we refused to interfere.

Chief Justice Abbott, in Rev v. Suddis, 1 East, 306, said: "It is a general rule that, where a person has been committed under the judgment of another court of competent criminal jurisdiction, this court (the King's Bench) cannot review the sentence upon a return to a habeas corpus. In such cases, this court is not a court of appeal."

It is stated, however, in Bacon's Abridgment, probably in the words of Chief Baron Gilbert, that, "If the commitment be against law, as being made by one who had no jurisdiction of the cause, or for a matter for which by law no man ought to be punished, the court are to discharge." Bac. Abr. Hab. Corp., B, 10. The latter part of this rule, when applied to imprisonment under conviction and sentence, is confined to cases of clear and manifest want of criminality in the matter charged, such as in effect to render the proceedings void. The authority usually cited under this head is Bushel's Case, decided in 1670. There, twelve jurymen had been convicted in the Oyer and Terminer for rendering a verdict (against the charge of the court) acquitting William Penn and others, who were charged with meeting in conventicle. Being imprisoned for refusing to pay their fines, they applied to the Court of Common Pleas for a habeas corpus; and though the court, having no jurisdiction in criminal matters, hesitated to grant the writ, yet, having granted it, they discharged the prisoners, on the ground that their conviction was void, inasmuch as jurymen cannot be indicted for rendering any verdict they choose. The opinion of Chief Justice Vaughan in the case has rarely been excelled for judicial eloquence. Bushel's Case, T. Jones, 13; S. C., Vaughan, 135; S. C., 6 Howell, St. Tr., 999.

Without attempting to decide how far this case may be regarded as law for the guidance of this court, we are clearly of opinion that the question raised in the cases before us is proper for consideration on habeas corpus. The validity of the judgment is assailed on the ground that the Acts of Congress under which the indictments were found are unconstitutional. If this position is well taken, it affects the foundation of the whole proceedings. An unconstitutional law is void, and is as no law. An offense created by it is not a crime. A conviction under it is not merely erroneous, but is illegal and void, and cannot be a legal cause of imprisonment. It is true, if no writ of error lies, the judgment may be final, in the sense that there may be no means of reversing it. But personal liberty is of so great moment in the eye of the law that the judgment of an inferior court affecting it is not deemed so conclusive but that, as we have seen, the question of the court's authority to try and imprison the party may be reviewed on habeas corpus by a superior court or judge having authority to award the writ. We are satisfied that the present is one of the cases in which this court is authorized to take such jurisdiction. We think so, because, if the laws are unconstitutional and void, the circuit court acquired no jurisdiction of the causes. Its authority to indict and try the petitioners arose solely upon these laws.

We proceed, therefore, to examine the cases on their merits.

The indictments commence with an introductory statement that, on the 5th of November, 1878, at the Fourth [or other] Congressional District of the State of Maryland, a lawful election was held, whereat a Representative for that congressional district in the 46th Congress of the United States was voted for; that a certain person [naming him] was then and there a supervisor of election of the United States, duly appointed by the circuit court aforesaid, pursuant to the section 2012th of the Revised Statutes, for the third [or other] voting precinct of the fifteenth [or other] ward of the City of Baltimore, in the said congressional district, for and in respect of the election aforesaid, thereat; that a certain person [naming him] was then and there a special Deputy-Marshall of the United States, duly appointed by the United States Marshal for the Maryland district, pursuant to section 2021 of the Revised Statutes, and assigned for such duty as is provided by that and the following section, to the said precinct of said ward of said city, at the congressional election aforesaid, thereat. Then come the various counts.

The petitioner, Bowers, was convicted on the second count of the indictment against him, which was as follows:

"That the said Henry Bowers, afterwards, to wit: on the day and year aforesaid, at the said voting precinct within the district aforesaid, unlawfully did obstruct, hinder and, by the use of his power and authority as such Judge as aforesaid (which Judge he then and there was), interfere with and prevent the said supervisor of election in the performance of a certain duty in respect to said election required of him, and which he was then and there authorized to perform by the law of the United States, in such case made and provided, to wit: that of personally inspecting and scrutinizing, at the beginning of said day of election, and of the said election, the manner in which the voting was done at the said poll of election, by examining and seeing whether the ballot first voted at said poll of election was put and placed in a ballot-box containing no ballots whatever, contrary to the 5522nd section of said statutes, and against the peace, government and dignity of the United States."

Tucker, who was indicted jointly with one Gude, was convicted upon the second and fifth counts of the indictment against them, which were as follows:

"(2.) That the said Justus J. Gude and the said Walter Tucker afterwards, to wit: on the day and year aforesaid, at the said voting precinct of said ward of said city, unlawfully and by exercise of their power and authority as such Judges as aforesaid, did prevent and hinder the free attendance and presence of the said James N. Schofield (who was then and there such Deputy-Marshall as aforesaid, in the due execution of his said office), at the poll of said election of and for the said voting precinct, and the full and free access of the same Deputy-Marshall to the same poll of election, contrary to the said last mentioned section of said statutes (sec. 5522), and against the peace, government and dignity of the United States.

(5.) That the said Justus J. Gude and the said Walter Tucker, on the day and year aforesaid, at the precinct aforesaid, within the district aforesaid (they being then and there such officers of said election as aforesaid), knowingly and unlawfully at the said election did a certain act, not then and there authorized by any law of the State of Maryland, and not authorized then and there by any law of the United States, by then and there fraudulently and clandestinely putting and placing in the ballot-box of the said precinct twenty (and more) ballots (within the intent and meaning of section 5514 of said statutes), which had not been voted at said election in said precinct before the ballots, then and there lawfully deposited in the same ballot-box, had been counted, with intent thereby to affect said election and the result thereof, contrary to section 5515 of said statutes, and against the peace, government and dignity of the United States."

This charge, it will be observed, is for the offense commonly known as "stuffing the ballot-box."

The counts on which the petitioners, Burns and Coleman, were convicted were similar to those above specified. Burns was charged with refusing to allow the supervisor of elections to inspect the ballot-box, or even to enter the room where the polls were held, and with violently resisting the Deputy-Marshall who attempted to arrest him, as required by section 2022 of the Revised Statutes. The charges against Coleman were similar to those against Burns, with the addition of a charge for stuffing the ballot-box. Siebold was only convicted on one count of the indictment against him, which was likewise a charge of stuffing the ballot-box.

The sections of the law on which these indictments are founded, and the validity of which is sought to be impeached for unconstitutionality, are summed up by the counsel of the petitioners in their brief as follows (omitting the comments thereon):

The counsel say:

"These cases involve the question of the constitutionality of certain sections of title XXVI., of the Revised Statutes, entitled 'The Elective Franchise.'

Section 2011. The Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States, wherein any city or town having upwards of twenty thousand inhabitants is situated, upon being informed by two citizens thereof, prior to any registration of voters for, or any election at which a representative or delegate in Congress is to be voted for, that it is their desire to have such registration or election guarded and scrutinized, shall open the circuit court at the most convenient point in the circuit.

Section 2012. The judge shall appoint two supervisors of election for every election district in such city or town.

Section 2016. The supervisors are authorized and required to attend all times and places fixed for registration of voters; to challenge such as they deem proper; to cause such names to be registered as they may think proper to be so marked; to inspect and scrutinize such register of voters; and for purposes of identification to affix their signatures to each page of the original list.

Section 2017. The supervisors are required to attend the times and places for holding elections of representatives or delegates in Congress, and of counting the votes cast; to challenge any vote, the legality of which they may doubt; to be present continually where the ballot-boxes are kept, until every vote cast has been counted, and the proper returns made, required under any law of the United States, or any state, territorial or municipal law; and to personally inspect and scrutinize at any and all times, on the day of election, the manner in which the poll books, registry lists and tallies are kept; whether the same are required by any law of the United States, or any state, territorial or municipal laws.

Section 2021 requires the Marshal, whenever any election at which representatives or delegates in Congress are to be chosen, upon application by two citizens in cities or towns of more than twenty thousand inhabitants, to appoint special deputy-marshals, whose duty it shall be to aid and assist the supervisors in the discharge of their duties, and attend with them at all registrations of voters or election at which representatives to Congress may be voted for.

Section 2022 requires the Marshal, and his general and special deputies, to keep the peace and protect the supervisors in the discharge of their duties; preserve order at such place of registration and at such polls; prevent fraudulent registration and voting, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately to arrest any person who commits, or attempts to commit, any of the offenses prohibited herein, or any offense against the laws of the United States."

The counsel then refer to and summarize sections 5514, 5515 and 5522 of the Revised Statutes. Section 5514 merely relates to a question of evidence, and need not be copied. Sections 5515 and 5522, being those upon which the indictments are directly framed, are proper to be set out in full. They are as follows:

"Section 5515. Every officer of an election at which any representative or delegate in Congress is voted for, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, territorial, district or municipal law or authority, who neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election, required of him by any law of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof; or who violates any duty so imposed; or who knowingly does any acts thereby unauthorized, with intent to affect any such election, or the result thereof; or who fraudulently makes any false certificate of the result of such election in regard to such representative or delegate; or who withholds, conceals or destroys any certificate of record so required by law respecting the election of any such representative or delegate; or who neglects or refuses to make and return such certificate as required by law; or who aids, counsels, procures or advises any voter, person or officer to do any act by this or any of the preceding sections made a crime, or to omit to do any duty the omission of which is by this or any of such sections made a crime, or attempts to do so, shall be punished as prescribed in section 5511.

Section 5522. Every person, whether with or without any authority, power or process, or pretended authority, power or process, of any State, Territory or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation or otherwise interferes with or prevents the supervisors of election, or either of them, or the Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, or which he or they, or either of them, may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, in the execution of process or otherwise, or who, by any of the means before mentioned, hinders or prevents the free attendance and presence at such places of registration; or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election; or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any room, where any such registration or election or canvass of votes or of making any returns or certificates thereof, may be had; or who molests, interferes with, removes or ejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat; or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them; or who threatens, or attempts, or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor of election, or the Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them, or either of them, to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of the prosecution."

These portions of the Revised Statutes are taken from the Act commonly known as the Enforcement Act, approved May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 140, and entitled "An Act to Enforce the Right of Citizens of the United States to Vote in the Several States of this Union, and for Other Purposes;" and from the supplement of that Act, approved February 28, 1871, 16 Stat. at L., 433. They relate to elections of members of the House of Representatives, and were an assertion, on the part of Congress, of a power to pass laws for regulating and superintending said elections, and for securing the purity thereof, and the rights of citizens to vote thereat peaceably and without molestation. It must be conceded to be a most important power, and of a fundamental character. In the light of recent history and of the violence, fraud, corruption and irregularity which have frequently prevailed at such elections, it may easily be conceived that the exertion of the power, if it exists, may be necessary to the stability of our frame of government.

The counsel for the petitioners, however, do not deny that Congress may, if it chooses, assume the entire regulation of the elections of

See 10 OTTO.

Representatives; but they contend that it has no constitutional power to make partial regulations intended to be carried out in conjunction with regulations made by the States.

The general positions contended for by the counsel of the petitioners are thus stated in their brief:

"We shall attempt to establish these propositions:

1. That the power to make regulations as to the times, places and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress, granted to Congress by the Constitution, is an exclusive power when exercised by Congress.

2. That this power, when so exercised, being exclusive of all interference therein by the States, must be so exercised as not to interfere with or come in collision with regulations presented in that behalf by the States, unless it provides for the complete control over the whole subject over which it is exercised.

3. That, when put in operation by Congress, it must take the place of all state regulations of the subject regulated, which subject must be entirely and completely controlled and provided for by Congress."

We are unable to see why it necessarily follows that, if Congress makes any regulations on the subject, it must assume exclusive control of the whole subject. The Constitution does not say so.

The clause of the Constitution under which the power of Congress, as well as that of the State Legislatures, to regulate the election of Senators and Representatives arises, is as follows: "The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators."

It seems to us that the natural sense of these words is the contrary of that assumed by the counsel of the petitioners. After first authorizing the States to prescribe the regulations, it is added: "The Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations." "Make or alter." What is the plain meaning of these words? If not under the prepossession of some abstract theory of the relations between the State and National Governments, we should not have any difficulty in understanding them. There is no declaration that the regulations shall be made either wholly by the State Legislatures or wholly by Congress. If Congress does not interfere, of course they may be made wholly by the State; but if it chooses to interfere, there is nothing in the words to prevent its doing so, either wholly or partially. On the contrary, their necessary implication is that it may do either. It may either make the regulations, or it may alter them. If it only alters, leaving, as manifest convenience requires, the general organization of the polls to the State, there results a necessary co-operation of the two governments in regulating the subject. But no repugnance in the system of regulations can arise thence; for the power of Congress over the subject is paramount. It may be exercised as and when Congress sees fit to exercise it. When exercised, the action of Congress, so far as it extends and conflicts with the regulations of the State, necessarily supersedes them. This is implied in the power to "make or alter."

Suppose the Constitution of a State should say: "The first Legislature elected under this Constitution may, by law, regulate the election of members of the two Houses; but any subsequent Legislature may make or alter such regulations," could not a subsequent Legislature modify the regulations made by the first Legislature without making an entirely new set? Would it be obliged to go over the whole subject anew? Manifestly not; it could alter or modify, add or subtract, in its discretion. The greater power, of making wholly new regulations, would include the lesser, of only altering or modifying the old. The new law, if contrary or repugnant to the old, would, so far and so far only, take its place. If consistent with it, both would stand. The objection, so often repeated, that such an application of congressional regulations to those previously made by a State would produce a clashing of jurisdictions and a conflict of rules, loses sight of the fact that the regulations made by Congress are paramount to those made by the State Legislature; and if they conflict therewith, the latter, so far as the conflict extends, ceases to be operative. No clashing can possibly arise. There is not the slightest difficulty in a harmonious combination into one system of the regulations made by the two sovereignties, any more than there is in the case of prior and subsequent enactments of the same Legislature.

Congress has partially regulated the subject heretofore. In 1842 it passed a law for the election of Representatives by separate districts; and, subsequently, other laws fixing the time of election, and directing that the elections shall be by ballot. No one will pretend, at least at the present day, that these laws were unconstitutional because they only partially covered the subject.

The peculiarity of the case consists in the concurrent authority of the two sovereignties, state and national, over the same subject-matter. This, however, is not entirely without a parallel. The regulation of foreign and interstate commerce is conferred by the Constitution upon Congress. It is not expressly taken away from the States. But where the subject-matter is one of a national character, or one that requires a uniform rule, it has been held that the power of Congress is exclusive. On the contrary, where neither of these circumstances exist, it has been held that state regulations are not unconstitutional. In the absence of congressional regulation, which would be of paramount authority when adopted, they are valid and binding. This subject was largely discussed in the case of Cooley v. Port Wardens, 12 How., 299. That was a case of pilotage. In 1789, 1 Stat. at L., 53, Congress had passed a law declaring that all pilots should continue to be regulated in conformity with the laws of the States respectively wherein they should be. Hence, each State continued to administer its own laws, or passed new laws for the regulation of pilots in its harbors. Pennsylvania passed the law then in question in 1803. Yet the Supreme Court held that this was clearly a regulation of commerce; and that the state laws could not be upheld without supposing that, in cases like that of pilotage, not requiring a national and uniform regulation, the power of the States to make regulations of commerce, in the absence of congressional regulation, still remained. The court held that the power did so remain, subject to those qualifications; and the state law was sustained under that view.

Here, then, is a case of concurrent authority of the State and National Governments, in which that of the latter is paramount. In 1837, Congress interfered with the state regulations on the subject of pilotage, so far as to authorize the pilots of adjoining States, separated only by navigable waters, to pilot ships and vessels into the ports of either State located on such waters. It has since made various regulations respecting pilots taking charge of steam vessels, imposing upon them peculiar duties and requiring of them peculiar qualifications. It seems to us that there can be no doubt of the power of Congress to impose any regulations it sees fit upon pilots, and to subject them to such penalties for breach of duty as it may deem expedient. The States continue, in the exercise of the power, to regulate pilotage subject to the paramount right of the National Government. If dissatisfied with congressional interference, should such interference at any time be imposed, any State might, if it chose, withdraw its regulations altogether, and leave the whole subject to be regulated by Congress. But so long as it continues its pilotage system, it must acquiesce in such additional regulations as Congress may see fit to make.

So in the case of laws for regulating the elections of Representatives to Congress. The State may make regulations on the subject; Congress may make regulations on the same subject, or may alter or add to those already made. The paramount character of those made by Congress has the effect to supersede those made by the State, so far as the two are inconsistent, and no further. There is no such conflict between them as to prevent their forming a harmonious system perfectly capable of being administered and carried out as such.

As to the supposed conflict that may arise between the officers appointed by the State and National Governments for superintending the election, no more insuperable difficulty need arise than in the application of the regulations adopted by each respectively. The regulations of Congress being constitutionally paramount, the duties imposed thereby upon the officers of the United States, so far as they have respect to the same matters, must necessarily be paramount to those to be performed by the officers of the State. If both cannot be performed, the latter are pro tanto superseded and cease to be duties. If the power of Congress over the subject is supervisory and paramount, as we have seen it to be, and if officers or agents are created for carrying out its regulations, it follows as a necessary consequence that such officers and agents must have the requisite authority to act without obstruction or interference from the officers of the State. No greater subordination, in kind or degree, exists in this case than in any other. It exists to the same extent between the different officers appointed by the State, when the State alone regulates the election. One officer cannot interfere with the duties of another, or obstruct or hinder him in the performance of them. Where there is a disposition to act harmoniously, there is no danger of disturbance between those who have different duties to perform. When the rightful authority of the General Government is once conceded and acquiesced in, the apprehended difficulties will disappear. Let a spirit of national as well as local patriotism once prevail; let unfounded jealousies cease, and we shall hear no more about the impossibility of harmonious action between the National and State Governments in a matter in which they have a mutual interest.

As to the supposed incompatibility of independent sanctions and punishments imposed by the two governments, for the enforcement of the duties required of the officers of election, and for their protection in the performance of those duties, the same considerations apply. While the State will retain the power of enforcing such of its own regulations as are not superseded by those adopted by Congress, it cannot be disputed that if Congress has power to make regulations it must have the power to enforce them, not only by punishing the delinquency of officers appointed by the United States, but by restraining and punishing those who attempt to interfere with them in the performance of their duties; and if, as we have shown, Congress may revise existing regulations, and add to or alter the same as far as it deems expedient, there can be as little question that it may impose additional penalties for the prevention of frauds committed by the state officers in the elections, or for their violation of any duty relating thereto, whether arising from the common law or from any other law, state or national. Why not? Penalties for fraud and delinquency are part of the regulations belonging to the subject. If Congress, by its power to make or alter the regulations, has a general supervisory power over the whole subject, what is there to preclude it from imposing additional sanctions and penalties to prevent such fraud and delinquency?

It is objected that Congress has no power to enforce state laws or to punish state officers, and especially has no power to punish them for violating the laws of their own State. As a general proposition this is, undoubtedly, true; but when, in the performance of their functions, state officers are called upon to fulfill duties which they owe to the United States as well as to the State, has the former no means of compelling such fulfillment? Yet that is the case here. It is the duty of the States to elect Representatives to Congress. The due and fair election of these Representatives is of vital importance to the United States. The Government of the United States is no less concerned in the transaction than the State Government is. It certainly is not bound to stand by as a passive spectator, when duties are violated and outrageous frauds are committed. It is directly interested in the faithful performance, by the officers of election, of their respective duties. Those duties are owed as well to the United States as to the State. This necessarily follows from the mixed character of the transaction, state and national. A violation of duty is an offense against the United States, for which the offender is justly amenable to that government. No official position can shelter him from this responsibility. In view of the fact that Congress has plenary and paramount jurisdiction over the whole subject, it seems almost absurd to say that an officer who receives or has custody of the ballots given for a Representative owes no duty to the National Government which Congress can enforce; or that an officer who stuffs the ballot-box cannot be made amenable to the United States. If Congress has not, prior to the passage of the present laws, imposed any penalties to prevent and punish frauds and violations of duty committed by officers of election, it has been because the exigency has not been deemed sufficient to require it, and not because Congress had not the requisite power.

The objection that the laws and regulations, the violation of which is made punishable by the Acts of Congress, are state laws and have not been adopted by Congress, is no sufficient answer to the power of Congress to impose punishment. It is true that Congress has not deemed it necessary to interfere with the duties of the ordinary officers of election, but has been content to leave them as prescribed by state laws. It has only created additional sanctions for their performance, and provided means of supervision in order more effectually to secure such performance. The imposition of punishment implies a prohibition of the act punished. The state laws which Congress sees no occasion to alter, but which it allows to stand, are in effect adopted by Congress. It simply demands their fulfillment. Content to leave the laws as they are, it is not content with the means provided for their enforcement. It provides additional means for that purpose; and we think it is entirely within its constitutional power to do so. It is simply the exercise of the power to make additional regulations.

That the duties devolved on the officers of election are duties which they owe to the United States as well as to the State, is further evinced by the fact that they have always been so regarded by the House of Representatives itself. In most cases of contested elections, the conduct of these officers is examined and scrutinized by that body as a matter of right; and their failure to perform their duties is often made the ground of decision. Their conduct is justly regarded as subject to the fullest exposure; and the right to examine them personally, and to inspect all their proceedings and papers, has always been maintained. This could not be done, if the officers were amenable only to the supervision of the State Government which appointed them.

Another objection made, is, that if Congress can impose penalties for violation of state laws, the officer will be made liable to double punishment for delinquency, at the suit of the State and at the suit of the United States. But the answer to this is, that each government punishes for violation of duty to itself only. Where a person owes a duty to two sovereigns, he is amenable to both for its performance; and either may call him to account. Whether punishment inflicted by one can be pleaded in bar to a charge by the other for the same identical act, need not now be decided, although considerable discussion bearing upon the subject has taken place in this court, tending to the conclusion that such a plea cannot be sustained.

In reference to a conviction under a state law for passing counterfeit coin, which was sought to be reversed on the ground that Congress had jurisdiction over that subject, and might inflict punishment for the same offense, Mr. Justice Daniel, speaking for the court, said: "It is almost certain that, in the benignant spirit in which the institutions, both of the state and federal systems, are administered, an offender who should have suffered the penalties denounced by the one would not be subjected a second time to punishment by the other, for acts essentially the same, unless, indeed, this might occur in instances of peculiar enormity, or where the public safety demanded extraordinary rigor. But, were a contrary course of policy or action either probable or usual, this would by no means justify the conclusion that offenses falling within the competency of different authorities to restrain or punish them would not properly be subjected to the consequences which those authorities might ordain and affix to their perpetration." Fox v. Ohio, 5 How., 410. The same Judge, delivering the opinion of the court in the case of U. S. v. Marigold, 9 How., 569, where a conviction was had under an Act of Congress for bringing counterfeit coin into the country, said, in reference to Fox's Case: "With the view of avoiding conflict between the state and federal jurisdictions, this court, in the case of Fox v. Ohio, have taken care to point out that the same act might, as to its character and tendencies, and the consequences it involved, constitute an offense against both the State and Federal Governments, and might draw to its commission the penalties denounced by either, as appropriate to its character in reference to each. We hold this distinction sound;" and the conviction was sustained. The subject came up again for discussion in the case of Moore v. People of Ill., 14 How., 13, in which the plaintiff in error had been convicted, under a state law, for harboring and secreting a negro slave, which was contended to be properly an offense against the United States under the Fugitive Slave Law of 1793, 1 Stat. at L., 302, and not an offense against the State. The objection of double punishment was again raised. Mr. Justice Grier, for the court, said: "Every citizen of the United States is also a citizen of a State or Territory. He may be said to owe allegiance to two sovereigns, and may be liable to punishment for an infraction of the laws of either. The same act may be an offense or transgression of the laws of both." Substantially the same views are expressed in U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542 [XXIII., 588], referring to these cases; and we do not well see how the doctrine they contain can be controverted. A variety of instances may be readily suggested, in which it would be necessary or proper to apply it. Suppose, for example, a State Judge having power under the naturalization laws to admit aliens to citizenship should utter false certificates of naturalization, can it be doubted that he could be indicted under the Act of Congress providing penalties for that offense, even though he might also, under the state laws, be indictable for forgery as well as liable to impeachment? So, if Congress, as it might, should pass a law fixing the standard of weights and measures, and imposing a penalty for sealing false weights and false measures, but leaving to the States the matter of inspecting and sealing those used by the people, would not an offender, filling the office of sealer under a state law, be amenable to the United States as well as to the State?

If the officers of election, in elections for Representatives, owe a duty to the United States, and are amenable to that government as well as to the State, as we think they are, then, according to the cases just cited, there is no reason why each should not establish sanctions for the performance of the duty owed to itself, though referring to the same act.

To maintain the contrary proposition, the case of Ky. v. Dennison, 24 How., 66 [65 U. S., XVI., 717], is confidently relied on by the petitioners' counsel. But there, Congress had imposed a duty upon the Governor of the State which it had no authority to impose. The enforcement of the clause in the Constitution, requiring the delivery of fugitives from service, was held to belong to the Government of the United States, to be effected by its own agents; and Congress had no authority to require the Governor of a State to execute this duty.

We have thus gone over the principal reasons of a special character relied on by the petitioners for maintaining the general proposition for which they contend, namely: that in the regulation of elections for representatives the National and State Governments cannot co-operate, but must act exclusively of each other; so that, if Congress assumes to regulate the subject at all, it must assume exclusive control of the whole subject. The more general reason assigned, to wit: that the nature of sovereignty is such as to preclude the joint co-operation of two sovereigns, even in a matter in which they are mutually concerned, is not, in our judgment, of sufficient force to prevent concurrent and harmonious action on the part of the National and State Governments in the election of Representatives. It is at most an argument ab inconvenienti. There is nothing in the Constitution to forbid such co-operation in this case. On the contrary, as already said, we think it clear that the clause of the Constitution relating to the regulation of such elections contemplates such co-operation whenever Congress deems it expedient to interfere merely to alter or add to existing regulations of the State. If the two governments had an entire equality of jurisdiction, there might be an intrinsic difficulty in such co-operation. Then the adoption by the State Government of a system of regulations might exclude the action of Congress. By first taking jurisdiction of the subject, the State would acquire exclusive jurisdiction in virtue of a well known principle applicable to courts having co-ordinate jurisdiction over the same matter. But no such equality exists in the present case. The power of Congress, as we have seen, is paramount, and may be exercised at any time and to any extent which it deems expedient; and, so far as it is exercised and no further, the regulations effected supersede those of the State which are inconsistent therewith.

As a general rule, it is no doubt expedient and wise that the operations of the State and National Governments should, as far as practicable, be conducted separately, in order to avoid undue jealousies and jars and conflicts of jurisdiction and power. But there is no reason for laying this down as a rule of universal application. It should never be made to override the plain and manifest dictates of the Constitution itself. We cannot yield to such a transcendental view of state sovereignty. The Constitution and laws of the United States are the supreme law of the land, and to these every citizen of every State owes obedience, whether in his individual or official capacity. There are very few subjects, it is true, in which our system of government, complicated as it is, requires or gives room for conjoint action between the state and national sovereignties. Generally, the powers given by the Constitution to the Government of the United States are given over distinct branches of sovereignty from which the State Governments, either expressly or by necessary implication, are excluded. But in this case, expressly, and in some others, by implication, as we have seen in the case of pilotage, a concurrent jurisdiction is contemplated; that of the State, however, being subordinate to that of the United States, whereby all question of precedency is eliminated.

In what we have said, it must be remembered that we are dealing only with the subject of elections of Representatives to Congress. If for its own convenience a State sees fit to elect state and county officers at the same time and in conjunction with the election of Representatives, Congress will not be thereby deprived of the right to make regulations in reference to the latter. We do not mean to say, however, that for any acts of the officers of election, having exclusive reference to the election of state or county officers, they will be amenable to federal jurisdiction; nor do we understand that the enactments of Congress now under consideration have any application to such acts.

It must also be remembered that we are dealing with the question of power, not of the expediency of any regulations which Congress has made. That is not within the pale of our jurisdiction. In exercising the power, however, we are bound to presume that Congress has done so in a judicious manner; that it has endeavored to guard as far as possible against any unnecessary interference with state laws and regulations, with the duties of state officers, or with local prejudices. It could not act at all so as to accomplish any beneficial object in preventing frauds and violence, and securing the faithful performance of duty at the elections, without providing for the presence of officers and agents to carry its regulations into effect. It is also difficult to see how it could attain these objects without imposing proper sanctions and penalties against offenders.

The views we have expressed seem to us to be founded on such plain and practical principles as hardly to need any labored argument in their support. We may mystify anything. But if we take a plain view of the words of the Constitution, and give to them a fair and obvious interpretation, we cannot fail in most cases of coming to a clear understanding of its meaning. We shall not have far to seek. We shall find it on the surface, and not in the profound depths of speculation.

The greatest difficulty in coming to a just conclusion arises from mistaken notions with regard to the relations which subsist between the State and National Governments. It seems to be often overlooked that a National Constitution has been adopted in this country, establishing a real government therein, operating upon persons and territory and things; and which, moreover, is, or should be, as dear to every American citizen as his State Government is. Whenever the true conception of the nature of this Government is once conceded, no real difficulty will arise in the just interpretation of its powers. But if we allow ourselves to regard it as a hostile organization, opposed to the proper sovereignty and dignity of the State Governments, we shall continue to be vexed with difficulties as to its jurisdiction and authority. No greater jealousy is required to be exercised towards this government in reference to the preservation of our liberties, than is proper to be exercised towards the State Governments. Its powers are limited in number, and clearly defined; and its action within the scope of those powers is restrained by a sufficiently rigid bill of rights for the protection of its citizens from oppression. The true interest of the people of this country requires that both the National and State Governments should be allowed, without jealous interference on either side, to exercise all the powers which respectively belong to them according to a fair and practical construction of the Constitution. State rights and the rights of the United States should be equally respected. Both are essential to the preservation of our liberties and the perpetuity of our institutions. But, in endeavoring to vindicate the one, we should not allow our zeal to nullify or impair the other.

Several other questions bearing upon the present controversy have been raised by the counsel of the petitioners. Somewhat akin to the argument which has been considered, is the objection that the deputy-marshals authorized by the Act of Congress to be created and to attend the elections are authorized to keep the peace; and that this is a duty which belongs to the state authorities alone. It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confided to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to the States. Here, again, we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of the country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle, that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This, necessarily, involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent.

This power to enforce its laws and to execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of the State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same places. The one does not exclude the other, except where both cannot be executed at the same time. In that case, the words of the Constitution itself show which is to yield. "This Constitution, and all laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof, * * * shall be the supreme law of the land."

This concurrent jurisdiction which the National Government necessarily possesses to exercise its powers of sovereignty in all parts of the United States is distinct from that exclusive power which, by the first article of the Constitution, it is authorized to exercise over the District of Columbia, and over those places within a State which are purchased by consent of the Legislature thereof, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards and other needful buildings. There its jurisdiction is absolutely exclusive of that of the State, unless, as is sometimes stipulated, power is given to the latter to serve the ordinary process of its courts in the precinct acquired.

Without the concurrent sovereignty referred to, the National Government would be nothing but an advisory government. Its executive power would be absolutely nullified.

Why do we have marshals at all, if they cannot physically lay their hands on persons and things in the performance of their proper duties? What functions can they perform, if they cannot use force? In executing the processes of the courts, must they call on the nearest constable for protection? Must they rely on him to use the requisite compulsion, and to keep the peace whilst they are soliciting and entreating the parties and bystanders to allow the law to take its course? This is the necessary consequence of the positions that are assumed. If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and re-refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old Confederation.

The argument is based on a strained and impracticable view of the nature and powers of the National Government. It must execute its powers, or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea; on things as well as on persons. And, to do this, it must, necessarily, have power to command obedience, preserve order and keep the peace; and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority, so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction. Without specifying other instances in which this power to preserve order and keep the peace unquestionably exists, take the very case in hand. The counsel for the petitioners concede that Congress may, if it sees fit, assume the entire control and regulation of the election of Representatives. This would necessarily involve the appointment of the places for holding the polls, the times of voting, and the officers for holding the election; it would require the regulation of the duties to be performed, the custody of the ballots, the mode of ascertaining the result, and every other matter relating to the subject. Is it possible that Congress could not, in that case, provide for keeping the peace at such elections, and for arresting and punishing those guilty of breaking it? If it could not, its power would be but a shadow and a name. But, if Congress can do this, where is the difference in principle in its making provision for securing the preservation of the peace, so as to give to every citizen his free right to vote without molestation or injury, when it assumes only to supervise the regulations made by the State, and not to supersede them entirely? In our judgment, there is no difference; and if the power exists in the one case, it exists in the other.

The next point raised is, that the Act of Congress proposes to operate on officers or persons authorized by state laws to perform certain duties under them, and to require them to disobey and disregard state laws when they come in conflict with the Act of Congress; that it thereby of necessity produces collision and is, therefore, void. This point has been already fully considered. We have shown, as we think, that, where the regulations of Congress conflict with those of the State, it is the latter which are void, and not the regulations of Congress; and that the laws of the State, in so far as they are inconsistent with the laws of Congress on the same subject cease to have effect as laws.

Finally; it is objected that the Act of Congress imposes upon the circuit court duties not judicial, in requiring them to appoint the supervisors of election, whose duties, it is alleged, are entirely executive in their character. It is contended that no power can be conferred upon the Courts of the United States to appoint officers whose duties are not connected with the judicial department of the government.

The Constitution declares that "The Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments." It is, no doubt, usual and proper to vest the appointment of inferior officers in that department of the government, executive or judicial, or in that particular executive department to which the duties of such officers appertain. But there is no absolute requirement to this effect in the Constitution; and, if there were, it would be difficult in many cases to determine to which department an office properly belonged. Take that of Marshal, for instance. He is an executive officer, whose appointment, in ordinary cases, is left to the President and Senate. But if Congress should, as it might, vest the appointment elsewhere, it would be questionable whether it should be in the President alone, in the Department of Justice, or in the courts. The Marshal is pre-eminently the officer of the courts; and, in case of a vacancy, Congress has in fact passed a law bestowing the temporary appointment of the Marshal upon the justice of the circuit in which the district where the vacancy occurs is situated.

But as the Constitution stands, the selection of the appointing power, as between the functionaries named, is a matter resting in the discretion of Congress. And, looking at the subject in a practical light, it is, perhaps, better that it should rest there, than that the country should be harassed by the endless controversies to which a more specific direction on this subject might have given rise. The observation in the case of Hennen, to which reference is made, Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet., 258, that the appointing power in the clause referred to "Was, no doubt, intended to be exercised by the department of the government to which the official to be appointed most appropriately belonged," was not intended to define the constitutional power of Congress in this regard, but rather to express the law or rule by which it should be governed. The cases in which the courts have declined to exercise certain duties imposed by Congress, stand upon a different consideration from that which applies in the present case. The Law of 1792, 1 Stat. at L., 243, which required the circuit courts to examine claims to revolutionary pensions, and the Law of 1849, 9 Stat. at L., 414, authorizing the District Judge of Florida to examine and adjudicate upon claims for injuries suffered by the inhabitants of Florida from the American Army in 1812, were rightfully held to impose upon the courts powers not judicial, and were, therefore, void. But the duty to appoint inferior officers, when required thereto by law, is a constitutional duty of the courts; and in the present case there is no such incongruity in the duty required as to excuse the courts from its performance, or to render their acts void. It cannot be affirmed that the appointment of the officers in question could, with any greater propriety, and certainly not with equal regard to convenience, have been assigned to any other depository of official power capable of exercising it. Neither the President, nor any head of department, could have been equally competent to the task.

In our judgment, Congress had the power to vest the appointment of the supervisors in question in the circuit courts.

The doctrine laid down at the close of counsels' brief, that the State and National Governments are co ordinate and altogether equal, on which their whole argument, indeed, is based, is only partially true.

The true doctrine, as we conceive, is this, that whilst the States are really sovereign as to all matters which have not been granted to the jurisdiction and control of the United States, the Constitution and constitutional laws of the latter are, as we have already said, the supreme law of the land; and, when they conflict with the laws of the States, they are of paramount authority and obligation. This is the fundamental principle on which the authority of the Constitution is based; and unless it be conceded in practice, as well as theory, the fabric of our institutions, as it was contemplated by its founders, cannot stand. The questions involved have respect not more to the autonomy and existence of the States, than to the continued existence of the United States as a government to which every American citizen may look for security and protection in every part of the land.

We think that the cause of commitment in these cases was lawful, and that the application for the writ of habeas corpus must be denied.

The application is denied accordingly.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

I cannot assent to the decision of the majority of the court in these cases [Nos. 6 and 7 Orig.], and I will state the reasons of my dissent. One of the six petitioners is a citizen of Ohio, and the other five are citizens of Maryland. They all seek a discharge from imprisonment imposed by judgments of Federal Courts for alleged official misconduct as Judges of Election in their respective States.

At an election held in the First Congressional District of Ohio, in October, 1878, at which a Representative in Congress was voted for, the petitioner from that State was appointed under its laws, and acted as a Judge of Election at a precinct in one of the wards of the City of Cincinnati. At an election held in the Fourth and Fifth Congressional Districts of Maryland, in November, 1878, at which a Representative in Congress was voted for, the petitioners from that State were appointed under its laws, and acted as Judges of Election at different precincts in the wards of the City of Baltimore. For alleged misconduct as such officers of election the petitioners were indicted in the Circuit Courts of the United States for their respective Districts, tried, convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months and, in some of the cases, also to pay a fine.

In what I have to say I shall confine myself principally to the case of the petitioner from Ohio; the other cases will be incidentally considered. In that case, the petitioner is charged with having violated a law of the State. In the cases from Maryland, the petitioners are charged with having prevented federal officers from interfering with them and supervising their action in the execution of the laws of the State. The principle which governs one will dispose of all of them; for if Congress cannot punish an officer of a State for the manner in which he discharges his duties under her laws, it cannot subject him to the supervision and control of others in the performance of such duties, and punish him for resisting their interference. In the cases from Maryland, it appears that the laws of the State, under which the petitioners were appointed Judges of Election, and the registration of voters for the election of 1878 was made, were not in existence when the Act of Congress was passed providing for the appointment of supervisors to examine the registration and scrutinize the lists, and of special deputy-marshals to aid and protect them. The Act of Congress was passed in 1871, 16 Stat. at L., 433, and republished in the Revised Statutes, which are declaratory of the law in force, December 1, 1873, p. 1. The law of Maryland, under which the registration of voters was had, was enacted in 1874, and the law under which the Judges of Election were appointed was enacted in 1876, and these Judges were required to possess different qualifications from those required of Judges of Election in 1871 and 1873.

In all the cases the petitioners are imprisoned under the judgments against them; and each one insisting that the circuit court, in his case, acted without jurisdiction, and that his imprisonment is, therefore, unlawful and subversive of his rights as a citizen, has petitioned this court for a writ of habeas corpus, annexing to his petition a transcript of the record of the proceedings against him; and prays that he may be released from restraint.

It has been settled by this court that the writ of habeas corpus is one of the modes by which its appellate jurisdiction will be exercised, in cases where it is alleged that by the action of an inferior tribunal a citizen of the United States has been unlawfully deprived of his personal liberty; and, if necessary, that a certiorari will be issued with the writ to bring up for examination the record of the proceedings of the inferior tribunal. In such cases, we look into that record to see, not whether the court erred in its rulings, but whether it had jurisdiction to impose the imprisonment complained of. If it had jurisdiction, our examination ends, and the case must await determination in the ordinary course of procedure on writ of error or appeal, should the case be one which can thus be brought under our review. But if the court below was without jurisdiction of the matter upon which the judgment of imprisonment was rendered, or if it exceeded its jurisdiction in the extent of the imprisonment imposed, this court will interfere and discharge the petitioner. If, therefore, the Act of Congress, in seeking to impose a punishment upon a state officer in one of these cases for disobeying a law of the State, and in the other cases for resisting the interference of federal officials with the discharge of his duties under such law, is unconstitutional and void, the judgments of the circuit courts are unlawful and the petitioners should be released.

I do not regard the presentation by the petitioner from Ohio of his petition to one of the Justices of the court in the first instance as a fact at all affecting his case. His petition is addressed to this court, and though the Justice, who allowed the writ, directed that it should be returnable before himself, he afterwards ordered the hearing upon it to be had before this court. The petition may, therefore, with propriety, be treated as if presented to us in the first instance. Irregularities in that regard should not be allowed to defeat its purpose, the writ being designed for the security of the personal liberty of the citizen.

The Act of Congress, upon which the indictment of the petitioner from Ohio was founded, is contained in section 5515 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that "Every officer of an election, at which any representative or delegate in Congress is voted for, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, territorial, district or municipal law or authority, who neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election required of him by any law of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof; or who violates any duty so imposed; or who knowingly does any acts thereby unauthorized with intent to affect any such election or the result thereof, * * * shall be punished as prescribed" in a previous section; that is, by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not more than one year, or by both.

The indictment contains three counts, the third of which was abandoned. The first count charges unlawful neglect on the part of the accused to perform a duty required of him by the laws of the State, in not carrying to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas one of the poll-books of the election, covered and sealed by the Judges of Election, with which he was intrusted by them for that purpose. The second count charges the violation of a duty required of him by the laws of the State in permitting one of the poll-books, covered and sealed, intrusted to him by the Judges of Election to carry to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, to be broken open before he conveyed it to that officer.

The law of Ohio, to which reference is had in the indictment, provides that after the votes at an election are canvassed "The judges, before they disperse, shall put under cover one of the poll-books, seal the same, and direct it to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of the county wherein the return is to be made; and the poll-book thus sealed and directed, shall be conveyed by one of the judges (to be determined by lot if they cannot agree otherwise), to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of the county, at his office, within two days from the day of the election."

The provisions of the Act of Congress relating to the appointment of supervisors of election, the powers with which they are intrusted, and the aid to be rendered them by marshals and special deputy-marshals, for resisting and interfering with whom the petitioners from Maryland have been condemned and are imprisoned, are stated in the opinion of the court. It is sufficient to observe that they authorize the supervisors to supervise the action of the state officers from the registration of voters down to the close of the polls on the day of election; require the marshals to aid and protect them, and provide for the appointment of special deputy-marshals in towns and cities of over twenty thousand inhabitants; and they invest those federal officers with a power, to arrest and take into custody persons without process, more extended than has ever before in our country in time of peace been intrusted to anyone.

In what I have to say I shall endeavor to show: 1. That it is not competent for Congress to punish a state officer for the manner in which he discharges duties imposed upon him by the laws of the State, or to subject him in the performance of such duties to the supervision and control of others, and punish him for resisting their interference; and, 2. That it is not competent for Congress to make the exercise of its punitive power dependent upon the legislation of the States.

There is no doubt that Congress may adopt a law of a State, but in that case the adopted law must be enforced as a law of the United States. Here there is no pretense of such adoption. In the case from Ohio it is for the violation of a state law, not a law of the United States that the indictment was found. The judicial power of the United States does not extend to a case of that kind. The Constitution defines and limits that power. It declares that it shall extend to cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made under their authority; to cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and to various controversies to which the United States or a State is a party; or between citizens of different States or citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; or between citizens of a State and any foreign State, citizens or subjects. The term "controversies," as here used, refers to such only as are of a civil as distinguished from those of a criminal nature. The judicial power thus defined may be applied to new cases as they arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States, but it cannot be enlarged by Congress so as to embrace cases not enumerated in the Constitution. It has been so held by this court from the earliest period. It was so adjudged in 1803 in Marbury v. Madison [1 Cranch, 137], and the adjudication has been affirmed in numerous instances since. This limitation upon Congress would seem to be conclusive of the case from Ohio. To authorize a criminal prosecution in the Federal Courts for an offense against a law of a State is to extend the judicial power of the United States to a case not arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

But there is another view of this subject which is equally conclusive against the jurisdiction of the Federal Court. The Act of Congress asserts a power inconsistent with and destructive of the independence of the States. The right to control their own officers, to prescribe the duties they shall perform, without the supervision or interference of any other authority, and the penalties to which they shall be subjected for a violation of duty is essential to that independence. If the Federal Government can punish a violation of the laws of the State, it may punish obedience to them, and graduate the punishment according to its own judgment of their propriety and wisdom. It may thus exercise a control over the legislation of the States subversive of all their reserved rights. However large the powers conferred upon the government formed by the Constitution, and however numerous its restraints, the right to enforce their own laws by such sanctions as they may deem appropriate is left, where it was originally, with the States. It is a right which has never been surrendered. Indeed, a State could not be considered as independent in any matter, with respect to which its officers, in the discharge of their duties, could be subjected to punishment by any external authority; nor in which its officers, in the execution of its laws, could be subject to the supervision and interference of others.

The invalidity of coercive measures by the United States, to compel an officer of a State to perform a duty imposed upon him by a law of Congress, is asserted, in explicit terms, in the case of Ky. v. Dennison, 24 How., 66 [65 U. S., XVI., 717]. The Constitution declares that "A person charged in any State with treason, felony or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime." And the Act of Congress of 1793, 1 Stat. at L., 302, to give effect to this clause, made it the duty of the executive authority of the State, upon the demand mentioned, and the production of a properly authenticated copy of the indictment or affidavit charging the person demanded with the commission of treason, felony or other crime, to surrender the fugitive. The Governor of Ohio having refused, upon a proper demand, to surrender a fugitive from justice from Kentucky, the Governor of the latter State applied to this court for a mandamus to compel the performance of that duty. But the court, after observing that, though the words, "It shall be the duty," in ordinary legislation implied the assertion of the power to command and to cause obedience, said, that, looking to the subject-matter of the law and "The relations which the United States and the several States bear to each other," it was of opinion that the words were not used as mandatory and compulsory, but as declaratory of the moral duty created, when Congress had provided the mode of carrying the provision into execution. "The Act does not provide," the court added, "any means to compel the execution of this duty, nor inflict any punishment for neglect or refusal on the part of the Executive of the State; nor is there any clause or provision in the Constitution which arms the Government of the United States with this power.

Indeed, such a power would place every State under the control and dominion of the General Government, even in the administration of its internal concerns and reserved rights. And we think it clear that the Federal Government, under the Constitution, has no power to impose on a state officer, as such, any duty whatever, and compel him to perform it; for if it possessed this power it might overload the officer with duties which would fill up all his time and disable him from performing his obligations to the State, and might impose on him duties of a character incompatible with the rank and dignity to which he was elevated by the State. It is true that Congress may authorize a particular state officer to perform a particular duty; but if he declines to do so, it does not follow that he may be coerced or punished for his refusal. And we are very far from supposing that, in using this word 'duty,' the statesmen who framed and passed the law, or the President who approved and signed it, intended to exercise a coercive power over state officers not warranted by the Constitution." And again; "If the Governor of Ohio refuses to discharge this duty, there is no power delegated to the General Government, either through the judicial department or any other department, to use any coercive means to compel him."

If it be incompetent for the Federal Government to enforce by coercive measures the performance of a plain duty, imposed by a law of Congress upon the executive officer of a State, it would seem to be equally incompetent for it to enforce by similar measures the performance of a duty imposed upon him by a law of a State. If Congress cannot impose upon a state officer, as such, the performance of any duty, it would seem logically to follow that it cannot subject him to punishment for the neglect of such duties as the State may impose. It cannot punish for the non-performance of a duty which it cannot prescribe. It is a contradiction in terms to say that it can inflict punishment for disobedience to an Act the performance of which it has no constitutional power to command.

I am not aware that the doctrine of this case, which is so essential to the harmonious working of the State and Federal Governments, has ever been qualified or departed from by this court, until the recent decisions in the Virginia cases, of which I shall presently speak. It is true that, at an early period in the history of the government, laws were passed by Congress, authorizing State Courts to entertain jurisdiction of proceedings by the United States, to enforce penalties and forfeitures under the revenue laws, and to hear allegations and take proofs, if application were made for their remission. To these laws reference is made in the Kentucky case; and the court observes that the powers which they conferred were for some years exercised by the state tribunals, without objection, until, in some of the States, their exercise was declined because it interfered with and retarded the performance of duties which properly belonged to them as State Courts; and in other States because doubts arose as to the power of State Courts to inflict penalties and forfeitures for offenses against the General Government, unless specially authorized to do so by the States; and that the cooperation of the States in those cases was a matter of comity which the several sovereignties extended to one another for their mutual benefit, and was not regarded by either party as an obligation imposed by the Constitution.

It is to be observed that, by the Constitution, the demand for the surrender of a fugitive is to be made by the executive authority of the State from which he has fled; but it is not declared upon whom the demand shall be made. That was left to be determined by Congress; and it provided that the demand should be made upon the Executive of the State where the fugitive was found. It might have employed its own agents, as in the enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Law, and compelled them to act. But, in both cases, if it employed the officers of the State, it could not restrain nor coerce them.

Whenever, therefore, the Federal Government, instead of acting through its own officers, seeks to accomplish its purposes through the agency of officers of the States, it must accept the agency with the conditions upon which the officers are permitted to act. For example, the Constitution invests Congress with the "Power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization;" and this power, from its nature, is exclusive. A concurrent power in the States would prevent the uniformity of regulations required on the subject. Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259; The Federalist, No. 42. Yet Congress, in legislating under this power, has authorized courts of record of the States to receive declarations under oath, by aliens, of their intention to become citizens, and to admit them to citizenship, after a limited period of residence, upon satisfactory proof as to character and attachment to the Constitution. But, when Congress prescribed the conditions and proof upon which aliens might, by the action of the state courts, become citizens, its power ended. It could not coerce the State Courts to hold sessions for such applications, nor fix the time when they should hear the applicants, nor the manner in which they should administer the required oaths, nor regulate in any way their procedure. It could not compel them to act by mandamus from its own tribunals, nor subject their judges to criminal prosecution for their non-action. It could accept the agency of those courts only upon such terms as the States should prescribe. The same thing is true in all cases where the agency of state officers is used; and this doctrine applies with special force to Judges of Elections, at which numerous state officers are chosen at the same time with Representatives to Congress. So far as the election of state officers and the registration of voters for their election are concerned, the Federal Government has confessedly no authority to interfere. And yet the supervision of and interference with the state regulations, sanctioned by the Act of Congress, when Representatives to Congress are voted for, amount, practically, to a supervision of and an interference with the election of state officers, and constitute a plain encroachment upon the rights of the States, which is well calculated to create irritation towards the Federal Government, and disturb the harmony that all good and patriotic men should desire to exist between it and the State Governments.

It was the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to create a government which could enforce its own laws, through its own officers and tribunals, without reliance upon those of the States, and thus avoid the principal defect of the Government of the Confederation; and they fully accomplished their purpose, for, as said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the McCulloch Case, "No trace is to be found in the Constitution of an intention to create a dependence of the Federal Government on the governments of the States for the execution of the great powers assigned to it. Its means are adequate to its ends; and on those means alone was it expected to rely for the accomplishment of its ends." When, therefore, the Federal Government desires to compel, by coercive measures and punitive sanctions, the performance of any duties devolved upon it by the Constitution, it must appoint its own officers and agents, upon whom its power can be exerted. If it sees fit to intrust the performance of such duties to officers of a State, it must take their agency, as already stated, upon the conditions which the State may impose. The co-operative scheme to which the majority of the court give their sanction, by which the General Government may create one condition and the States another, and each make up for and supplement the omissions or defects in the legislation of the other, touching the same subject, with its separate penalties for the same offense, and thus produce a harmonious mosaic of statutory regulation, does not appear to have struck the great jurist as a feature in our system of government or one that had been sanctioned by its founders.

It is true that, since the recent Amendments of the Constitution, there has been legislation by Congress asserting, as in the instance before us, a direct control over state officers, which previously was never supposed to be compatible with the independent existence of the States in their reserved powers. Much of that legislation has yet to be brought to the test of judicial examination; and, until the recent decisions in the Virginia cases, I could not have believed that the former carefully considered and repeated judgments of this court upon provisions of the Constitution, and upon the general character and purposes of that instrument, would have been disregarded and overruled. These decisions do, indeed, in my judgment, constitute a new departure. They give to the Federal Government the power to strip the States of the right to vindicate their authority in their own courts against a violator of their laws, when the transgressor happens to be an officer of the United States, or alleges that he is denied or cannot enforce some right under their laws. And they assert, for the Federal Government, a power to subject a judicial officer of a State to punishment for the manner in which he discharges his duties under her laws. The power to punish at all existing, the nature and extent of the punishment must depend upon the will of Congress, and may be carried to a removal from office. In my judgment, and I say it without intending any disrespect to my associates, no such advance has ever before been made toward the conversion of our federal system into a consolidated and centralized government. I cannot think that those who framed and advocated, and the States which adopted the Amendments, contemplated any such fundamental change in our theory of government as those decisions indicate. Prohibitions against legislation on particular subjects previously existed, as, for instance, against passing a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law, or a law impairing the obligation of contracts; and, in enforcing those prohibitions, it was never supposed that criminal prosecutions could be authorized against members of the State Legislature for passing the prohibited laws, or against members of the state judiciary for sustaining them, or against executive officers for enforcing the judicial determinations. Enactments prescribing such prosecutions would have given a fatal blow to the independence and autonomy of the States. So, of all or nearly all the prohibitions of the recent amendments, the same doctrine may be asserted. In few instances could legislation by Congress be deemed appropriate for their enforcement, which should provide for the annulment of prohibited laws in any other way than through the instrumentality of an appeal to the judiciary, when they impinged upon the rights of parties. If in any instance there could be such legislation authorizing a criminal prosecution for disregarding a prohibition, that legislation should define the offense and declare the punishment, and not invade the independent action of the different departments of the State Governments within their appropriate spheres. Legislation by Congress can neither be necessary nor appropriate which would subject to criminal prosecution state officers, for the performance of duties prescribed by state laws, not having for their object the forcible subversion of the government.

The clause of the Constitution, upon which reliance was placed by counsel on the argument, for the legislation in question, does not, as it seems to me, give the slightest support to it. That clause declares that "The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators." The power of Congress thus conferred is either to alter the regulations prescribed by the State or to make new ones; the alteration or new creation embracing every particular of time, place and manner, except the place of choosing Senators. But in neither mode nor in any respect has Congress interfered with the regulations prescribed by the Legislature of Ohio, or with those prescribed by the Legislature of Maryland. It has not altered them nor made new ones. It has simply provided for the appointment of officers to supervise the execution of the state laws, and of marshals to aid and protect them in such supervision, and has added a new penalty for disobeying those laws. This is not enforcing an altered or a new regulation. Whatever Congress may properly do touching the regulations, one of two things must follow: either the altered or the new regulation remains a state law, or it becomes a law of Congress. If it remain a state law, it must, like other laws of the State, be enforced, through its instrumentalities and agencies, and with the penalties which it may see fit to prescribe, and without the supervision or interference of federal officials. If, on the other hand, it become a law of Congress, it must be carried into execution by such officers and with such sanctions as Congress may desire. See 10 OTTO.

ignite. But as Congress has not altered the regulations for the election of Representatives prescribed by the Legislature of Ohio or of Maryland, either as to time, place or manner, nor adopted any regulations of its own, there is nothing for the Federal Government to enforce on the subject. The general authority of Congress to pass all laws necessary to carry into execution its granted powers, supposes some attempt to exercise those powers. There must, therefore, be some regulations made by Congress, either by altering those prescribed by the State or by adopting entirely new ones, as to the times, places and manner of holding elections for Representatives, before any incidental powers can be invoked to compel obedience to them. In other words, the implied power cannot be invoked until some exercise of the express power is attempted, and then only to aid its execution. There is no express power in Congress to enforce state laws by imposing penalties for disobedience to them; its punitive power is only implied as a necessary or proper means of enforcing its own laws; nor is there any power delegated to it to supervise the execution, by state officers, of state laws.

If this view be correct, there is no power in Congress, independently of all other considerations, to authorize the appointment of supervisors and other officers to superintend and interfere with the election of Representatives under the laws of Ohio and Maryland, or to annex a penalty to the violation of those laws, and the action of the circuit courts was without jurisdiction and void. The Act of Congress in question was passed, as it seems to me, in disregard of the object of the constitutional provision. That was designed simply to give to the general government the means of its own preservation against a possible dissolution, from the hostility of the States to the election of Representatives or from their neglect to provide suitable means for holding such elections. This is evident from the language of its advocates, some of them members of the Convention, when the Constitution was presented to the country for adoption. In commenting upon it in his report of the debates, Mr. Madison said that it was meant "To give the National Legislature a power not only to alter the provisions of the States, but to make regulations, in case the States should fail or refuse altogether." Elliott, Deb., 402. And in the Virginia Convention, called to consider the Constitution, he observed that "It was found impossible to fix the time, place and manner of the election of Representatives in the Constitution. It was found necessary to leave the regulation of these, in the first place, to the State Governments, as being best acquainted with the situation of the people, subject to the control of the General Government, in order to enable it to produce uniformity and prevent its own dissolution." 3 Elliott, Deb., 367. And in the Federalist, Hamilton said that the propriety of the clause in question rested "Upon the evidence of the plain proposition that every government should contain in itself the means of its own preservation."

Similar language is found in the debates in the conventions of the other States and in the writings of jurists and statesmen of the period. The conduct of Rhode Island was referred to as illustrative of the evils to be avoided. That State was not represented by delegates in Congress for years, owing to the character and views of the prevailing party; and Congress was often embarrassed by their absence. The same evil, it was urged, might result from a similar cause, and Congress should, therefore, possess the power to give the People an opportunity of electing Representatives if the States should neglect or refuse to make the necessary regulations.

In the conventions of several States which ratified the Constitution, an amendment was proposed to limit in express terms the action of Congress to cases of neglect or refusal of a State to make proper provisions for congressional elections, and was supported by a majority of the thirteen States; but it was finally abandoned upon the ground of the great improbability of congressional interference, so long as the States performed their duty. When Congress does interfere and provide regulations, the duty of rendering them effectual, so far as they may require affirmative action, will devolve solely upon the Federal Government. It will then be federal power which is to be exercised, and its enforcement, if promoted by punitive sanctions, must be through federal officers and agents; for, as said by Mr. Justice Story in Prigg v. Pa., 16 Pet., 539, "The National Government, in the absence of all positive provisions to the contrary, is bound, through its own proper department, Legislative, Judicial or Executive, as the case may require, to carry into effect all the rights and duties imposed upon it by the Constitution." If state officers and state agents are employed, they must be taken, as already said, with the conditions upon which the States may permit them to act, and without responsibility to the federal authorities. The power vested in Congress is to alter the regulations prescribed by the Legislatures of the States, or to make new ones, as to the times, places and manner of holding the elections. Those which relate to the times and places will seldom require any affirmative action beyond their designation. And regulations as to the manner of holding them cannot extend beyond the designation of the mode in which the will of the voters shall be expressed and ascertained. The power does not authorize Congress to determine who shall participate in the election, or what shall be the qualification of voters. These are matters not pertaining to or involved in the manner of holding the election, and their regulation rests exclusively with the States. The only restriction upon them with respect to these matters is found in the provision that the electors of Representatives in Congress shall have the qualifications required for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, and the provision relating to the suffrage of the colored race. And whatever regulations Congress may prescribe as to the manner of holding the election for Representatives must be so framed as to leave the election of state officers free, otherwise they cannot be maintained. In one of the numbers of the Federalist, Mr. Hamilton, in defending the adoption of the clause in the Constitution, uses this language: "Suppose an article had been introduced into the Constitution empowering the United States to regulate the elections for the particular States, would any man have hesitated to condemn it, both as an unwarrantable transposition of power, and as a premeditated engine for the destruction of the State Governments? The violation of principle in this case would have required no comment." By the Act of Congress sustained by the court, an interference with state elections is authorized, almost as destructive of their control by the States as the direct regulation which he thought no man would hesitate to condemn.

The views expressed derive further support from the fact that the constitutional provision applies equally to the election of Senators, except as to the place of choosing them, as it does to the election of Representatives. It will not be pretended that Congress could authorize the appointment of supervisors to examine the roll of members of State Legislatures and pass upon the validity of their titles, or to scrutinize the balloting for Senators; or could delegate to special deputy marshals the power to arrest any member resisting and repelling the interference of the supervisors. But if Congress can authorize such officers to interfere with the Judges of Election appointed under state laws in the discharge of their duties when Representatives are voted for, it can authorize such officers to interfere with members of the State Legislatures when Senators are voted for. The language of the Constitution conferring power upon Congress to alter the regulations of the States or to make new regulations on the subject, is as applicable in the one case as in the other. The objection to such legislation in both cases is that state officers are not responsible to the Federal Government for the manner in which they perform their duties, nor subject to its control. Penal sanctions and coercive measures by federal law cannot be enforced against them. Whenever, as in some instances is the case, a state officer is required by the Constitution to perform a duty, the manner of which may be prescribed by Congress, as in the election of Senators by members of State Legislatures, those officers are responsible only to their States for their official conduct. The Federal Government cannot touch them. There are remedies for their disregard of its regulations, which can be applied without interfering with their official character as state officers. Thus if its regulations for the election of Senators should not be followed, the election had in disregard of them might be invalidated; but no one, however extreme in his views, would contend that in such a case the members of the Legislature could be subjected to criminal prosecution for their action. With respect to the election of Representatives, so long as Congress does not adopt regulations of its own and enforce them through federal officers, but permits the regulations of the States to remain, it must depend for a compliance with them upon the fidelity of the state officers and their responsibility to their own government. All the provisions of the law, therefore, authorizing supervisors and marshals to interfere with those officers in the discharge of their duties, and providing for criminal prosecutions against them in the Federal Courts, are, in my judgment, clearly in conflict with the Constitution. The law was adopted, no doubt, with the object of preventing frauds at elections for members of Congress, but it does not seem to have occurred to its authors that the States are as much interested as the General Government in guarding against frauds at those elections and in maintaining their purity, and, if possible, more so, as their principal officers are elected at the same time. If fraud be successfully perpetrated in any case, they will be the first and the greatest sufferers. They are invested with the sole power to regulate domestic affairs of the highest moment to the prosperity and happiness of their people, affecting the acquisition, enjoyment, transfer and descent of property; the marriage relation, and the education of children; and if such momentous and vital concerns may be wisely and safely intrusted to them, I do not think that any apprehension need be felt if the supervision of all elections in their respective States should also be left to them.

Much has been said in argument of the power of the General Government to enforce its own laws, and in so doing to preserve the peace, though it is not very apparent what pertinency the observations have to the questions involved in the cases before us. No one will deny that in the powers granted to, it the General Government is supreme, and that, upon all subjects within their scope, it can make its authority respected and obeyed throughout the limits of the Republic; and that it can repress all disorders and disturbance which interfere with the enforcement of its laws. But I am unable to perceive in this fact, which all sensible men acknowledge, any cause for the exercise of ungranted power. The greater its lawful power, the greater the reason for not usurping more. Unrest, disquiet and disturbance will always arise among a People, jealous of their rights, from the exercise by the General Government of powers which they have reserved to themselves or to the States.

My second proposition is, that it is not competent for Congress to make the exercise of its punitive power dependent upon the legislation of the States. The Act, upon which the indictment of the petitioner from Ohio is founded, makes the neglect or violation of a duty prescribed by a law of the State, in regard to an election at which a Representative in Congress is voted for, a criminal offense. It does not say that the neglect or disregard of a duty prescribed by any existing law shall constitute such an offense. It is the neglect or disregard of any duty prescribed by any law of the State present or future. The Act of Congress is not changed in terms with the changing laws of the State; but its penalty is to be shifted with the shifting humors of the State Legislatures. I cannot think that such punitive legislation is valid, which varies, not by direction of the federal legislators, upon new knowledge or larger experience, but by the direction of some external authority which makes the same act lawful in one State and criminal in another, not according to the views of Congress as to its propriety, but to those of another body. The Constitution vests all the legislative power of the Federal Government in Congress; and from its nature this power cannot be delegated to others, except as its delegation may be involved by the creation of an inferior local government or department. Congress can endow territorial governments and municipal corporations with legislative powers, as the possession of such powers for certain purposes of local administration is indispensable to their existence. So, also, it can invest the heads of departments and of the army and navy with power to prescribe regulations to enforce discipline, order and efficiency. Its possession is implied in their creation; but legislative power over subjects which come under the immediate control of Congress, such as defining offenses against the United States, and prescribing punishment for them cannot be delegated to any other government or authority. Congress cannot, for example, leave to the States the enactment of laws and restrict the United States to their enforcement. There are many citizens of the United States in foreign countries, in Japan, China, India and Africa. Could Congress enact that a crime against one of those States should be punished as a crime against the United States? Can Congress abdicate its functions and depute foreign countries to act for it? If Congress cannot do this with respect to offenses against those States, how can it enforce penalties for offenses against any other States, though they be of our own Union? If Congress could depute its authority in this way; if it could say that it will punish as an offense what another power enacts as such, it might do the same thing with respect to the commands of any other authority, as, for example, of the President or the head of a department. It could enact that what the President proclaims shall be law; that what he declares to be offenses shall be punished as such. Surely no one will go so far as this, and yet I am unable to see the distinction in principle between the existing law and the one I suppose, which seems so extravagant and absurd.

I will not pursue the subject further, but those who deem this question at all doubtful or difficult, may find something worthy of thought in the opinions of the Court of Appeals of New York and of the Supreme Courts of several other States, where this subject is treated with a fullness and learning which leaves nothing to be improved and nothing to be added.

I am of opinion that the Act of Congress was unauthorized and invalid; that the indictment of the petitioner from Ohio, and also the indictments of the petitioners from Maryland and their imprisonment are illegal, and that, therefore, they should all be set at liberty; and I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Clifford concurs with me.

UNITED STATES, ex rel. ALLEN C. PHILLIPS ET AL., Plffs.,

v.

JAMES L. GAINES, COMPTROLLER OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

Costs in criminal proceedings—Tennessee law—mandamus.

1. Costs in criminal proceedings are a creature of statute and a court has no power to award them unless some statute has conferred it. By the common law the State pays no costs.

2. In Tennessee, by statute, defendant's costs in criminal cases, where the defendant is discharged, are payable out of the Treasury of the State.

3. A mandamus will not be issued to compel the State Comptroller to issue his warrant to the State Treasurer for the payment of the costs in such a case until the costs have been taxed and certified as required by law, nor if the bill contains costs for which the State is not liable.

Submitted Dec. 16, 1879. Decided Mar. 15, 1880.

ON a certificate of division in opinion between the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. John P. Murray and Benton McMillin, for plaintiffs.

No counsel appeared for defendant.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us by writ of error, in a case where there was a certificate of division between the Judges of the Circuit Court for the Middle District of Tennessee.

It is a petition for a mandamus to the Comptroller of the State, commanding him to issue his warrant to the State Treasurer for the payment of a bill of costs of an indictment against Phillips, one of the relators, and others not named.

The petition represents that, on the 10th of October, 1870, the petitioner, Phillips, and others were indicted in the County of Putnam for the murder of one Stephen Ford; that, after his arrest, the said Phillips presented his petition to the state court, praying for a removal of the indictment into the Circuit Court of the United States, under and by virtue of the Acts of Congress of March 3, 1863, May 11, 1866, and February 5, 1867; that the state court ordered and adjudged that the cause should be thus transferred, and that copies of the record and all proceedings in that court were made and duly filed in the said United States Circuit Court. The petition further represents that the circuit court took cognizance of the case until 1874, when the State of Tennessee, by her attorney, appeared and dismissed the case, agreeing that the costs should be adjudged against the State; that the court accordingly rendered such a judgment, and that a warrant for the payment of the costs had been demanded from the Comptroller and refused.

A portion of the record of the indictment and of the proceedings thereon, including what purports to be a bill of costs and the judgment of the court, certified by the clerk and made an exhibit, is appended to the petition. It is evidently incomplete. It does not contain the petition filed in the state court for the removal of the cause. The brief of the plaintiff in error, however, states that the killing, for which Phillips was indicted, was an act of war and in battle; that the petitioner adhered to the cause of the Government, and that Ford, the person killed, was a belligerent and soldier in the army of the rebellion. These averments are not denied, and if they were made in the petition it may be assumed that the indictment was removable and properly removed under the Act of Congress, and that the circuit court obtained jurisdiction of it.

The record, made, as we have stated, an exhibit, of the petition for a mandamus, shows that in the circuit court the State of Tennessee entered a nolle prosequi to the indictment, and that thereupon the court considered that the defendant, Phillips, be dismissed and go without day; that the State pay the costs of prosecution, and that the same be certified to the Comptroller for payment. It also shows that a bill of costs, including not merely the costs of prosecution but the defendant's costs, was presented to the Comptroller, and that a warrant upon the Treasurer therefor was demanded, but was refused.

To this petition for a mandamus, the defense set up by the Comptroller was twofold: first, that the Circuit Court of the United States had no power to render the judgment for costs against the State of Tennessee; second, that the court had no power to enforce the collection of the judgment for costs by mandamus, by reason of the facts averred in the petition, the defendant being an officer of the State, and the court having no power to control his action. For these reasons the court refused to grant the writ, and that refusal is now assigned for error. We are not, however, called upon to consider them, in view of the facts of the case as they are made to appear.

Costs in criminal proceedings are a creature of statute, and a court has no power to award them unless some statute has conferred it. By the common law, the public pays no costs. In England, the King does not, and the State stands in place of the King. This is the rule in the State of Tennessee. Mooney v. State, 2 Yerg., 578. But in that State, statutes have changed the rule. The Act of 1827, ch. 36, Hay & Cobb, 54, enacted as follows: "In all criminal cases, above the grade of petit larceny, originating in the circuit courts, where the defendant may be acquitted, and in all cases where the defendant may be convicted and shall prove insolvent and unable to pay the costs, the same shall be paid out of the Treasury of the State." Before that Act, in cases of acquittal by the verdict of a jury, costs were to be adjudged against the county. Act, 1813, ch. 136, sec. 3.

The Act of 1827 had no application to costs in cases ended by a nolle prosequi. But an Act passed in 1832, chapter 8, section 2, enacted that in all prosecutions for offenses subjecting the offender to confinement in the jail and penitentiary house of the State, in which a nolle prosequi shall be entered, or the defendant or defendants in such prosecution shall be otherwise discharged, the costs of such prosecution shall be paid by the State in the same manner and under the same provisions as in cases where the defendant or defendants may be acquitted by the verdict of a jury. The indictment against Phillips was such a case. Conceding, then, that the costs of the prosecution in that case were chargeable to the State, was the Comptroller bound to issue his warrant for the bill presented to him? It is made his duty, by the law of the State, to examine and adjust all accounts and claims against the State, which are, by law, to be paid out of the Treasury, and to draw warrants upon the Treasury for the sums which, upon such examination and adjustment, may be found due from the State. Civil Code, sec. 207. But the statutes of the State make some special provisions respecting costs. Before the Comptroller can issue a warrant for their payment, a bill of fees and costs must be presented to him in legal form, and it must be shown that all the preliminary requisites of the law have been complied with. State v. Delap, Peck, 91. An examination of the state statutes will reveal what these preliminary requisites are. Section 5569, Thompson and Steger's Compilation, declares that the costs chargeable upon the State or county in criminal cases shall be made out so as to show the specific items, and be examined and entered of record and certified to be correct, by the court or judge before whom the cause was tried or disposed of, and also by the district attorney. Section 5579 directs that a copy of the judgment and bill of costs, certified by the clerk of the court and by the Attorney-General and judge, shall be presented to the Comptroller, etc., * * * by the clerk or some person authorized by him, in writing, to receive the same, whereupon a warrant shall issue for the amount. Provisions somewhat similar are found in sections 5571 and 5572.

In the present case it does not appear that these prerequisites to a comptroller's warrant had been complied with. The bill of costs had not been taxed, nor had it been examined and certified by the circuit court, nor by the Attorney-General or district attorney, and it contained the costs of the defendant, for which the State is not liable.

Though, therefore, the costs of the prosecution are undoubtedly a debt of the State, for which the Comptroller may be compelled to draw a warrant upon the State Treasurer, the demand made upon him by the relators was unauthorized by law; and, consequently, the mandamus was properly refused.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Jurisdiction as to value.

Where the plaintiff in a replevin suit recovered all the property sued for, except a portion which was found to be of the value of $1,400, for the return or value of which defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs brought the case by writ of error to this court, the matter in dispute is only of the value of $1,400, and this court has no jurisdiction.

Submitted Mar. 9, 1880. Decided Mar. 15, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. L. C. Slavens, Wallace Pratt and Nelson Cobb, for plaintiffs in error.

No counsel appeared for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in replevin, brought by the plaintiffs in error to recover a large number of cattle, branded in a particular way. In executing the writ, the marshal, by mistake, took from the defendant sixty-two head of Texas steers, not having the proper brand, and delivered them with the other cattle to the plaintiff, on receiving the requisite bond. On the trial, it was found that the plaintiffs were the owners, and entitled to the immediate possession of all thus delivered over to them, except the Texas steers, taken by mistake. It was thereupon adjudged that they "Have and recover from the said defendant the possession of all the cattle, * * * except sixty-two head of Texas steers;" and, as to these, it was adjudged that they be returned by the plaintiffs to the defendant, or if that could not be done, "That the defendant have and recover from the plaintiffs the said sum of $1,400, the value thereof." From that judgment the plaintiffs below have taken this writ of error.

Upon this state of facts it is clear we have no jurisdiction. The matter in dispute is the sixty-two head of Texas steers, the value of which is only $1,400. The plaintiffs recovered everything else which they claimed, and the judgment against them is less than $5,000. We have always held that when a case is brought here by the defendant below, the amount of the recovery against him is the measure of our jurisdiction, except when he has asked affirmative relief, and that has been denied. The same rule is applicable to plaintiffs in replevin suits, where the defendant gets judgment for a return of property taken and delivered under the writ, or its value.

Writ dismissed.

Note.—Abel H. Pierce et al., v. William S. Tough et al., No. 188.

This case is, in all material respects, like that of Pierce v. Wade, just decided. The judgment was for $2,600 only. For the reasons stated in the other case, this writ is also dismissed.

California Statute of Limitations—suit by administrator.

*1. The Statute of California which requires an action for real estate sold by order of a probate court, which action is adverse to the sale, to be brought within three years after such sale, applies to an administrator who made the sale, as well as to the heirs, because the right of action is in the administrator and is not in the heirs.

2. When the action is barred by lapse of time against the administrator, it is also barred against the heirs, because the right of possession is, by the law of California, in the former, and when the bar is complete against him it is also perfect against the heir whose interest is represented by the administrator.

Argued Jan. 14, 15, 1880. Decided Mar. 15, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Montgomery Blair, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. M. Wilson, for defendants in error.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The action in this case was brought in the Circuit Court for the District of California by plaintiff in error to recover possession of a hundred vara lot in the City of San Francisco.

The case was submitted to the court on a stipulation waiving a jury, and on the findings of fact by the court now in this record. It further found, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiff was barred by section 190 of the Probate Act of the State, and gave judgment for defendants.

The material facts in the case are few and easily understood.

George Harlan, who died intestate July 8, 1850 was then seized of the title to the lot in question, except as that may have been nominally in the United States, and by the Act of Congress of 1864 the title so held by Harlan was confirmed, and inured to the benefit of anyone rightfully holding under him.

On the 19th of August, 1850, Henry C. Smith was duly appointed administrator of Harlan's estate, and having afterwards resigned, Benjamin Aspinall was appointed in his place, June 15, 1855.

On the 7th day of January, 1856, Aspinall, by an order of the probate court, sold the lot in question, with many others, and under this sale defendants, or those from whom they claim, entered into possession, which they have held uninterruptedly to the present time. Aspinall remained administrator until May 12, 1864, when he settled up his accounts and was discharged. And Joel Harlan and Lucien B. Huff were appointed in his place, and are now administrators.

On the 6th of November, 1869, an order of distribution of the estate was made in the probate court, by which the lot in question was distributed to plaintiff. To this proceeding, no objection is made as to its regularity. He brought the present action in 1872.

It will thus be seen that the defendants had purchased the lot in controversy at a sale ordered by the probate court, and had paid their money for it, and been in the peaceable adverse possession of it since 1856, a period of sixteen years; and the court held that, whether the probate sale was valid so as to confer title or not, the Statute of Limitations applicable to such cases was a bar to plaintiff's right of recovery.

As the only question in the case is the one thus stated by the circuit court, and as the Supreme Court of California had decided that the probate sale was invalid and conferred no title, we proceed to examine the defense of the Statute.

The special Statute of Limitations, of three years, contained in the Probate Act of California, is as follows:

"Sec. 190. No action for the recovery of any estate sold by an executor or administrator, under the provisions of this chapter, shall be maintained by any heir or other person claiming under the deceased testator or intestate, unless it be commenced within three years next after the sale.

Sec. 191. The preceding section shall not apply to minors or others, under any legal disability to sue at the time when the right of action shall first accrue; but all such persons may commence such action at any time within three years after the removal of the disability."

As the plaintiff in this case claims title as heir and by purchase from other heirs of the decedent, and brings his suit sixteen years after a sale by an administrator, sanctioned by a probate court, it would seem at first blush that the case came within the provision of the 1st section.

Counsel for plaintiff, however, has argued with much earnestness and force:

1. That no suit could be brought by the heirs, or anyone claiming through them, until the order of distribution was made, because, until that time or until administration was closed, the right of possession was in the administrator.

2. That, until then the heirs were under a disability, which by section 191 protected their right of action from the operation of section 190.

The first proposition and, indeed, the argument of the learned counsel, concedes that, by virtue of the Statutes of California, the real estate of a person dying intestate comes to the possession and control of his administrator as personal property does, and that while the administrator can only sell real estate upon an order of the probate court, the possession and control, the reception of the rents and profits, and the right to sue to recover possession of it when held adversely, belongs solely to the administrator. Indeed, a section or two of the Probate Act, which we copy, makes this very plain.

"Sec. 114. The executor or administrator shall have the right to the possession of all the real as well as the personal estate of the deceased, and may receive the rents and profits of the real estate, until the estate shall be settled, or until delivered over by the order of the probate court to the heirs or devisees, and shall keep in good tenable repairs all houses, buildings and fixtures thereon which are under his control."

"Sec. 195. Actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, and all actions founded upon contracts, may be maintained by and against executors and administrators, in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates."

And by section 194 of the Probate Act of California the administrator is again required to "Take into his possession all the estate of the deceased, real and personal."

While it must be conceded that no right of action existed in the heirs of Harlan until the order of distribution, the reason of this is that the right of action to recover possession of the lots wrongfully held under the invalid probate sale was in the administrator. He was the representative of the rights of the heirs and of the creditors of the estate, and as such had the same power to sue for and recover the lot as if he had been the intestate himself. Not only was it his right, but it was his exclusive right and his duty. For any failure to perform this duty he laid himself liable to the heirs, or anyone else injured by that failure.

Nor can it be said that either this right or this duty to sue for and recover possession of the lot was lost or abridged by his sale as administrator to the defendants. Instances are numerous, of persons making sales that are invalid, avoiding them by the very act of bringing an action of ejectment. Such are the cases of infants and married women who have made conveyances and received the consideration, whose acts are void or voidable by reason of infancy or of defective acknowledgments of the deeds.

There was, then, up to the date of the order of distribution, or until it was barred by the Statute, a right in the administrator of the estate of Harlan to sue for and recover the possession sought in the present action.

This being so, it is not easy to perceive why that right of action was not barred in three years from January 7, 1856, the day on which defendants purchased and took possession. This would make the bar complete January 7, 1859. During all that time Aspinall was administrator and for five years afterwards, and nothing obstructed his legal right to sue for and recover the possession. Nor is the case otherwise if the right of action began with the relinquishment of title by the Act of Congress of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 332.

It is argued, however, that section 190 does not apply to suits brought by the administrator and, therefore, the Statute does not run against the right of action while it remains in him.

The argument is that the language used, namely: "No such action shall be maintained by any heir, or other person claiming under the deceased testator or intestate," means by an heir or one holding under the heir, and that the words "other person" do not include the administrator.

But no sufficient reason is to be found why it should not. If the administrator can by such an action avoid his own irregular or void sale, the reason for limiting the time within which it should be done by him is as strong, or, perhaps, stronger than it is against another.

It is as important to the purchaser for whose benefit the Statute was enacted, that he should be protected against the administrator as against the heirs. The words "other person" mean some one other than the heirs, and instead of meaning some one like the heirs or claiming under the heirs, the words expressly refer to some one "claiming under the deceased testator or intestate." These last words are unnecessary in reference to heirs, for they can claim in no other way but under the intestate. The words "other person," therefore, almost of necessity refer to the administrator, for they can refer to no one but the heirs or some one claiming under them, or to the administrator.

He is, therefore, within the spirit and the literal meaning of that section, and the bar is good against him. This was decided in the case of Harlan v. Peck, in the Supreme Court of California, 33 Cal., 515. Harlan and Peck, as we have already seen, were the successors of Smith and of Aspinall as administrators of Geo. Harlan's estate. They brought suit to recover one of the lots sold by Aspinall at the same time with the sale in question in this case. The defendants relied on the sale and the limitation of section 190 of the Probate Act. The court below gave judgment for plaintiffs; but the Supreme Court, while it held the sale void, reversed the judgment, on the ground that this Statute of Limitations barred the administrator. This is a construction of the Statute by the highest court of the State.

The legal disability mentioned in section 191 manifestly has reference to a well known class of persons in whom a right to redress exists, but who, for special reasons, are incapable of acting for themselves; such as infancy, coverture and the like. Whatever is a disability under the general Statute of Limitations is a disability under this statute. Section 352 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California describes this class, among which are minors, femes covert, insane persons and persons imprisoned, and it describes them as persons entitled to bring an action. The disability cannot have reference to a person in whom no right of action exists. Such use of the term "disability" is without support in reason or precedent.

The right of action on the title which the plaintiff now asserts was in the administrator, and the statute, therefore, ran against him and against all whose rights he represented. "In all suits for the benefit of the estate he represents both the creditors and the heirs," said the Supreme Court in Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal., 215.

Whatever doubt may have existed at one time on the subject, there remains none at the present day, that whenever the right of action in the trustees is barred by the Statute of Limitations, the right of cestui que trust thus represented is also barred. This doctrine is clearly stated in Hill on Trustees, side paging, 267, 403, 504, and the authorities there cited fully sustain the text, both English and American.

Among those specially applicable to this case are Smilie v. Biffle, 2 Pa. St., 52; Couch v. Couch, 9 B. Mon., 160; Rosson v. Anderson, 9 B. Mon., 423; Darnall v. Adams, 13 B. Mon., 273.

In the first of these cases, land was devised to executors, with a power of sale, which was imperfectly executed by one of the executors alone. The legatee brought suit against the purchaser, and was held to be barred by the Statute of Limitations. After referring to the old opinion, and expressing surprise that it should ever have been entertained, and showing how it was overruled by Lord Hardwicke in Lewellen v. Mackworth, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr., 579, the court says: "Therefore, where cestui que trust and trustees are both out of possession, for the time limited, the party in possession has a good title against both. By the terms of the will, the trustee had the right to enter on the land, to take the rents, issues and profits, and apply the same to the separate use of Jane Craig, the testator's daughter, during her natural life, with power to sell the fee simple and appropriate the interest of the purchase money to her use, and after her death to be paid to certain legatees, of whom the present plaintiff was one. The property was sold in the lifetime of Jane Craig; but the sale was the act of but one of the trustees, and it is contended that the execution of the joint trust must be the act of all. In this respect, the title of Nicholson, the purchaser, is manifestly defective. But Nicholson took possession of the premises in pursuance of the contract, and held the same for upwards of twenty-one years. He, therefore, held adversely to both cestui que trust and trustee, and consequently obtained by the Statute of Limitations an indefeasible title, which cannot now be disturbed or gainsaid."

In the case of Rosson v. Anderson [supra], the question related to the title of slaves conveyed by a father to a trustee for his daughters. The trustee did not accept the trust, nor were the slaves ever delivered by the donor.

One of the granddaughters, after her father's death, which occurred while she was a minor, brought suit for the slaves, and was met by a plea of the Statute of Limitations, to which she replied her infancy. The court held that the right of action, on the death of her father, vested in his executors and, as more than five years had elapsed after they had qualified as such, the Statute was a bar against them, and as they would have been barred by the Statute, so was the heir, though a minor when the cause of action accrued.

In Darnall v. Adams [supra], which concerned a devise of slaves, the same court held that the disability of coverture in the devisee could not prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of an adverse possession against the executor, and that it was well settled that the claim of the devisee is, under such circumstances, barred by the lapse of time which bars the executor. Coleman v. Walker, 3 Met. (Ky.), 65, and Edwards v. Woolfolk, 17 B. Mon., 376, are cases which assert the same doctrine, and in the latter the principle is fully and ably discussed and its soundness well maintained.

A very strong case of the same character is that of Croxall v. Shererd, decided in this court, 5 Wall., 268 [72 U. S., XVIII., 572], where a remainder-man was held barred by the Statute of Limitations of New Jersey, on account of the number of years of possession of defendant, under purchase from the holder of the estate for life, all of which had elapsed during that life. This was held to be a bar, though the remainder-man brought suit immediately on the death of his ancestor. This was, however, based on the peculiar wording of that statute.

In Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal., 485, it was held that an administrator, who is a party to a suit which involves the title of his intestate to real estate, represents the title which the deceased had at the time of his death, and the judgment in such action concludes the adverse party and the heirs of the intestate. And such judgment is an estoppel as to the title set up in the action.

On the whole, we are of opinion, both upon sound principles of construction, as well as upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of California upon the Statute of the State, that the circuit court was justified in holding that the plaintiff was barred by the adverse possession of defendants, and the judgment of that court is affirmed.

Patents for saddle-trees—construction of patent.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Mr. Samuel S. Boyd, for appellants, cited Sewall v. Jones, 91 U. S., 183 (XXIII., 277); Winans v. Denmead, 15 How., 342; Machine Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S., 125 (XXIV., 936).

Mr. Jefferson Chandler, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question in this case is, whether the defendants infringe certain letters patent, No. 97236, granted 23d of November, 1869, to John J. Grimsley and John Shelly, for an improved side-saddle tree alleged to have been invented by Shelly; which letters were afterwards assigned to the complainants.

The infringement alleged consists in making and using side-saddle trees according to a plan described in another patent granted to Orlando V. Flora, on the 9th of May, 1876, numbered 177233. According to the plaintiff's patent, this tree composed of side-bars, cantle behind, and crook before, is first made, and the seat is constructed separately on a properly shaped rim, and is then fastened to the tree by screws, resting on the crook in front, and on supports attached to the side-bars in the middle and at the rear. This construction is claimed to simplify and cheapen the manufacture, and leave a space for air under the seat. The claim of the patent is as follows:

"What I claim as my invention, and desire to secure by letters patent is:

As a new article of manufacture, a side-saddle tree, having the side-bars and seat made separate and then united, substantially as and for the purpose shown and specified."

The defendants' side-saddle tree, constructed according to Flora's patent, which is alleged to be an infringement, does not have "the side-bars and seat made separate and then united." On the contrary, tough strips of wood, steamed and bent to a proper shape, are attached to the tree, as a part thereof, forming side-rails for the seat; that on the right or off side extending from the cantle to the crook, and that on the left or near side extending from the cantle to a point on the near side bar some distance back of the crook. The seat is stretched over these strips or side-rails. It is obvious that the seat, in this case, cannot possibly be constructed separately from the side-bars. They must be united in one construction, forming a complete tree. The advantage of separate construction which the plaintiffs claim for their patented tree is not attained by that of Flora. It is true that room is left for the admission of air under the seat; but that by itself is not claimed as the invention of Shelly.

It is well known that the terms of the claim in letters patent are carefully scrutinized in the Patent Office. Over this part of the specification the chief contest generally arises. It defines what the office, after a full examination of previous inventions and the state of the art, determines the applicant is entitled to. The courts, therefore, should be careful not to enlarge, by construction, the claim which the Patent Office has admitted, and which the patentee has acquiesced in, beyond the fair interpretation of its terms.

100 U. S.

We think there was no infringement, and that the decree of the circuit court must be affirmed.

The decree is affirmed, accordingly.

Argued Mar. 5, 1880. Decided Mar. 15, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky.

Each of the above cases was commenced in the court below, by the National Bank of the State of New York, now defendant in error, against the respective plaintiffs in error, upon a bill of exchange.

The following is a copy of the bill of exchange upon which the first action was based: $5,000.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., August 3, 1875.

Eighty days after date, pay to the order of J. C. Whitlock, Five Thousand Dollars, value received, and charge to account, renewing a bill for same amount and names due August 3, 1875.

MERRITT COX,

To Messrs. Cox & Cowan, New York, N. Y.

The drawees wrote across the face of the bill "Accepted. Cox & Cowan."

The payee, Whitlock, indorsed the bill to E. M. Wright & Co. of New York, who in turn indorsed it to the Bank, the plaintiff below.

The facts in the other case are precisely the same, except that the payee was one J. D. Clardy.

The court below having rendered judgment for the plaintiff in each case, the present writs of error were sued out.

The facts further appear in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Walter Evans, for plaintiffs in error:

The bill of exchange, being addressed to Cox & Cowan, New York, N. Y., is not, therefore, See 10 Otto.

and at all events, payable there.

Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B., 276; Fenton v. Goundry, 13 East, 468; Chit. Bills (star), 172; Lightner v. Will, 2 Watts & S., 140; Fisher v. Evans, 5 Binn., 541.

The acceptors never had a residence or place of business in New York. On the contrary, they lived in Hopkinsville, Ky., and did business there, and there the bill was executed and delivered. They at no time changed their residence or place of business. All these facts were known to the Bank at and before the date of the bill and when it matured. Hence, in the exercise of the diligence necessary to bind the drawer and indorser, it was absolutely essential that presentment for payment should, at maturity, have been made in Kentucky.

Taylor v. Snyder, 3 Den., 145; Spies v. Gilmore, 1 N. Y., 321; Bk. v. Whittemore, 12 Gray, 469; 1 Pars. Bills & N., 453; In re Glyn, 15 Bk. Reg., 502; Fisher v. Evans, 5 Binn., 542.

The bills here in suit, having mentioned on them no place of payment, were, whether they be foreign or inland bills, in legal contemplation, payable at the residence or place of business of the acceptors, and demand of payment should have been made there at the maturity of the bills.

Musson v. Lake, 4 How., 274; Whitesides v. Bk., 10 Bush, 502; Barnes v. Vaughan, 6 R. I., 259; Story, Bills, last clause, sec. 325; 1 Pars. Bills & N., 421.

The address of the drawee on a bill of exchange is nothing more than an intimation of where he is, or where he resides or does business. It is perhaps, prima facie, his residence.

Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B., 276; Fenton v. Goundry, 13 East, 468; Chit. Bills (star) 172, 9th ed.; Lowery v. Scott, 24 Wend., 358.

It was a lack of due diligence for the holder to wait until the very day of maturity or the next day, to make inquiry as to the postoffice address of the drawer or indorser. The holder should have been prepared with this information in advance, and especially should inquiry have been made as to the indorsements.

Hill v. Varrell, 3 Me., 235; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst., 74; 1 Pars. Bills & N., 493, n.; Lowery v. Scott, 24 Wend., 358; Spencer v. Bk., 3 Hill, 520.

It would seem clear, from the facts stated in the bill of exceptions, that the Bank delivered the original bills to E. M. Wright & Co., in New York, for the purpose of renewal, and that the Bank then knew the other parties were all in Kentucky.

We maintain, therefore:

1. That it was never contemplated that E. M. Wright & Co. should do otherwise than transmit the bills to some person in Kentucky, as they did to J. V. Thompson.

2. That E. M. Wright & Co. were authorized to do this by the necessities of the case.

3. That Thompson was, therefore, in legal contemplation, the agent of the Bank, whether the Bank ever heard of him or not.

4. That if Thompson had failed in his duty, the Bank alone could have sued for default.

5. Thompson's individual knowledge of the postoffice address of the plaintiffs in error is clearly imputable to the Bank.

6. As the notices were not addressed to the proper postoffice, and were never in fact received, they were not good.

The instructions of the court, contrary to these views, were erroneous.

The jury should have been instructed as prayed by the plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. William D. Shipman and W. W. Macfarland, for defendant in error:

The bills were addressed to the drawees at the City of New York and not elsewhere. They were accepted generally. They were, therefore, payable at the City of New York.

No matter in what part of the world the acceptors may, in fact, have dwelt, when they accepted a bill addressed to them at New York they elected their residence there for the purpose of presentation and payment of the bill.

Smith v. Little, 10 N. H., 526; 1 Am. Lead. Cas., 5th ed., 454; Story, Bills, sec. 353; Chit. Bills, 397.

The duty of the holder is performed when he has made diligent effort to find the acceptor at the place where he has undertaken to pay the bill.

It follows that the charge on this point was right.

Story, Bills, sec. 351 and n.; 3 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 96 and notes; Pars. Bills & N., 440, and notes.

It is not claimed by the plaintiffs in error that notice was not given in time. Indeed, it is proved to have been given on the very day or the day after the protest. But it is said that the notice was sent to the wrong postoffice.

In answer to this, it is enough to say that the holder did not know the address of the drawer and indorsers and that, on making inquiry in the only available quarter, the notary was informed that the proper address was Hopkinstown, and, accordingly, sent the notices to that place.

The charge on this point was clearly within the rule laid down in Lambert v. Ghiselin, 9 How., 256; see, also, Hunt v. Maybee, 7 N. Y., 266; Story, Bills, secs. 299, 308, 351, 387; Parsons, Bills & N., 490.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Bills of exchange are written orders or requests from one party to another for the payment of money to a third person or his order, on account of the drawer, and, if payable at sight or at a date subsequent to the acceptance by the drawee, the instrument must be duly presented for payment, else the parties to the same conditionally liable for the payment of the amount will be discharged. Different rules prevail as to the place where the presentment for payment must be made, dependent upon the form of the instrument and the place where and the terms in which it was accepted.

Such an instrument must first be accepted; and if, when presented for that purpose, the drawee refuses to accept the same, it must, if it is a foreign bill, be protested for non-acceptance; the rule being that the place of protest is the place where the same is required to be presented for acceptance, unless it is in terms payable at some other place. Due presentment for payment must also be made; the general rule being that the place of payment is the place where the acceptor resides, or where on the face of the bill it is addressed to him, unless some other place is specifically designated in the instrument. Story, Bills, secs. 48, 282.

Sufficient appears, to show that the subject-matter of the present controversy is a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant first named, the address to the drawees being "Messrs. Cox & Cowan, New York, N. Y.," for the sum of $5,000, payable eighty days from date, value received, and the indorsement on the face of the bill is as follows: Accepted. Cox & Cowan.

That the bill was duly presented for acceptance, and that it was accepted by the drawees in the manner described, is admitted; nor is it denied that it was duly indorsed by the payee, nor that the plaintiff Bank became the bona fide holder of the bill by virtue of the second indorsement exhibited in the record.

Payment of the bill at maturity being refused, the plaintiff Bank, as the lawful holder of the same, caused it to be protested, and instituted the present action against the drawer, the acceptors and the payee as the first indorser, to recover the amount. Process was served, and the drawer and indorser appeared and filed separate answers.

Though the answers are separate, yet the material defenses in each are the same, and may be considered together. They are as follows: (1) That the bill was not duly presented to the acceptors for payment. (2) That it was not duly protested for non-payment. (3) That due notice was never given to the drawer of the dishonor of the bill or of the failure of the acceptors to pay the same at maturity.

Amended answers having subsequently been filed by the same parties, they went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff Bank against the drawer, acceptors and indorser for the amount specified in the transcript. Exceptions were filed by the defendants, and they sued out the present writ of error.

Since the cause was entered here, the defendants have assigned for error the following causes: (1). That the circuit court erred in instructing the jury that the bill, being addressed to the drawees, "New York, N. Y.," is in law payable in New York City. (2) That the circuit court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that the acceptance of the bill, as shown in the transcript, was a general acceptance, which made the bill payable at no particular place. (3) That the circuit court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that, in order to charge the defendants, the officers of the plaintiff Bank, if they knew at the maturity of the bill where the residence and place of business of the acceptors were, as stated in the answers, must show that the bill was presented and that payment was demanded at their residence or place of business. (4) That the circuit court erred in instructing the jury that if the notary made reasonable and diligent inquiry for the acceptors and their place of business in the City of New York, and could not find either their residence or place of business, and that he then demanded payment during business hours at the place or places frequented by them when in said city, that such a demand was a sufficient presentment to maintain the action.

Evidence was introduced by the defendants tending to show that, throughout the transaction they were all residents of the State of Kentucky, and that the bill in question was drawn and indorsed in the State; that it was sent by one Thompson to the firm of Wright & Co., who delivered the same to the plaintiff Bank or their officers, who were informed where the bill was executed by the drawer and indorser. They also introduced testimony showing that the officers of the Bank, when they took the bill, knew where the drawer resided when it was forwarded, and afterwards when it was accepted by the drawees. Explanatory evidence was also given by the plaintiff Bank showing that no sort of agency existed between the person by whom the bill was forwarded and the firm by whom it was delivered and the plaintiff Bank, and that the former never had any communication with the Bank, and never informed either the Bank or the said firm of the postoffice address of any one of the defendants.

Commercial rules everywhere require that, to fix the liability of the drawer of a bill of exchange or the indorser of a bill or note, there must be a legal presentment of the instrument to the acceptor or maker, or payment must be demanded of such a party on the day the instrument becomes payable. That payment must be demanded from the maker of a note and notice of its non-payment forwarded to the indorser in due time, in order to render him liable, is so firmly settled, says Marshall, Ch. J., that no authority need be cited to support the proposition. Magruder v. Bk., 3 Pet., 87, 90; Bk. v. Hale, 16 Serg. & R., 157.

Nobody doubts the correctness of that rule, and it is equally well settled that when a note or bill is expressed to be payable at a particular place, a demand there is always sufficient to charge the indorser. Story, Bills, 4th ed., sec. 357; Chit. Bills, 13th Am. ed., 407; Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B., 165; Piequet v. Curtis, 1 Sumn., 478.

Text writers of undoubted authority state that an acceptance is an engagement to pay the bill according to the tenor of the acceptance, and that a general acceptance is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of the bill. Bayley, Bills, 5th ed., 154; Chit. Bills, 13th Am. ed., 342.

Cases arise where the drawer of a bill of exchange designates in the instrument the place of payment, and the decisions are that, in such a case, both the drawer and the indorser will be discharged unless the bill be there presented for payment at maturity; but the same decisions hold otherwise as to the maker of a note and the acceptor of a bill, the rule being that, unless the restrictive words "only and not elsewhere," are added, no presentment there at maturity or afterwards is necessary to charge such a party. Foden v. Sharp, 4 Johns., 183; Wolcott v. Van Santvoord, 17 Johns., 248.

Where no place of payment is expressed in a bill or note, the general rule, in the absence of any agreement or circumstances fixing or indicating a different intention, is that the place of presentment is the place where the acceptor or maker resides, or at their usual place of business. Circumstances, however, may control the usual inference arising from the want of any such expression in the instrument which may warrant a very different conclusion. Thus, if a bill were drawn upon a merchant when abroad, and should be addressed to him at Paris or at London, the place of payment would be the place where the drawer accepted the instrument, whether Paris or London, and not the place of his residence when the bill was drawn or at its maturity. 1 Dan. Neg. Secur., 2d ed., sec. 90.

Provided no place is designated or agreed or indicated in the form of the address or the terms of the acceptance, the rule then is, that the presentment for payment must be made at the home or domicile of the acceptor or maker, or at their usual place of business during business hours. Id., sec. 635.

Parol testimony to show such an agreement is admissible, it being settled law that the introduction of such testimony is not inconsistent with the rule that a written instrument cannot be varied by parol evidence. Brent v. Bk., 1 Pet., 89, 92.

Unlike the indorser, the maker of a promissory note is liable without any demand of payment. His undertaking is unconditional, but the indorser only undertakes to pay if the maker does not, which makes it necessary for the holder to take proper steps to obtain payment from the maker, from which it follows that his contract is that due diligence shall be used to that end; and when the parties agree what shall constitute due diligence in the particular case, says Marshall, Ch. J., they do not alter the written contract, but agree upon an extrinsic circumstance, and substitute that agreement for an act which the law prescribes as such when they are silent.

Acceptors of a bill of exchange stand in the same relation to the drawee of the bill as the maker of a note does to the payee, the acceptor being the principal debtor in a bill precisely as the maker is of a promissory note; the rule being that the liability of the acceptor is governed by the terms of his acceptance, just as the liability of the maker of a note is defined and governed by the terms of a note; nor can the place of payment be of any more importance in the one case than in the other.

When a note or bill is made payable at a particular bank, as is frequently the case, it is well known that, according to the usual course of business, the note or bill is usually lodged in the bank for collection; and if the maker or acceptor calls to take it up when it falls due, and it is delivered to him, and he pays the amount, the business is closed; but if he does not find the note or bill at the bank, he can deposit the money to meet the same when it shall be presented, and the proof of such tender and deposit, in case of a subsequent suit, will exonerate him from all costs and damages. Or should the note or bill be made payable at some other place than a bank, and no deposit should be made, or he should choose to retain the money in his own possession, an offer to pay at the time and place would protect him against interest and costs on bringing the money into court.

Rules of a different character have sometimes prevailed in other jurisdictions, but the principles to be applied in such a case are settled in this court; nor is it necessary, where the note or bill is payable at a specified time and place, to aver in the declaration or prove at the trial that a demand was made at that place in order to maintain the action; the established rule being that if the maker or acceptor was at the place at the time designated, and was ready and offered to pay the money, it is matter of defense to be pleaded and proved. Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet., 136, 150; 1 Dan. Neg. Secur., 2d ed., sec. 643; Edw. Bills, 2d ed., 150; Rowe v. Young, 2 Bligh, 391, 395.

Beyond doubt, these principles are applicable, as determined by this court, where the suit is against the maker of the note or the acceptor of the bill; but when recourse is had to the indorser of the note or the drawer of the bill, very different considerations arise, as they are not the principal debtors to the holder of the instrument. Their undertaking is not absolute, like that of the maker of the note or the acceptor of the bill, but conditional, that if the maker in the one case or the acceptor in the other refuses to make good the undertaking they will pay the amount. Hence, the holder is bound to use due diligence to obtain payment from the maker or acceptor, as a condition precedent to his right to recover of the parties only conditionally liable. Consequently, when a place of payment is designated in the body of the note or bill, the drawer or indorser has a right to presume that the maker or acceptor has provided funds at such place to pay the note or bill, and to require the holder to apply for payment at such place, unless when the place designated is a bank, and the bank is the holder of the instrument, when the rule does not apply. In all other cases the obligation is absolute, that the holder must aver and prove a presentment at the designated place, unless the necessity is obviated by agreement, or something appearing in the instrument to indicate a different intention. Bk. v. Smith, 11 Wheat., 171, 175.

Suppose that is so; then there never need be any difficulty in determining the rights of the parties in such a case, where the place of payment is specifically designated in the bill, or where the terms of the instrument contain no such designation whatever, as the rule of procedure in each case, though different, is equally plain and unmistakable. Nor do the parties here differ in respect to those rules, but the plaintiff Bank contends that the bill in question brings the case within the category of the first case, but the defendants insist that it falls within the second, where no place of payment is designated.

Looking at the terms of the bill, independent of the address to the drawees and the acceptance written across the face of the bill, it would seem that the theory of the defendants is correct; but the bill is addressed to "Messrs. Cox & Cowan, New York, N. Y.," as drawees, and is by them accepted without explanation or condition, from which it follows as a reasonable inference that they accepted the bill as if they were at the time in the City of New York; and having so accepted it without explanation or condition, the legal construction of the instrument is that it became payable when it fell due at the place designated by the address as the place where the acceptance took place. Haltstead v. Skelton, 5 Q. B., 86; 1 and 2 Geo. IV., ch. 78; 38 British Stats., 291.

Bills of exchange, like other written instruments, are subject to legal construction in order to ascertain the intent and meaning of the parties, unless the language employed to express such intent and meaning is clear and unambiguous.

Enough has already been remarked to show that when a bill or note is expressed to be payable at a particular place on demand, it is always sufficient to prove that it was presented there to charge the acceptor or the indorser. Evans v. St. John, 9 Port., 186, 193; McClane v. Fitch, 4 B. Mon., 599. Where a bill is drawn on a firm, as W. M. & Co., at a particular number and street, as at 263 Washington Street, New York, the presentment should be made at their place of business, as presumable from such address, or at the residence of either of the firm. Bk. v. Warren, 18 Barb., 291, 293.

If the instrument is payable in a particular town, and the residence of the maker or acceptor is elsewhere, the holder is not bound to make demand anywhere except in that town. Smith v. Little, 10 N. H., 526, 530; Smith v. Little, 1 Am. Lead. Cas., 5th ed., 454.

Views equally explicit are expressed by Judge Story, who says that if the bill is drawn upon the drawee domiciled in one place and is payable in another place, and is accepted by him, meaning without qualification, the presentment should be made at the latter place. Thus, if a bill is drawn on the drawees at Liverpool, payable in London, and is accepted, without explanation, the presentment for payment must be in London, if any particular place is there pointed out where demand may be made; and if none, and no one can be found to pay the bill, it may be protested there for non-payment for that very cause. Story, Bills, 4th ed., sec. 353; Boot v. Franklin, 3 Johns., 208; 2 and 3 William IV., 50 British Stats., ch. 98, p. 587; Chit. Bills, 13th Am. ed., 390.

So where a bill is directed to the drawee at a particular house, and is by him accepted without condition, the going to that house with the bill on the day of payment and finding it closed is a sufficient presentment. Bayley, Bills, 5th ed., 200; Hine v. Alley, 1 Nev. & M., 433; Chit. Bills, 13th Am. ed., 330.

American authorities almost universally hold that in such a case no presentment is necessary to charge the acceptor of the bill or the maker of the note; the only effect of the neglect as to such a party being that it relieves him from cost and damages if he was ready at the time and place named to pay the amount and there was no one to receive it. Such readiness is equivalent to a tender, and an answer pleading that fact and payment of the money into court will be a bar to the recovery of interest and cost. Hills v. Place, 48 N. Y., 520; Caldwell v. Cassidy, 8 Cow., 271.

Want of due diligence cannot be successfully set up in this case, as the protest was given in evidence, and shows to a demonstration that everything the law requires was done, to find the acceptors or their place of business, without success, and that the protest was finally made at the only place in the City of New York where they were accustomed to transact any business.

Diligence is, doubtless, required of the holder to ascertain the proper place to present the bill for payment; but it is not necessary to give that issue much consideration in this case, as it is not controverted that every needful effort in that regard was made, if the true theory of the bill is that it was payable in the City of New York, which is asserted by the plaintiff Bank and denied by the defendants.

Nothing need be added to what has already been remarked to explain the views of the court upon that subject, which are, that the bill having been addressed to the drawees at the City of New York, and they having accepted the same without qualification, explanation or condition, the bill became payable in that city, even though no mention was made of any dwelling, store or place of business where the bill should be presented. Freese v. Brownell, 35 N. J. L., 285; 1 Bell, Com., 5th ed., 412.

Nor is it necessary to repeat the views heretofore expressed, that the acceptor of the bill, like the maker of a note, is the promissory debtor in such a case; and that, in respect to such a party to a bill, no presentment or demand of payment need be made at the specified place in order to render him liable to an action on the instrument. Story, Notes, 7th ed., sec. 228; 1 Pars. Bills and N., 425-429; Thomp. Bills, 2d ed., 294.

Our decisions are decisive to that effect, and it is equally clear in this case that every step necessary to bind the drawer and the indorser was also taken by the holder of the bill described in the declaration. Story, Notes, 7th ed., 236; Carter v. Smith, 9 Cush., 321.

Presentment at the specified place as against the acceptor of a bill is not necessary, the rule being that, if he was ready at the time and place to pay, he may prove that as a defense; but the rule is otherwise as against the drawer and indorsers. 3 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 100, 104.

Five other assignments of error are set forth in the brief of the defendants; but it is unnecessary to pursue the discussion, as the remarks already made are sufficient to show that there is no error in the record, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Exactly the same questions are also involved in No. 184 on the calendar, which was argued and submitted at the same time with the case just decided. Both cases presenting the same questions, the latter must be decided in the same way as the former and for the same reasons.

Judgment in each case is affirmed.

engaged in the sale therein, or the transportation thereto, of the products of other States, more onerous public burdens or taxes than it imposes upon the like products of its own territory.

2. An ordinance of the City of Baltimore, authorized by a statute of Maryland and in pursuance of which vessels landing at the public wharves of the City, laden with the products of other States, were required to pay wharfage fees which were not exacted from vessels landing therewith with the products of Maryland, declared to be in conflict with the National Constitution.

3. Wharfage fees, so exacted, cannot be regarded, in the sense of former decisions, as compensation for the use of the City's property, but a mere expedient or device to build up the domestic commerce of Maryland by means of unequal and oppressive burdens upon the industry and business of other States.

Argued Dec. 24, 1879. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Baltimore City Court, State of Maryland.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederick J. Brown and Arthur Geo. Brown, for plaintiff in error:

As to the conflict which exists between the Constitution and the legislation of Maryland and the City of Baltimore, now in question, it is so clearly shown by the decisions of this court that it will be enough to cite the leading cases, without entering upon any analysis or discussion of them. The following cases are relied upon as conclusive of the points now in issue:

Brown v. Md., 12 Wheat., 419; Steamship Co. v. Port Wardens, 6 Wall., 31 (73 U. S., XVIII., 749); State Tonnage Tax Case, 12 Wall., 204 (79 U. S., XX., 370); State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall., 232 (82 U. S., XXI., 146); Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall., 581 (86 U. S., XXII., 201); Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall., 577 (87 U. S., XXII., 417); R. R. Co. v. Md., 21 Wall., 456 (88 U. S., XXII., 678); Welton v. Mo., 91 U. S., 275 (XXIII., 347); Henderson v. Mayor, etc., 92 U. S., 259 (XXIII., 543); Cooke v. Pa., 97 U. S., 566 (XXIV., 1015); see, also, Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80 (XXIV., 377); Wharf Case, 3 Bland, 361.

Mr. James L. McLane, for defendants in error:

No attempt is made to force vessels to receive or discharge cargoes at wharves owned by the municipal Corporation. All are left free to resort to any of the numerous private wharves in the harbor; and when they do so, the City has no claim for wharfage. In the one case as in the other, it is the use of the wharf as property that fixes the liability for wharf charges. The rates of wharfage established by the city ordinance were intended to be and, in point of fact, are nothing more than compensation for the use of property. They are simply regulations of property by its owner, and in no sense regulations of commerce. The right to exact them is an attribute of ownership.

NOTE.—Power of States to tax. See note to Providence Bk. v. Billings, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.), 514; and note to Dobbins v. Erie Co., 41 U. S. (16 Pet.), 435.

Wharfs; right to construct; right to charge wharfage; lien for. See note to Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S., XXIV., 373.

Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall., 277 (82 U. S., XXI., 162); Marshall v. Vicksburg, 15 Wall., 146 (82 U. S., XXI., 121); Steamship Co. v. Port Wardens, 6 Wall., 31 (73 U. S., XVIII., 749); Passenger Cases, 7 How., 402; Cooley, Tax., 62; Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 84 (XXIV., 379).

Upon no possible theory of this case can the wharf charges complained of be regarded as imposts or duties upon imports, within the meaning of section 10, of article 1 of the Constitution.

If they were in fact, taxes or duties imposed or levied directly upon the appellant's cargo of Virginia produce, they would not be in violation of this provision of the Federal Constitution, the operation of which is confined to "goods imported from foreign States," and confers no immunity from state taxation upon goods brought from a sister State.

Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall., 136 (75 U. S., XIX., 386).

The State has the undoubted right to reserve for its own citizens the exclusive use of the property which it holds for their common benefit, and whatever right its citizens might have in such case, would be a "property right, and not a mere privilege or immunity of citizenship."

McCready v. Va., 94 U. S., 391 (XXIV., 248); Conner v. Elliott, 18 How., 594 (59 U. S., XV., 498); Downham v. Alexandria, 10 Wall., 175 (77 U. S., XIX., 930).

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

In Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall., 123 [75 U. S., XIX., 382], we had occasion to consider the constitutional validity of an ordinance of the City of Mobile under the provisions of which had been assessed, for municipal purposes, a tax upon sales in that City of certain goods and merchandise, the product of States other than Alabama. The ordinance, in its application to articles carried into Alabama from other States, was assailed as being inconsistent with the constitutional inhibition upon the States levying imposts or duties on imports or exports; with the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; and with that clause which declares that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the immunities and privileges of citizens of the several States.

Touching the first of these propositions it was ruled that the term "import," as used in section 10, article 1, of the Constitution, had reference to articles imported from foreign countries, and not to such as were brought from one of the States of the Union into another. In the argument, Brown v. Md., 12 Wheat., 419, was cited in support of the proposition that the whole ordinance, in its application to articles brought from other States to Mobile for sale, was an unauthorized regulation of interstate commerce. Upon that branch of the case, we said: "If the court there (in Brown v. Md.) meant to say that a tax levied on goods from a sister State, which was not levied on goods of a similar character produced within the State, would be in conflict with the clause of the Constitution giving Congress the right to regulate commerce among the States, as much as the tax on foreign goods, then under consideration, was in conflict with the authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations, we agree to the proposition."

In a subsequent portion of our opinion in Woodruff v. Parham, it was said: "But we may be asked, is there no limit to the power of the States to tax the produce of other States brought within their borders? And can they so tax them as to drive them out or altogether prevent their introduction or their transit over their territory? The case before us is a simple tax on sales of merchandise imposed alike upon all sales made in Mobile, whether the sales be made by a citizen of Alabama or of another State, and whether the goods sold are the products of that State or of some other. There is no attempt to discriminate injuriously against the products of other States, or the rights of their citizens, and the case is not, therefore, an attempt to fetter commerce among the States, or to deprive the citizens of other States of any privilege or immunity possessed by citizens of Alabama. But a law having such operation would, in our opinion, be an infringement of the provisions of the Constitution which relate to those subjects and, therefore, void."

In Hinson v. Lott, 8 Wall., 148 [75 U. S., XIX., 387], we upheld a Statute of Alabama, imposing taxes upon the sale of spirituous liquors within its limits, upon the ground that it did not discriminate against the products of other States, and only subjected them to the same taxation imposed upon similar articles manufactured in that State. Had the statute been susceptible of a different construction, it would have been held to be repugnant to the Constitution.

In Ward v. Md. 12 Wall., 418 [79 U. S. XX., 449], we examined the provisions of a Statute of Maryland which, among other things, required of persons, not permanent residents of that State, before selling or offering for sale within the limits of the City of Baltimore any goods, wares or merchandise whatever, other than agricultural products and articles manufactured in that State, to obtain a license therefor. The amount exacted for such license was larger than the statute required of resident traders engaged in like business. In declaring the statute to be repugnant to the Federal Constitution, we said that, "Inasmuch as the Constitution provides that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States, it follows that the defendant might lawfully sell or offer or expose to sale, within the district described in the indictment, any goods which the permanent residents of the State might sell or offer or expose for sale in that district, without being subjected to any higher tax or excise than that exacted by law of such permanent residents."

Upon the same ground, in the more recent case of Weldon v. Mo., 91 U. S., 275 [XXIII., 347], we held void a Statute of Missouri imposing a peddler's license tax upon persons going from place to place to sell patent and other medicines, goods, wares or merchandise, except books, charts, maps and stationery, not the growth, product or manufacture of that State, and which did not impose a like tax upon the sale of similar articles, the growth, product or manufacture of Missouri.

In view of these and other decisions of this court, it must be regarded as settled that no State can, consistently with the Federal Constitution, impose upon the products of other States brought therein for sale or use, or upon citizens because engaged in the sale therein, or the transportation thereto, of the products of other States, more onerous public burdens or taxes than it imposes upon the like products of its own territory.

If this were not so it is easy to perceive how the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States could be practically annulled, and the equality of commercial privileges secured by the Federal Constitution to citizens of the several States be materially abridged and impaired. "Over whatever other interests of the country," said Mr. Webster, "this government may diffuse its benefits and blessings, it will always be true, as matter of historical fact, that it had its immediate origin in the necessities of commerce; and for its immediate object, the relief of those necessities, by removing their causes, and by establishing a uniform and steady system." But state legislation, such as that indicated in the cases which have been cited, if maintained by this court, would ultimately bring our commerce to that "oppressed and degraded state," existing at the adoption of the present Constitution, when the helpless Confederation was abandoned and a National Government instituted, with full power over the entire subject of commerce, except that wholly internal to the States composing the Union.

How far the principles enunciated in the foregoing cases control the determination of the one before us, we now proceed to inquire.

By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed in 1827, authority was given to the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore to regulate, establish, charge and collect to their use such rate of wharfage as they might think reasonable, of and from all vessels resorting to or lying at, landing, depositing or transporting goods or articles, other than the products of that State, on any wharf or wharves belonging to that municipal corporation, or any public wharf in the City other than the wharves belonging to or rented by the State, and that part of Pratt Street wharf, theretofore reserved for the use of the citizens of that State. Md. Code of Pub. Local L., art. 4, sec. 945.

In pursuance of that Act, the City, by its constituted authorities, in the year 1858, passed an Act regulating the public wharves. By its 33d section it is declared that all goods, wares or merchandise landed on the public wharves from on board any vessels lying at said wharves, or placed thereon for the purpose of shipment or exposure for sale, other than the product of the State of Maryland, shall pay wharfage according to certain rates therein prescribed. The 35th section declares that "All vessels belonging to or lying at, landing, depositing or transporting goods or articles other than the production of this State, on or from any wharf or wharves belonging to the Mayor and City Council, or any public wharf in the said City, other than the wharves belonging to or rented by the State, shall be chargeable with the wharfage as fixed by this ordinance, upon all goods or articles landed or deposited on any wharf or wharves belonging to the said Mayor and City Council; and the master or owner of the vessel so depositing, landing or transporting said goods or articles, shall be responsible for the same." The ordinance contained other sections providing for its enforcement.

See 10 Otto.

The appellant, Guy, a resident citizen of Accomack, County, Virginia, was engaged in the year 1876 in sailing a schooner, of which he was master and part owner, from that county to Baltimore, laden with potatoes raised in Virginia. In June of that year, he landed his vessel at one of the public wharves belonging to the City, not that part of the Pratt Street wharf reserved, and discharged therefrom two hundred and twenty barrels of potatoes. Under the authority of the foregoing statute and ordinance, the city harbor-master demanded of him the payment of $4.40 as wharfage. He refused to comply with that demand and, being sued by the City, judgment was rendered against him in the court of a justice of the peace, which was affirmed by the City Court of Baltimore, the highest court of Maryland in which a decision of the case could have been had.

It is admitted that such wharfage dues are not and never have been assessed against parties or vessels bringing to that port potatoes or other articles grown in the State of Maryland.

The argument in support of the statute and ordinance upon which the judgment below rests, is that the City, by virtue of its ownership of the wharves in question, has the right, in its discretion, to permit their use to all vessels landing thereat with the products of Maryland; and that those operating vessels, laden with the products of other States, cannot justly complain, so long as they are not required to pay wharfage fees in excess of reasonable compensation for the use of the City's property.

This proposition, however ingenious or plausible, is unsound both upon principle and authority. The municipal Corporation of Baltimore was created by the State of Maryland to promote the public interests and the public convenience. The wharf at which appellant landed his vessel was long ago dedicated to public use. The public for whose benefit it was acquired, or who are entitled to participate in its use, are not alone those who may engage in the transportation to the Port of Baltimore of the products of Maryland. It embraces, necessarily, all engaged in trade and commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States. Every vessel employed in such trade and commerce may traverse those waters without let or hindrance from local or state authority; and the National Constitution secures to all, so employed, without reference to the residence or citizenship of the owners, the privilege of landing at the Port of Baltimore with any cargo whatever, not excluded therefrom by, or under the authority of, some statute in Maryland enacted in the exertion of its police powers. The State, it will be admitted, could not lawfully impose upon such cargo any direct public burden or tax because it may consist, in whole or in part, of the products of other States. The concession of such a power to the States would render wholly nugatory all national control of commerce among the States, and place the trade and business of the country at the mercy of local regulations, having for their object to secure exclusive benefits to the citizens and products of particular States. But it is claimed that a State may empower one of its political agencies, a mere municipal corporation representing a portion of its civil power, to burden interstate commerce by exacting, from those transporting to its wharves the products of other States, wharfage fees, which it does not exact from those bringing to the same wharves the products of Maryland. The City can no more do this than it or the State could discriminate against the citizens and products of other States in the use of the public streets or other public highways. The City of Baltimore, if it chooses, can permit the public wharves which it owns to be used without charge. Under the authority of the State, it may also exact wharfage fees, equally, from all who use its improved wharves, provided such charges do not exceed what is fair remuneration for the use of its property. Packet Co. v. St. Louis [ante, 688]; Viicksburg v. Tobin [ante, 690]; Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80 [XXIV., 377]. But it cannot employ the property it thus holds for public use so as to hinder, obstruct or burden interstate commerce in the interest of commerce wholly internal to that State. The fees which it exacts to that end, although denominated wharfage dues, cannot be regarded, in the sense of our former decisions, as compensation merely for the use of the City's property, but as a mere expedient or device to accomplish, by indirection, what the State could not accomplish by a direct tax, viz.: build up its domestic commerce by means of unequal and oppressive burdens upon the industry and business of other States.

Such exactions, in the name of wharfage, must be regarded as taxation upon interstate commerce. Municipal corporations, owning wharves upon the public navigable waters of the United States, and quasi public corporations transporting the products of the country, cannot be permitted, by discriminations of that character, to impede commercial intercourse and traffic among the several States and with foreign nations.

In the exercise of its police powers, a State may exclude from its territory, or prohibit the sale therein of any articles which, in its judgment, fairly exercised, are prejudicial to the health or which would endanger the lives or property of its people. But if the State, under the guise of exerting its police powers, should make such exclusion or prohibition applicable solely to articles, of that kind, that may be produced or manufactured in other States, the courts would find no difficulty in holding such legislation to be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

The power of the National Government over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is broad and comprehensive. It reaches the interior of every State of the Union, so far as it may be necessary to protect the products of other States and countries from discrimination, by reason of their foreign origin. Brown v. Md., 12 Wheat., 419.

Nothing can be clearer than that the Statute of Maryland and the Ordinance of the City of Baltimore, in the respects adverted to, are in conflict with the power of Congress over the subject of commerce.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the action against the appellant, with his costs against the City.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite, dissenting:

I cannot concur in this judgment. We have decided that a municipal corporation may collect reasonable compensation for the use of its improved public wharves and landing places. Such a charge is in no just sense a tax or burden. The State of Maryland has seen fit to prohibit the City of Baltimore from making any such charge for landing and depositing the products of the State. That was all the State undertook to do. I am unable to bring my mind to the conclusion that the Constitution of the United States makes this the equivalent of a provision that all wharfage at the public wharves belonging to the City shall be free so long as the law as it now stands is in force.

NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MARY L. GRIDLEY.

Falsity of statement in insurance application.

Where, in an application for life insurance, the statement of the insured was, "No hereditary taint on either side of the house, to my knowledge," in order to show the falsity of the statement in an action on the policy, it was necessary for the insurance company to prove that the hereditary taint alleged was known to the applicant when the statement was made.

Argued Mar. 12, 1880. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Edward Salomon, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Robert Sewell, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action upon a policy of insurance, insuring the life of Fayette R. Gridley in the sum of $10,000, for the benefit of his wife, the defendant in error.

The policy sets forth that it was issued "In consideration of the representations made in the application therefor and of the premium, etc." It sets forth, further, that "If any of the statements or declarations in the application for this policy, and upon the faith of which it is issued, shall be found in any material respect untrue, then * * * this policy shall be null and void."

The application was signed by the assured in behalf of himself and his wife. The first clause is as follows: "An answer to each of the following questions is required from persons proposing to effect insurance in this Company, which answers form the basis of this contract."

It concluded with the declaration "That the above are the applicant's own fair and true answers to the foregoing questions. * * *. And it is hereby agreed that these statements with this declaration shall form the basis of the contract for assurance, and that any untrue or fraudulent answers—any suppression of facts in regard to the person's health, habits or circumstances—material to the risk, * * * shall vitiate the policy and forfeit all payments made thereon."

The application contained, among others, the following question: "Have the person's (whose life is to be assured) parents, uncles, aunts, brothers or sisters been afflicted with consumption, scrofula, insanity, epilepsy, disease of the heart, or any other hereditary disease." The applicant answered: "No; except one brother temporarily insane six months since. Causes, domestic and financial troubles, followed by hard drinking and excessive use of opium and morphine. Recovery followed reformed habits. No hereditary taint of any kind in family on either side of house, to my knowledge."

It was proved, on behalf of the Company, that Abraham Gridley, an uncle of the assured, was insane for more than a year preceding his death, and that he died in the Bloomingdale Insane Asylum upwards of twenty years before the application for the insurance here in question was made.

The testimony being closed, the counsel for the Company asked the court to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant. This was refused, and defendant excepted. The court thereupon instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant again excepted. The jury found as directed.

The only question argued before us is, whether the court erred in instructing the jury to find for the plaintiff. The solution of that question depends upon the construction and effect to be given to the interrogatory and the answer to which our attention was called by the counsel for the plaintiff in error.

It is a recognized rule in the construction of statutes, that "A thing which is within the intention of a statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter; and a thing which is within the letter of the statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the makers." People v. Ins. Co., 15 Johns., 258.

This proposition is equally applicable to other written instruments. The object of all symbols is to convey the meaning of those who use them, and when that can be ascertained it is conclusive. The intent of the law-makers is the law, and here the intent of the parties is the contract.

It was material to the risk and hence important to the insurers, to know whether either of the maladies named or any serious malady not named was hereditary in the family of the applicant. If the question were answered in the affirmative, it might be a reason for declining to issue the policy. On the other hand, if either of such maladies existed in a member of the family other than the applicant, but was not hereditary and, on the contrary, existed, according to the family history, for the first time in the person affected, and in that case was the effect of known contemporaneous causes, then it was not material to the risk, was of no interest to insurers, and it is fairly to be presumed they did not care to be advised upon the subject.

This may be illustrated by the case of insanity mentioned in the answer of the applicant. He says his brother was afflicted in that way. "Causes, domestic and financial troubles, followed by hard drinking and excessive use of opium and morphine." He adds: "Recovery followed reformed habits." This explanation took the subject wholly out of the scope and purpose of the inquiry by the Company, and made it, as it were, res inter alios acta.

The last sentence of the answer is: "No hereditary taint on either side of the house, to my knowledge."

The affirmation was restricted and narrowed down to what the applicant himself personally knew touching the subject. It has this extent; no more.

The Company might have refused to insure unless the qualification were withdrawn. Having failed to do this, such is the contract of the parties.

To make out the defense sought to be established by the insurers, three things were, therefore, necessary to be shown: that the alleged insanity of the uncle had existed; that it was hereditary; and that it was known to the applicant when he answered the question.

The first point was clearly proved. In relation to the second and third, there was no proof whatever. What was proved, without what was not proved, was of no account. The defense, therefore, wholly failed. It follows that the instruction complained of was properly given.

The subject of questions and answers in cases like this was fully considered by this court in Bk. v. Ins. Co., 95 U. S., 673 [XXIV., 563].

It is unnecessary to go over the same ground again, or to add anything to what is there said.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

FRANCIS J. LIPPITT.

Court of Claims—limitation in—commutation.

*The limitation prescribed by the 10th section of the Act of March 3, 1863, amendatory of the Act of February 24, 1855, is not pleadable in the Court of Claims, against a claim cognizable therein, and which has been referred by the head of an executive department for its judicial determination, provided such claim is presented for settlement at the proper department within six years after it first accrued.

Argued Mar. 9, 10, 1880. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

Between July, 2, 1863, and Aug. 1, 1864, the petitioner, defendant in error, was Colonel of the Second California Volunteers, in the service of the United States. July 2, 1863, he was in command of the District of Humboldt, California, and on that day he was ordered by the Commanding General of the Department of the Pacific to report, in person, at the headquarters of the department, in San Francisco, and to await further orders. About July 25 he left his post, and from about that day to Aug. 1, 1864, was in San Francisco awaiting orders. He was not furnished fuel and quarters during this time. There is no direct evidence whether they could or could not have been furnished. Most of the officers stationed at San Francisco during this time received commutation.

*Head note by Mr. Justice HARLAN.

Petitioner was not ordered to perform, nor did he perform, any military duty during this time, nor did he again report himself at headquarters after his first report on his arrival. He made no demand on the proper officer that fuel and quarters be furnished him, nor did he receive any military order after his arrival until July 19, 1864, when he was ordered to repair to his regiment.

In 1865, he presented to the War Department a claim for commutation for fuel and quarters while so awaiting orders, which, with the papers, was referred by the Secretary of war to the Court of Claims Jan. 9, 1878, in pursuance of section 1063 of the Revised Statutes.

Subsequently, Feb. 1, 1878, the petitioner filed his petition in the Court of Claims to recover said commutation; to which, among other things, a plea was interposed, under the statute, that the action was barred, in that the petition was not filed within six years after the claim first accrued. On the trial, judgment was rendered in favor of the claimant.

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty. Gen., Thos. Simons, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Albert D. Robinson, for appellant.

Messrs. Jas. Lowndes, John J. Weed and Thomas Wilson, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The correctness of the judgment below depends, in part, upon the construction of the 10th section of the Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 765, amendatory of the Act of Feb. 24, 1855, 10 Stat. at L., 612, establishing the Court of Claims. That section declares "That every claim against the United States, cognizable by the Court of Claims, shall be forever barred, unless the petition setting forth a statement of the claim be filed in the court, or transmitted to it under the provisions of this (that) Act, within six years after the claim first accrues," etc.

The claims against the Government, of which the Court of Claims could, at that date, take cognizance, were those founded upon some law of Congress, or upon some regulation of an Executive Department, or upon some contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, which might be suggested to that court by a petition filed therein; and also, all claims which might be referred to the court by either House of Congress. The limitation of six years applied, therefore, to every demand asserted against the Government in the Court of Claims, which it had, when the Act of 1863 was passed, jurisdiction to hear and determine. Within the meaning of the Act all such claims were cognizable by that court.

By a subsequent statute, approved June 25,

1868, authority was given to the head of any Executive Department, whenever any claim was made upon that department involving disputed facts or controverted questions of law, where the amount in controversy exceeded $3,000, or where the decision would affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the future action of any Executive Department in the adjustment of a class of cases, without regard to the amount involved in the particular case; or where any authority, right, privilege or exemption was claimed or denied under the Constitution of the United States, to cause such claim, with all documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims, to be there proceeded in as if originally commenced by the voluntary action of the claimant.

The court was also empowered to try, and adjudicate, any claim of like character, amount or class transmitted to it by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certificate of an Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury.

But the Act accompanied this enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims with the restriction that no case should be referred to it by the head of a department, unless it belonged to one of the several classes of cases to which, by reason of the subject-matter and character, the court could, under the then existing laws, take jurisdiction on the voluntary action of the claimant.

The claim of appellee first accrued in 1864. It was presented to the War Department in the year 1865, and its settlement pressed, so the finding declares, until Jan. 9, 1878. On that day, it was transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Court of Claims for its determination. It was transmitted, not, so far as the record shows, at the instance or with the consent of the appellant, but because it involved controverted questions of law, the decision whereof would affect a class of cases.

It is conceded by the Government that the claim was presented at the proper department and, when presented, was not barred by the limitation of six years. But the contention of the Attorney-General is that the Court of Claims is prohibited, by the express words of the statute, from giving judgment against the Government upon any claim which is not asserted by petition filed therein within six years after the claim first accrued, or which is not within that period transmitted to the court from one of the Houses of Congress or by the head of an Executive Department.

We are unable to concur in this construction of the Statute of March 3, 1863. Such a construction would work an injustice which we cannot suppose Congress intended should be done to the citizen having a demand against the Government. The claim in question, although cognizable, in the first instance, by the Court of Claims, was yet properly presented at the department which had authority to pass finally upon it. It should have been there allowed or disallowed long before the expiration of six years from the time it first accrued. The claimant steadily pressed its settlement without, so far as the finding shows, any intimation that it was defectively prepared, or that it would be ultimately rejected. The department held it undisposed of until 1878, and then sent the claimant to the Court of Claims, where he was met at the very threshold of his case by a plea of limitation upon the part of the Government. That plea, if sustained, would defeat the only object of the reference. It would prevent the department from obtaining for its future guidance the judgment of the court upon controverted questions of law affecting a large class of cases. It should not be sustained, unless we are required to do so by some absolute, unbending rule of construction.

When this claim was presented at the War Department for settlement, there was no statute allowing the heads of Executive Departments to refer claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication. But when the Act of June 25, 1868, 15 Stat. at L., 75, was passed, its provisions necessarily applied to all claims then before the Executive Departments which belonged to one of the several classes, of which, by reason of their subject-matter and character, the Court of Claims could take cognizance upon the voluntary petition of the claimant. The claim of appellee certainly belonged to one of those classes. It was not, as we have seen, barred by limitation when that Act was passed. It could, then, in 1868, have been referred by the War Department to the Court of Claims for its determination. But, instead of adopting that course, at a time when no question of limitation could be raised, its reference was postponed or delayed for nearly ten years after the passage of the Act of 1868. We are satisfied that the delay was accidental, certainly not with any intention to defraud or injure the claimant. If the plea had, upon its face, admitted, or if the fact was established by competent evidence, that the delay in deciding, or in referring the claim to the Court of Claims, was intentional, or with a purpose to defeat the claimant, by limitation, the court would certainly not permit the Government to profit by such a course. Why should a different conclusion be reached when the delay is unexplained, and is inconsistent with proper diligence in the transaction of the public business? It seems to the court that, looking at the purpose which Congress had in the establishment of the Court of Claims, and in enlarging its powers, as indicated in the Acts of 1863 and 1868, the just and reasonable construction of the 10th section of the first named Act requires us to hold that limitation is not pleadable, in the Court of Claims, against a claim cognizable therein, and which has been referred by the head of an Executive Department for its judicial determination, provided such claim was presented for settlement at the proper department within six years after it first accrued; that is, within six years after suit could be commenced thereon against the Government. Where the claim is of such a character that it may be allowed and settled by an Executive Department, or may, in the discretion of the head of such department, be referred to the Court of Claims for final determination, the filing of the petition should relate back to the date when it was first presented at the department, for allowance and settlement. In such cases, the statement of the facts, upon which the claim rests, in the form of a petition, is only another mode of asserting the same demand which had previously, and in due time, been presented at the proper department for settlement. These views find support in the fact that the Act of 1868 describes claims presented at an Executive Department for settlement, and which belong to the classes specified in its 7th section, as cases which may be transmitted to the Court of Claims. "And all the cases mentioned in this section, which shall be transmitted by the head of an Executive Department, or upon the certificate of any Auditor or Comptroller, shall be proceeded in as other cases pending in said court, and shall, in all respects, be subject to the same rules and regulations," with right of appeal. The cases thus transmitted for judicial determination are, in the sense of the Act, commenced against the Government when the claim is originally presented at the department for examination and settlement. Upon their transfer to the Court of Claims they are to be "proceeded in as other cases pending in said court."

Whether, if a claim be presented at the proper department when six years have elapsed after it first accrued, the Government is at liberty, upon its transfer therefrom to the Court of Claims, to plead the limitation of six years, or whether the court, in such cases, must itself interpose the statute for the protection of the Government, are questions not necessary to be decided in this case.

Touching the merits of the case, it appears that the appellee was required, by competent military authority, to leave his regiment, then on duty in the District of Humboldt, California, to the command of which he had been previously assigned, and report in person at the headquarters of the Department of the Pacific, in San Francisco, there to await further orders. He remained in that City, absent from his regiment, from about July 25, 1863, until August 1, 1864, awaiting orders. It is immaterial that he performed no active duty while thus awaiting orders. He was subject to assignment for such duty while in San Francisco and, as said by the court below, the responsibility for his non-employment rested with his superior officer. What was said in U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411 [90 U. S., XXIII., 89], has some application here. That case arose under the Act of March 3, 1863, relating to the government of the army, by which it was enacted that any officer absent from duty with leave, except for sickness or wounds, shall, during his absence, receive half the pay and allowances prescribed by law, and no more. Williamson claimed full pay while absent, upon his own request, from his command. He was, however, required to remain at a particular place, and to await orders. Among other things we there said: "The obligations of an officer directed to proceed to a place specified, there to await orders, are quite different. It is his duty to go to that place, and to remain at that place. He cannot go elsewhere; he cannot return until ordered. He is as much under orders, and can no more question the duty of obedience, than if ordered to an ambush to lie in wait for the enemy, to march to the front by a particular direction, or to the rear by a specified time."

Nor is there anything in U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219 [XXIV., 116], in conflict with the conclusion we have reached. We there held that an army officer, at his own home awaiting orders and having no public duty to perform, was not entitled to commutation for quarters or fuel. No such case is presented by the special finding.

Some stress is laid upon the fact that appellee has failed to show affirmatively that he made a demand on the proper officer at San Francisco for quarters and fuel in kind. There is some force in this suggestion, but, under the circumstances of this case, we do not think it should control our judgment. There is no evidence that quarters and fuel could have been furnished in kind. On the contrary, the records of the War Department show that most, if not all, the officers stationed in San Francisco during this period received commutation of quarters and fuel. In the light of all the facts found by the court below, and since it does not appear that the claim was objected to in the War Department upon any such ground, during the thirteen years it lay there, undisposed of, despite the fact that its settlement was steadily pressed by the claimant, we are disinclined to reverse the judgment, because it does not appear affirmatively that appellee, upon his arrival in San Francisco, made a formal requisition for quarters and fuel.

Our conclusion is that, under the law as it stood when appellee's claim accrued, he was entitled to the commuted value of quarters and fuel while in San Francisco awaiting orders.

Judgment affirmed.

Gross negligence—of corporations—special bank deposit—national bank—U. S. bonds.

1. Gross negligence on the part of a gratuitous bailee is a tort, and an action on the case is the appropriate remedy for such wrong.

2. Corporations are liable for every wrong they commit, and in such cases the doctrine of ultra vires has no application.

3. Where a bank is accustomed to take deposits of United States bonds, and this is known and acquiesced in by the directors, and the bonds are lost by the gross carelessness of the bailee, a liability ensues, in like manner as if the deposit had been authorized by the terms of the charter.

4. The 46th section of the Banking Act of 1864, which authorizes a national bank to deliver special deposits, implies clearly that a national bank, as a part of its legitimate business, may receive such special deposits.

5. The phrase "special deposits," thus used, embraces deposits of bonds of the United States.

NOTE.—Special deposits, responsibility of banks for.

In case of a special deposit, the bank merely becomes the bailee of the depositor. The title to the thing deposited remains with the depositor. Boyd v. Bank of Cape Fear, 65 N. C., 13; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass., 479; S. C., 9 Am. Dec. 168; Albany Com. Bank v. Hughes, 17 Wend., 94; Oddie v. Nat. City Bank, 45 N. Y., 735; S. C., 6 Am. Rep., 160. Where money is deposited in a sealed packet, the presumption is that it was intended as a special deposit. Dawson v. Real Est. Bank, 5 Ark., 283.

It would be a breach of trust in the bank or its officers to open such a packet or inspect its contents. Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass., 479; S. C., 9 Am. Dec., 168.

Where funds are deposited in a bank for a special purpose, with notice thereof, the bank cannot withhold it from that purpose for a debt due it. Bk. of U. S. v. Macalester, 9 Pa. St., 475.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

This action was brought in the Court of Common Pleas of Cumberland Co., Pa., by the defendant in error, against the plaintiff in error, to recover the value of certain bonds, the property of the plaintiff, which had been stolen from the vault of the defendant Bank.

Judgment was rendered in the Court of Common Pleas for the plaintiff, and this judgment having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State, the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Geo. H. Williams, for the plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John Hays and Jas. H. Graham & Son, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The capital stock of the Bank was $500,000, divided into 500 shares of $1,000 each. From November 9, 1869, Samuel Hepburn, the president, owned 460 shares. His son, C. H. Hepburn, was the cashier, and he and Hopewell Hepburn, another son and a director, owned ten shares each. From October 19, 1871, H. M. Hepburn, also a son and director, owned ten shares. John G. Orr, the teller and a director, owned the remaining ten shares. With one exception, these persons were directors from the year 1870. In 1867, the defendant in error had $4,000 of 7-30 bonds of the United States deposited in the Bank for safe keeping. They were called in by the government, and at her request the cashier had them converted into the same amount of 5-20 bonds. These also were left in the Bank for safe-keeping. The cashier gave her a receipt, dated October 22d, 1868, setting forth this fact and that the bonds were to be returned on the return of the receipt. The cashier cut off the coupons and collected them and placed the proceeds to her credit on the books of the Bank, and paid her the amount as it was demanded. She kept an account with the Bank. Before and after the times mentioned, the officers of the Bank were accustomed to receive such deposits from others in the same way and for the same purpose. They were entered in a book kept by the Bank. The fact of there being such deposits was frequently spoken of by the directors at meetings of the Board. Some of the directors and quite a number of other persons

Banker is bound for slight care only, and is only responsible for gross negligence. He is bound to take the care of such deposits which an ordinarily prudent man takes of his own property of the same kind. Hale v. Rawallie, 8 Kan., 137; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass., 479; S. C., 9 Am. Dec., 168; Giblin v. McMullen, 38 L. J. P. C., 25; 17 W. R., 445; 2 L. R. P. C., 317; 21 L. T. N. S., 214; Ray v. Bk. of Ky., 10 Bush., 344; Scott v. Nat. Bk. of Chester Valley, 72 Pa. St., 471; Scott v. Crevor, 2 S. C., 522; Boyd v. Bank of Cape Fear, 65 N. C., 13; First Nat. Bk. of Lyons v. Ocean Nat. Bk., 60 N. Y., 278; S. C., 19 Am. Rep., 181.

Special deposit in a bank is at the risk of the depositor, but if converted to purposes of the bank by its officers or agents, they are personally liable. In matter of Franklin Bk., 1 Paige Ch., 249; S. C., 19 Am. Dec., 413.

had such deposits in the Bank. No compensation was expected or received by the institution. It was a bailee without reward. The Bank alleged that, on the 5th of August, 1871, the bonds of the defendant in error were stolen from its vault. She did not learn the fact until some two or three weeks afterwards. She heard that some other securities belonging to her and so deposited had been stolen and, upon inquiry at the Bank, was told that those securities had been found upon a neighboring highway and had been returned, but that her government bonds had been stolen also and had not been recovered. She was requested to say nothing about their loss, and was assured that the interest should be regularly paid to her, and that the value of the bonds should also be made good, so that she should not be a loser. The interest was accordingly paid up to the 1st of July, 1873, inclusive. This suit was brought to recover the value of the bonds.

The defendant in the court below asked the court to instruct the jury that the Bank, being a corporation chartered under the national banking laws, "Was not authorized to receive bonds and valuables for safe-keeping;" that "The act of the cashier in taking the bonds of the plaintiff was not within the scope of his powers and duties as cashier and, therefore, did not bind the Bank; and that the plaintiff could not recover." This instruction the court refused to give, and the defendant excepted.

The jury was instructed that, "To justify a recovery against the defendant in this case, they must be satisfied from the evidence that the plaintiff's bonds were received for safe-keeping with the knowledge and acquiescence of the officers and directors of the Bank, and that if the bonds were lost by the gross negligence of the Bank or its officers, the Bank was liable." The defendant again excepted. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff. The jury thus found and affirmed the facts of knowledge and gross negligence by the Bank. These points are, therefore, conclusively established, and are not open to inquiry.

Conceding for the moment that the contract was illegal and void, for the reason alleged in behalf of the Bank, the consequence insisted upon would by no means follow. There was no moral turpitude on either side; certainly none on the part of the depositor. She was entitled, at any time, to reclaim the securities. The Bank was bound in good faith and in law to return them or to keep them, without gross negligence, until they were called for. If, when applied for, they were refused, it cannot be doubted that they or their value, according to the form of action adopted, might have been recovered. White v. Bk., 22 Pick., 181. If the Bank had destroyed them or had thrown them into the street, whereby they were lost to the plaintiff, the liability of the Bank would have been the same. To have kept them with gross negligence, whereby the same consequence to the plaintiff was incurred, involved necessarily the same result to the depositary. The only way of escape from liability, open to the latter, would have been to return the property to the owner, or to get rid of its possession otherwise in some lawful way. Gross negligence on the part of a gratuitous bailee, though not a fraud, is, in legal effect, the same thing. Foster v. Bk., 17

Mass., 479. It is a tort, and an action on the case is the appropriate remedy for such a wrong. In many cases where there is a valid contract it may be regarded only as inducement and as raising a duty, for the breach of which an action may be brought ex contractu or ex delicto, at the option of the injured party. 1 Chit. Pl., 151.

Corporations are liable for every wrong they commit, and in such cases the doctrine of ultra vires has no application.

They are also liable for the acts of their servants while such servants are engaged in the business of their principal, in the same manner and to the same extent that individuals are liable under like circumstances. Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008]. An action may be maintained against a corporation for its malicious or negligent torts, however foreign they may be to the object of its creation or beyond its granted powers. It may be sued for assault and battery, for fraud and deceit, for false imprisonment, for malicious prosecution, for nuisance and for libel. In certain cases it may be indicted for misfeasance or non-feasance touching duties imposed upon it in which the public are interested. Its offenses may be such as will forfeit its existence. R. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How., 209 [62 U. S., XVI., 75]; 2 Wait, Act. and Def., pp. 337-339; Ang. & A., Corp., secs. 186, 385; Cooley, Torts, pp. 119, 120.

Recurring to the case in hand, it is now well settled that if a bank be accustomed to take such deposits as the one here in question, and this is known and acquiesced in by the directors, and the property deposited is lost by the gross carelessness of the bailee, a liability ensues in like manner as if the deposit had been authorized by the terms of the charter. Foster v. Bk. [supra]; Bk. v. Smith, 62 Pa., 47; Scott v. Bk., 72 Pa., 471; Bk. v. Graham, 79 Pa., 106; Turner v. Bk., 26 Iowa, 562; Smith v. Bk., 99 Mass., 605; Bk. v. Schley, 58 Ga., 369. The only authorities in direct conflict with these adjudications, to which our attention has been called, are Willey v. Bk., 47 Vt., 546, and Whitney v. Bk., 50 Vt., 389.

The case first cited, Foster v. Bk., was argued exhaustively by the most eminent counsel of the time, and decided by a court of great judicial learning and ability. Their opinion is marked by careful elaboration.

The special deposit there was a cask containing gold coin. While it was maintained that the Bank would have been liable for its loss by gross negligence, it was held that such negligence in that case had not been shown.

Here, gross negligence is conclusively established. The depositor kept an account in the Bank. The cashier cut off and collected the coupons, and placed the proceeds to her credit. The bonds, therefore, entered into the legitimate and proper business of the institution. But it is unnecessary to pursue this view of the subject further, because we think there is another ground, free from doubt, upon which our judgment may be rested.

The 46th section of the Banking Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 99, re-enacted in the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 5228, declares that, after the failure of a national bank to pay its circulating notes, etc., "It shall not be lawful for the association suffering the same to pay out any of its notes, discount any notes or bills, or otherwise prosecute the business of banking, except to receive and safely keep moneys belonging to it, and to deliver special deposits." This implies clearly that a national bank, as a part of its legitimate business, may receive such "special deposits," and this implication is as effectual as an express declaration of the same thing would have been. U.S.v. Babbitt, 1 Black, 55 [66 U. S., XVII., 94].

The phrase "special deposits" thus used, embraces deposits such as that here in question. Patterson v. Bk., Court of Appeals of New York, recently decided and not yet reported, [80 N. Y., 82]. In that case it was said "A reference to the history of banking discloses that the chief, and in some cases the only, deposits received by the early banks were special deposits of money, bullion, plate, etc., for safe-keeping, and to be specifically returned to the depositor; and such was the character of the business done by the Bank of Venice (the earliest bank) and the old Bank of Amsterdam, and the same business was done by the Goldsmiths of London and the Bank of England, and we know of none of the earlier banks where it was not done."

It would, undoubtedly, be competent for a national bank to receive a special deposit of such securities as those here in question, either on a contract of hiring or without reward, and it would be liable for a greater or less degree of negligence accordingly.

We do not mean that it could convert itself into a pawnbroker's shop. That subject involves topics alien to the case before us, and which in this opinion it is unnecessary to consider.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is affirmed.

Tax on tobacco.

* Manufactured tobacco, shipped in bond from the manufactory and stored in an export bonded warehouse on the 14th June, 1872, was subject to the tax of thirty-two cents per pound, as prescribed in the Internal Revenue Act of July 20, 1868. It was not entitled to the benefit of the reduced tax of twenty cents per pound prescribed by the Act of June 6, 1872, amendatory of the Act of July 20, 1868.

Submitted Mar. 10, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

This action was brought in one of the District Courts of Louisiana by Blackwell, the defendant in error, against S. A. Stockdale, to recover damages sustained upon certain packages of tobacco which, he alleged, were illegally detained in a warehouse, in bond, by the defendant, in his capacity of Collector of United States Internal Revenue. The case was removed to the court below, and upon the first trial verdict was for the defendant. This verdict was set aside and upon a new trial verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered. The defendant having died pendente lite, the suit was revived against his representative, who has brought the case to this court by writ of error.

* Head note by Mr. Justice HARLAN.

The case further appears in the opinion.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. D. Rouse, W. A. Maury and William Grant, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice HARLAN delivered the opinion of the court:

The tobacco described in the petition was shipped by the defendant in error, in bond, from the manufactory in Virginia to the Port of New Orleans, and was there entered in bond in an export bonded warehouse on the 13th June, 1872. On the first of July next thereafter, he, by his agents, applied to the Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Collection District of Louisiana, including the City of New Orleans, to withdraw the tobacco for sale or consumption, offering to pay a tax on the same at the rate of twenty cents per pound, as prescribed in the Act of June 6, 1872. 17 Stat. at L., 249. The Collector refused to permit its withdrawal, unless a tax at the rate of thirty-two cents per pound was first paid, as prescribed by the Act of July 20, 1868. 15 Stat. at L., 152.

Upon the trial in the court below the jury were instructed, among other things, that, on and after July 1, 1872, and prior to March 3, 1873, the only tax imposed by law upon manufactured tobacco was twenty cents per pound. The principal question before us is as to the correctness of that instruction.

By the 1st section of the Act of July 20, 1868, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound was imposed upon all manufactured tobacco. The same Act provided for a system of export bonded warehouses, to be designated and established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at any port of entry in the United States, "For the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff in bond intended for exportation." Manufactured tobacco, after being removed in bond from the manufactory to an export bonded warehouse, could, however, be withdrawn, upon payment of tax, for sale or consumption.

Up to November 21, 1871, on which day the commissioner submitted his annual report of the operations of the internal revenue system for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1871, there had been established and were in operation, sixteen of such export bonded warehouses. They were located in Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Louisiana, California and Oregon. From the report of the commissioner, of which we may take judicial notice, it appears that the quantity withdrawn for exportation from the several export bonded warehouses during that fiscal year, was 10,621,183 pounds, while the quantity withdrawn for consumption from the several bonded warehouses during the same period was 11,499,659 pounds, showing that less than one half of the tobacco and snuff received in bond from the manufactory was actually exported. The commissioner stated that from the eight bonded warehouses, established at the several Ports of Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco and Portland, Oregon, in which were stored during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1871, 9,437,257 pounds of manufactured tobacco, only 437,495 pounds during that period were withdrawn for exportation, while 8,480,656 pounds were withdrawn for consumption. "The practical operation," said he, "of this system of bonded warehouses hitherto has been to give to a few individuals and firms, more particularly the proprietors of the warehouses, the same facilities for storing tobacco, without the prepayment of tax, as were given by the former system of class B, bonded warehouses, abolished by the Act of July 20, 1868." He, therefore, recommended the abolition of the system of export bonded warehouses, as required by the best interests both of the government and of the manufacturer. The benefits to result from such abolition were that "A large portion of the expenses now (then) incurred by the manufacturers in exporting their goods would be saved, the government would receive the taxes on all goods when removed from the place of manufacture, all jobbers and dealers in manufactured tobacco would be placed on the same footing with regard to the traffic in tax-paid goods, and the special privileges and advantages enjoyed by a few individuals and firms would be removed."

It was, doubtless, because of these official recommendations from the head of the internal revenue system that Congress made the numerous amendments of the Act of July 20, 1868, which appear in the Act of June 6, 1872.

The contention of the defendant in error is, that while all manufactured tobacco stored in export bonded warehouses and withdrawn for sale or consumption before the first day of July, 1872, was subject to the tax prescribed by the Act of July 20, 1868, all found stored in such warehouses on the first of July, 1872, without regard to the date of its deposit therein in bond was subject, upon withdrawal on and after that date, for sale or consumption, to the reduced tax prescribed by the Act of June 6, 1872. To this construction of the statute we cannot yield our assent.

It is true that the Act of June 6, 1872, which took effect on the first of August, 1872, "except where otherwise provided," declares "That on and after the first day of July next," that is, July 1, 1872, there shall be assessed and collected on manufactured tobacco a tax of twenty cents per pound. But the section (sec. 31) which so declares must be interpreted in connection with other provisions of the Act, and with reference to the reasons which caused the radical changes made by that Act in the internal revenue system as previously established. We have already seen that the attention of Congress was called to the evils which had grown up under the system of export bonded warehouses, and to the necessity of its abolition. The Act of June 6, 1872, gave effect to the recommendations of the commissioner, and made such provisions as would enable him to dispense with such warehouses altogether. But a specific provision was made as to tobacco which had been previously placed in export bonded warehouses under the Act of June 20, 1868. It was declared, "All tobacco and snuff now stored in any export bonded warehouse shall, on and after July 1, 1872, be subject to the same tax as is provided by this Act, and shall, within six months after the passage of this Act, be withdrawn from such warehouse upon payment of the tax, or for export, under the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue now in force concerning withdrawals of tobacco or snuff from bonded warehouses. And any tobacco or snuff remaining in any export bonded warehouse for a period of more than six months after the passage of this Act shall be forfeited to the United States, and shall be sold or disposed of for the benefit of the same in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury." We entertain no doubt as to the object of this provision. It evidently refers only to tobacco stored in export bonded warehouses at the date of the passage of the Act, and not, also, as claimed by the defendant in error, to that stored in such warehouses, after that date, and before the first of July, 1872. If Congress intended that all manufactured tobacco, whether at the manufactory or in an export bonded warehouse, should, on the first of July, 1872, have the benefit of the reduced tax of twenty cents, there would have been no necessity for a special declaration that tobacco "now," that is, at the passage of the Act, stored in export bonded warehouses should, on and after first July, 1872, be subject to the tax prescribed by the Act of June 6, 1872. The necessity for such declaration lay in the fact that unless tobacco, deposited in export bonded warehouses prior to that Act, was, in express terms, given the benefit of the reduced tax, it would be liable to the tax of thirty-two cents imposed by the Act of July 20, 1868. This will become perfectly clear when attention is given to the regulations which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had prescribed, and which were then in force, in reference to the shipment of tobacco in bond from the manufactory to an export bonded warehouse. Before any shipment could take place, it was necessary that an inspector should inspect, weigh and mark each package of tobacco proposed to be shipped to an export bonded warehouse. His report of inspection indicated the marks and numbers of each package, the number of packages and their contents, the number of pounds, the rate and amount of tax. All these items were carried into the transportation bond which the shipper was required to execute. They appeared also in the report of inspection when the tobacco reached its destination; and, finally, when the tobacco was received by the storekeeper at the export bonded warehouse, the shipper was required to execute a bond, with surety, binding him to pay "the amount of taxes due and owing" on the tobacco, the rate and amount of tax due thereon being described on the face of the bond, and being the same as that shown in the certificate of the inspector. So that, as to all tobacco in export bonded warehouses on 6th June, 1872, the government then held bonds obligating the parties thereto to pay the tax, as to rate and amount, which appeared on all the official documents connected with the transportation from the manufactory to the bonded warehouse. Hence the specific provision giving the owners of tobacco, stored in export bonded warehouses on 6th June, 1872, the benefit, on and after the first of July, 1872, of the reduced tax, as well as the privilege of keeping it there for six months without removal or payment of tax.

But when Congress declared that tobacco stored in such warehouses, at the date of the passage of the Act of June 6, 1872, should be subject to the tax provided by that Act, it does not at all follow that tobacco stored in export bonded warehouses after the passage of that Act, and before July 1, 1872, when the reduced tax took effect, was entitled to the benefit of the reduction. Such a construction of the Act would be inconsistent with the policy which dictated the abolition of the system of export warehouses, as well as with the necessary implications arising from the specific provision as to tobacco stored in such warehouses at the date of the Act. It deprives the word "now," in the clause we have quoted, of all meaning. If the tobacco in question had remained in the manufactory until July 1, 1872, it would have been subject to a tax of only twenty cents; but it could not on that day, and under the Act of June 6, 1872, have been removed therefrom for sale or consumption except upon payment of the tax. If, however, the defendant in error chose not to wait until that date, when the reduction would take effect as to all tobacco in the manufactory, but preferred to ship it in bond to an export bonded warehouse between June 6, 1872, and July 1, 1872, he must abide by the terms of the bond given at the time his tobacco was deposited in such warehouse. His bond, upon its face, recites, if the statute was complied with, the rate and amount of tax prescribed by the law in force when the bond was executed. He could not satisfy its terms except by paying the amount it called for. That Congress gave the owners of tobacco stored in bonded warehouses on 6th June, 1872, the benefit of the reduced tax, constitutes no reason why such reduction should be applied to tobacco stored in such warehouses after that date, when the owner had, prior to July 1, 1872, given bond covering the tax due under the then existing law. If the Act of June 6, 1872, had prescribed an increase of tax to take effect on the first day of July thereafter no one would contend that such increase would have applied to tobacco stored in an export bonded warehouse between June 6, 1872, and July 1, 1872. That Congress reduced rather than increased the tax, to be assessed and collected on and after July 1, 1872, does not authorize the court to relieve the defendant in error from the obligations of his bond, given prior to that date, to pay the tax as ascertained and fixed by the law in force when it was executed; especially since the Act of June 6, 1872, did not go into effect before July 1, 1872, as to the reduced tax, except as to tobacco stored in export bonded warehouses on 6th June, 1872.

It results from what has been said, that the Collector rightly demanded a payment of thirty-two cents per pound on defendant in error's tobacco, when, on July 1, 1872, he applied to withdraw it for sale or consumption.

Nor was the Collector responsible for any damage to the tobacco resulting from the delay in obtaining the necessary stamps after Blackwell's demand in August, 1872. The Collector was then, it is true, without the necessary stamps, but he made requisition for them upon the proper authorities at Washington. In view of the refusal of the appellee to pay the tax upon the first application for withdrawal on 1st July, 1872, the Collector was justified in believing that defendant in error would not pay the required tax, and he was, therefore, under no obligation to keep stamps constantly in readiness for him.

We perceive in the evidence no just ground upon which to rest a verdict against the plaintiff in error. The jury should have been instructed to find in her behalf.

The judgment is reversed, with directions for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

HOWE MACHINE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.
v.

JESSE GAGE, CLERK OF THE COUNTY COURT OF SUMNER COUNTY.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 676-679.)

Tax on peddlers, when valid.

A state tax on peddlers of sewing-machines, which applies alike to sewing-machines manufactured in the State and out of it, is valid, and not repugnant to the U. S. Constitution.

Submitted Mar. 12, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. R. McP. Smith and Morton B. Howell, for plaintiff in error.

No counsel appeared for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The Howe Machine Company is a Corporation of the State of Connecticut. It manufactured sewing-machines at Bridgeport, in that State, and had an agency at Nashville, in the State of Tennessee. From the latter place, an agent was sent into Sumner County to sell machines there. A tax was demanded from him for a peddlers' license to make such sales. He denied the validity of the law under which the tax was claimed, but, according to a law of the State, paid the amount demanded, and brought this suit to recover it back. He was defeated in the lower court, and the judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State.

The Constitution of Tennessee, art. 11, sec. 30, declares that "No article manufactured of the produce of this State shall be taxed otherwise than to pay inspection fees."

"Sales by peddlers, of articles manufactured or made up in this State, and scientific or religious books, are exempt from taxation." Code of Tenn., sec. 546.

NOTE.—Power of States to tax. See note to Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.), 514; and note to Dobbins v. Erie Co., 41 U. S. (16 Pet.), 435.

"All articles manufactured of the produce of the State" are exempt from assessment or taxation. Acts of 1875, ch. 98, sec. 10.

"All peddlers of sewing-machines and selling by sample" shall pay a tax of ten dollars. Code, sec. 553 a, subsec. 43.

By a subsequent Act of the Legislature, this tax was increased to $15.

The sewing-machines here in question were made in Connecticut. The Supreme Court of the State held, in this case, "That the law taxing the peddlers of such machines, levied the tax upon all peddlers of sewing-machines, without regard to the place of growth or produce of material or of manufacture."

We are bound to regard this construction as correct, and to give it the same effect as if it were a part of the statute. Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 [67 U. S., XVII., 261].

The question presented for our consideration is not difficult of solution. A brief reference, however, to some of the adjudications of this court, bearing with more or less directness upon the subject, may not be without interest.

A State cannot require a license to be taken out to sell foreign goods while remaining in the packages in which they were imported. Such a law is contrary to the provision of the Constitution of the United States touching the laying of imposts by a State, and to the commerce clause of that instrument. Brown v. Md., 12 Wheat, 419.

A State cannot give to the master and wardens of a port, in addition to other fees, the sum of $5, whether they are called on to perform any service or not, for every vessel arriving in the port. This would be a regulation of commerce and a tonnage duty, both involving the exercise of a power which is withheld from the States. Steamship Co. v. Portwardens, 6 Wall., 31 [73 U. S., XVIII., 749].

A purchaser of goods coming from abroad, the goods to be at his risk until delivered to him, is not an importer, and the goods may be taxed while in the original packages. Waring v. Mayor, 8 Wall., 110 [75 U. S., XIX., 342].

The provision in the National Constitution that "No State shall levy imposts or duties on imports or exports," does not refer to articles brought from one State into another, but exclusively to articles imported from foreign countries. Hence, a tax imposed by a State upon all auction sales, whether by citizens of such State or of another State, and whether the articles are the products of such State or of another State, without any discrimination, is valid. Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall., 123 [75 U. S., XIX., 382].

Where a State imposes the same rate of taxation upon like articles, whether brought from another State or the products of the State imposing the tax, the tax may be enforced. Hinson v. Lott, 8 Wall., 148 [75 U. S., XIX., 387].

A State cannot impose a higher tax upon peddlers from another State, than is imposed upon her own citizens under like circumstances. Any discrimination in favor of the latter is fatal to the statute. Ward v. Md., 12 Wall., 163, 418 [79 U. S., XX., 260, 449].

A State cannot impose a tonnage tax upon vessels belonging to her own citizens, and engaged exclusively in commerce between places within her own limits. State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall., 204 [79 U. S., XX., 370].

A state law, imposing a tax upon freight brought into, taken from or carried through the State, is a regulation of commerce, and contrary to the provision of the Constitution which declares that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, between the several States, and with the Indian Tribes," Case of the State Freight Tax, 15 Wall., 232 [82 U. S., XXI., 146].

A State cannot impose a tonnage tax upon vessels owned in foreign ports, to defray the expenses of administering her quarantine regulations. Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall., 581 [86 U. S., XXII., 201].

A tax for a license to sell goods is, in effect, a tax on the goods authorized to be sold.

A law which requires a license to be taken out by peddlers who sell articles not produced in the State, and requires no such license with respect to those who sell in the same way articles which are produced in the State, is in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign Nations and among the several States. This power applies to articles taken from one State into another, until they become mingled with and a part of the property of the latter, and thereafter protects such articles from any burden imposed by reason of their foreign origin.

The non-exercise, by Congress, of the power to regulate interstate commerce is equivalent to a declaration that it shall be free from any restrictions. Welton v. Mo., 91 U. S., 275 [XXIII., 347].

A State may demand from a vessel a list of passengers, with their ages, places of birth, occupations, last place of legal settlement, etc. Such a requirement is a police regulation. [N. Y. City v. Miln.], 11 Pet., 102.

But it cannot require a sum to be paid for each passenger landed. [Passenger Cases], 7 How., 283.

A statute which imposes a heavily burdensome condition upon a shipmaster, as a prerequisite to landing his passengers, and allows him the alternative of paying a small sum for each one landed, is a regulation of commerce and, therefore, void.

What may be done by a State to protect itself from the influx of paupers and convicted criminals, in the absence of legislation on the subject by Congress, is left undecided. Henderson v. Mayor of N. Y., 92 U. S., 259 [XXIII., 543].

A tax by a State on the amount of goods sold at auction is a tax upon the goods so sold. A law which requires every auctioneer to pay into the state treasury a tax on his sales is, when applied to goods imported and sold in the original packages, in conflict with sections 8 and 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States and, therefore, invalid. Cook v. Pa., 97 U. S., 566 [XXIV., 1015].

A State cannot, by law, authorize a municipal corporation to exact such wharfage as it may deem reasonable from vessels using certain designated wharves, and laden with articles not the products of the State, while vessels laden with such products of the State are exempted from any charge whatever. Such a statute, and an ordinance enacted by the corporation to carry it out, are void. They are a regulation of commerce. Guy v. Baltimore, not yet reported [ante, 743].

In all cases of this class to which the one before us belongs, it is a test question whether there is any discrimination in favor of the State or of the citizens of the State which enacted the law. Wherever there is, such discrimination is fatal. Other considerations may lead to the same result.

In the case before us, the statute in question, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State, makes no such discrimination. It applies alike to sewing-machines manufactured in the State and out of it. The exaction is not an unusual or unreasonable one. The State, putting all such machines upon the same footing with respect to the tax complained of, had an unquestionable right to impose the burden. Woodruff v. Parham [supra]; Hinson v. Lott [supra]; Ward v. Md. [supra]; Welton v. Missouri [supra].

The judgment is affirmed.

Furlough—extra pay.

1. The Secretary may put an employé of a department on furlough without pay, at any time, if the exigencies of the service require it.

2. The Joint Resolution of Congress of June 23, 1874, contemplated the extra pay only when discharges occurred in consequence of a reduction of clerical force made necessary by the legislation of that Session of Congress.

Argued Mar. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. John N. Oliver, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 3d of May, 1873, Murray, the claimant, was appointed to a clerkship of class 1, in the Treasury Department, for a probationary term of three months. At the end of that period, the Board of Examiners having reported favorably on his fitness for a clerkship of that class, he was, on the 5th of November, re-appointed, and assigned to duty in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from the 3d of that month.

Owing to the abolition by law of the offices of Assessor and Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, in May, 1873, a large additional amount of labor was thrown on the office of the Commissioner, to meet which more clerical force became necessary, and was employed during the summer, fall and winter following. This unusual demand upon the appropriation for clerical service in that office for the year ending June 30, 1874, caused an early partial exhaustion of that appropriation, and created a necessity to dispense with the services of a number of the clerks employed in that office from different dates in January and February, 1874, till the close of the official year. In consequence of that necessity, leave of absence without pay was given some of the clerks until the end of the year. Murray was included among the rest, and his leave dated on the first of February. Leave of absence was granted instead of an absolute dismissal from office, as a favor to the clerks, and to give them an opportunity of getting a transfer to some other bureau, if opportunity offered. The order of leave was accompanied by a notice that, if a transfer should not be effected, dismissal would occur at the end of the year.

On the 23d of June, 1874, 18 Stat. at L., 289, Congress passed the following Joint Resolution:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized to pay, when discharged, two months' pay to such clerks and employés of the Executive Departments in Washington, D. C., as shall be discharged at the close of the present fiscal year without fault on their part, but by reason of the reductions made necessary by the legislation of the present session of Congress: Provided, That the amount paid under this Resolution shall be deducted from the salary of any person receiving the same who shall be re-appointed within six months from the date of such discharge."

Murray performed no service after the date of his furlough, and at the end of the fiscal year was dismissed, with a note from the Secretary of the Treasury as follows:

"SIR, The necessity for your services in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue no longer existing, they terminated January 31, 1874, on which date you ceased to serve."

This suit was brought to recover pay for the time included in the furlough, and also for the two months allowed by the Joint Resolution of Congress. The Court of Claims being divided in opinion, gave a pro forma judgment for the full amount of the claim, and from that judgment the United States appealed.

To our minds it is clear the judgment below was wrong. While under the regulations of the department an employé is not entitled to a leave of absence with pay for more than thirty days in any one year, there is nothing to prevent the Secretary from putting him on furlough without pay at any time, if the exigencies of the service require it. He may be dismissed absolutely, and it is difficult to see why, if this can be done, he may not be furloughed without pay, which is, in effect, a partial dismissal. If he desires to be free from all obligations to serve in the future he may resign; but if he permits his name to continue on the rolls, it must be on such terms as are imposed by the department. In this case, an extraordinary demand for clerical service caused an early partial exhaustion of the appropriation for the year, and it became necessary to dispense with a part of the force, so as to reduce the expenses of the office. Absolute dismissals were not made; but, as a favor to the clerks, their names were kept on the rolls without pay. Murray remonstrated against what was done, but seems to have preferred the furlough to an absolute discharge. Under these circumstances, having rendered no service, he cannot claim compensation.

Neither do we think the case comes within the provision of the Joint Resolution of Congress. That Resolution contemplated the extra pay only when discharges occurred in consequence of a reduction of clerical force made necessary by the legislation of that session of Congress. It nowhere appears that Murray was discharged on any such account. On the contrary, the fair inference from the findings below is, that he was appointed originally on account of the necessary temporary increase of force brought about by the abolition of the offices of Assessor and Assistant Assessor, under a law of the previous session, and that he was discharged because the additional labor was no longer required. He was kept on furlough in order that he might, if possible, effect a transfer to some other branch of the service. This clearly implies that the special work to which he had been assigned was finished. At any rate, it does not appear affirmatively or by any fair implication that his discharge was made necessary on account of any legislation which was had at the session of Congress at which the Resolution was adopted.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the petition.

Trustee of railroad mortgage—bill of review—money to complete unfinished railroad—foreclosure—interested trustee.

1. The trustee of a railroad mortgage represents the bondholders in all legal proceedings carried on by him affecting his trust, to which they are not actual parties, and whatever binds him, if he acts in good faith, binds them.

2. If a bondholder, not a party to the suit, can, under any circumstances, bring a bill of review, he can have only such relief as the trustee would be entitled to in the same proceeding. To avoid what the trustee has done in his behalf, he must proceed in some other way than by bill of review.

3. The power of the courts ought never to be used in enabling railroad mortgagees to protect their securities by borrowing money to complete unfinished roads, except under extraordinary circumstances.

4. The bare fact that some of the trustees were holders of bonds secured by their trust, is not sufficient to make them incompetent to consent to a decree of foreclosure embodying a plan for reorganization.

5. When everything is honestly done by the trustee, and the courts are satisfied that the rights of others have not been prejudiced to the advantage of the trustee, the simple fact of interest is not sufficient to justify the withholding of a confirmation of his acts.

A PPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. B. C. Brown, for appellants.

Mr. C. W. Huntington, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases present the following facts:

On the 9th of February, 1853, 10 Stat. at L., 155, Congress granted lands to the State of Arkansas to aid in building a railroad. Power was given the State to sell the lands only as the road was completed in sections of twenty miles each. If the road was not finished in a time which was named, all lands not sold were to revert to the United States. A part of the lands thus donated by Congress were granted by the State to the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company.

On the 22d of December, 1869, the Railroad Company executed a mortgage on its railroad, completed and to be completed, to Henry W. Paine and Samuel T. Dana, as trustees, to secure an issue of bonds amounting in the aggregate to $3,500,000, payable January 1, 1890, with interest semi-annually at six per cent per annum, and on the 20th of June, 1870, it executed another mortgage on its land grant, earned and to be earned, to Paine, Dana and William B. Stevens, to secure another issue of bonds for $5,000,000, payable April 1, 1900, with interest semi-annually at seven per cent per annum. Each of the mortgages contained this clause:

"In case default shall be made in the payment of any half-year's interest on any of the said bonds, at the time and in the manner in the coupon issued therewith provided, the said coupons having been presented and the payment of the interest therein specified having been demanded, and such default shall continue for the period of three months after said coupons shall have become due, and been demanded as aforesaid, then and thereupon the principal of all the said bonds shall, at the election of the trustees become immediately due and payable."

On the 12th of May, 1874, all the bonds provided for in both these mortgages had been put out and one hundred miles of the road built. About sixty miles remained to be completed, and the Company was without funds or credit. All interest on the bonds falling due January 1, 1871, and thereafter, was in arrear and unpaid. Thereupon, Paine, a citizen of Massachusetts, at that time the only trustee of the mortgage of the railroad, and Paine, Stevens and Charles W. Huntington, all citizens of Massachusetts, then the trustees of the land-grant mortgage, commenced suits in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas to foreclose their respective mortgages. In each of the bills the necessary averments of fact were made to entitle the parties to a decree of sale, and the trustees elected to treat the principal of the bonds as due. All the necessary defendants, including certain judgment creditors, were made, and there was nothing at that time in the citizenship of the parties to interfere with the jurisdiction of the court. No. 159 is the suit upon the railroad mortgage, and No. 160 that on the land-grant.

Afterwards, changes in the trustees were made, so that Charles W. Huntington and Samuel H. Gookin represented the railroad mortgage, and Huntington, Gookin and Samuel Atkins the land-grant. The proper substitutions were made on the record, the new trustees all being citizens of Massachusetts.

Subsequently, on the 3d of October, 1874, an amendment was made to the bill for the foreclosure of the railroad mortgage, by which Atkins, one of the trustees of the land-grant mortgage, and other persons, citizens of Massachusetts, were brought in as defendants to that suit. The object of this amendment was to obtain the appointment of a receiver of the property with a view to raising money on receivers' certificates to complete the road and save the unearned land-grant. No such appointment was made however, and nothing was done under the amendment. On the 6th of November, a decree was entered in each of the cases, finding that the mortgage sued on was a valid and subsisting lien on the mortgaged property; that the whole amount of the bonds in each case had been issued and, with the interest thereon, was due and unpaid; and ordering the mortgaged property to be sold unless the debt, principal and interest, was paid on or before the 10th of December then next. Provision was also made in each case for a distribution of the proceeds of the sales among the bondholders.

After this decree was rendered, a public meeting of the holders of both classes of bonds was called in Boston on full notice and, as the result of that meeting, George O. Shattuck, Francis M. Weld and George Ripley were appointed by parties representing in the aggregate $6,097,000 of the bonds, to purchase the mortgaged property for the benefit of the bondholders. They, accordingly, appeared at the sale and became the purchasers of the railroad for $50,000, and the land-grant for the same amount. The sale was duly reported to the court on the 19th of December, when the purchasers appeared and declared in open court, and desired to have it recorded, that it was their intention to organize a corporation under the laws of Arkansas, to own, hold and manage the property bought at the sales, and that the holder of any of the bonds secured by either mortgage might, within sixty days from the time of the organization of the corporation, transfer to it his bonds and his right to the proceeds of the sale, and become entitled to his proportionate interest in the stock of the new Corporation, upon the same terms and stipulations as any other holder of the bonds; but this was not to prevent the new Corporation from requiring from any and all bondholders the payment of his proportion of the expenses attending the sales and purchases, and such other sums not exceeding five per cent of the principal of the bonds as it might deem for its interests to require, as a condition on which the stock should be delivered; provided that the same requirement should be made of all the other holders of bonds, and provided, further, that this stipulation should not limit the power of the purchasers to organize the Corporation without notice, or of the Corporation so organized to mortgage its property, or to reserve for its own use an amount of its capital stock, not exceeding ten per cent thereof. At the same time the several trustees appeared in court and consented to a confirmation of the sales upon the agreement that the stipulations of the purchasers thus given be embodied in the decrees approving and confirming the sales. Thereupon, appropriate orders of confirmation containing the required stipulations were entered, and the proper conveyances made. In the order confirming the sale under the land-grant mortgage, it was provided that the new Corporation should, as part of the consideration for the conveyance, compromise or pay such claims against the old Company as Huntington, Ripley and Henry A. Whitney might within one year approve, and upon such terms and in such manner as they should prescribe.

On the 22d of February, 1875, Charles H. Richardson, Frank Shaw and David S. Greenough, of Boston, representing themselves to be holders of a large amount of the bonds, filed their petition in court, asking that the decree of confirmation might be modified by striking out the clause requiring payment of the claims against the Railroad Company, and that the provisions of the decrees relating to the exchange of bonds for stock in the new Corporation might be extended until the question of modification should be decided. As one of the grounds of this application, it was alleged that Weld and Atkins were creditors of the Railroad Company. This petition was answered by the several trustees explaining the facts. On the 13th of April, the time for exchanging bonds for stock in the new Corporation was extended for sixty days, and the order for the payment of claims against the Railroad Company so modified as to make the approval of a claim by the court necessary before it could be paid, and providing for notice to Richardson, Greenough and Shaw whenever a claim was presented for allowance.

On the 6th of July, 1875, Greenough, as owner of $58,000 of the bonds, and Shaw, as owner of $11,000, filed in the circuit court, in each of the cases, what is denominated a bill of review, in which they ask that the decrees be reviewed and reversed, and they placed in the same situation they would have been if the decrees had not been rendered. The errors complained of relate to the sufficiency of the allegations in the original bills; the confirmation of the sales, by the consent of the trustees, upon the terms stipulated for; a want of jurisdiction in the court, as the complainants and many of the defendants were citizens of the same State; and the rendition of a decree against the Railroad Company, without service of subpoena, after filing the amended bill. It was also alleged that Gookin and Atkins, trustees of the mortgages, were holders of bonds secured by the respective trusts. Demurrers to both bills were filed, which the court below sustained, and dismissed the suits. Shaw and Greenough thereupon appealed.

We think it clear that the appellants are not entitled to the relief they ask. They were not parties to the original suits, except through their trustees, against whom they make no charges. Indeed, their counsel says in his brief: "It is probable that they (the trustees) believed that they were doing the best possible for their beneficiaries." The trustee of a railroad mortgage represents the bondholders in all legal proceedings carried on by him affecting his trust, to which they are not actual parties, and whatever binds him, if he acts in good faith, binds them. If a bondholder not a party to the suit can, under any circumstances, bring a bill of review, he can only have such relief as the trustee would be entitled to in the same form of proceeding. To avoid what the trustee has done in his behalf, he must proceed in some other way than by bill of review. All the errors complained of in these bills of review, as occurring before the confirmation of the sale, are such as affect only the Railroad Company injuriously. If, in fact, they are errors at all, they were in favor of the trustees and those they represent, and not against them. Of these the trustees could not complain. As no relief was granted, under the amendment to the bill in the foreclosure of the railroad mortgage, the court clearly had jurisdiction of that case for the purposes of the decree as rendered.

But if the bills, as filed, are original in their character, to set aside the decrees complained of and not for review only, the appellants are in no better condition. The trustees had an undoubted right to commence these suits when they did, and it is apparent from the whole record, that all their proceedings, both before and after the sale, were in the interest of their beneficiaries generally, since one hundred and eighty in number, representing, in the aggregate, $8,000,000 out of the $8,500,000 of bonds outstanding, accepted the result and exchanged their bonds for stock in the new Corporation. To allow a small minority of bondholders, representing a comparatively insignificant amount of the mortgage debt, in the absence of any pretense even of fraud or unfairness, to defeat the wishes of such an overwhelming majority of those associated with them in the benefits of their common security, would be to ignore entirely the relation which bondholders, secured by a railroad mortgage, bear to each other. Railroad mortgages are a peculiar class of securities. The trustee represents the mortgage, and in executing his trust may exercise his own discretion within the scope of his powers. If there are differences of opinion among the bondholders as to what their interests require, it is not improper that he should be governed by the voice of the majority, acting in good faith and without collusion, if what they ask is not inconsistent with the provisions of his trust. This Company and these trustees were peculiarly situated. The road was unfinished, and the land-grant, to a large extent, unearned. While the mortgages, as they stood, were first liens, there was great danger that their value would be seriously impaired unless more money could be raised. The attention of both the trustees and bondholders was called to that fact and, at first, it seems to have been thought that the end might be accomplished through the instrumentality of a receiver and receiver's certificates. This, necessarily, contemplated the creation of a lien on the mortgaged property superior to that which then existed. Although the mortgages were separate and on separate properties, the value of each depended, to a large extent, on the ability of the Railroad Company to finish its road.

For some reason the idea of a receiver and receiver's certificates seems to have been abandoned, and what, to our minds, was a much more desirable plan adopted. The power of the See 10 OTTO.

courts ought never to be used in enabling railroad mortgagees to protect their securities by borrowing money to complete unfinished roads, except under extraordinary circumstances. It is always better to do what was done here whenever it can be; that is to say, reorganize the enterprise on the basis of existing mortgages as stock, or something which is equivalent, and by a new mortgage, with a lien superior to the old, raise the money which is required without asking the courts to engage in the business of railroad building. The result, so far as encumbering the mortgage security is concerned, is the same substantially in both cases, while the reorganization places the whole enterprise in the hands of those immediately interested in its successful prosecution.

The bare fact that some of the trustees were holders of bonds secured by their trust, is not sufficient of itself to make them incompetent to consent to such a decree as was rendered. From the whole case it is apparent that from the beginning their conduct was governed by the wishes of a very large majority of bondholders. If there was anywhere the slightest evidence of fraud or unfaithfulness, their conduct would be carefully scrutinized. The acts of trustees, when personally interested, should always be open and fair. Slight circumstances will sometimes be considered sufficient proof of wrong to justify setting aside what has been done. But when everything is honestly done, and the courts are satisfied that the rights of others have not been prejudiced to the advantage of the trustee, the simple fact of interest is not sufficient to justify the withholding of a confirmation of his acts.

Here the name of Gookin, one of the trustees, appears in the list of bondholders appointing the committee to make the purchase at the sale as the holder of $200,000 of the bonds. Associated with him in the list were others representing near $6,000,000. His name openly appeared on the paper when the court was asked to confirm the sale on the conditions agreed to. Certainly, this is not sufficient to defeat the plan to which he and his associates gave their consent. Atkins, another trustee, was a creditor of the Company, whose debt came within the provision made in the decree for payment by the new Corporation. All this was fully explained to the court when the modification of the decree in this particular was asked for, and since no claim can now be paid except with the approval of the court after notice to the appellants, we see no reason why what has already been done is not sufficient for the protection of all concerned.

On the whole, we see no reason for interfering with the decrees below, and they are each, therefore, affirmed.

Confiscation.

Where cotton was seized under the Confiscation Act by order of the district court, and that court ordered the cotton to be sold and the proceeds to be deposited in a bank to the credit of its clerk, and the bank failed, the United States is not liable to the owner of the cotton for such proceeds, after the condemnation proceedings against him were dismissed, although the bank was a designated depository of public money.

Argued Mar. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The opinion of the court below is reported in 12 Ct. of Claims, 281.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Theo. H. N. McPherson and Thomas Wilson, for appellants:

The proceeds arising from the sale of the appellants' property was placed in the Selma depository, by an officer of the District Court, upon instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, that the First National Bank of Selma had been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a depository for the public moneys; and the Clerk of the Court was required, under the law, to deposit the money in the said Selma depository (sec. 5492 R. S., Acts March 3, 1857, and August 6, 1846); therefore the responsibility of this act must rest with the appellee.

Ex parte Morris, 9 Wall., 605 (76 U. S., XIX., 799); secs. 310, 3644, 5489, R. S.

Again; if any loss accrued to the appellee by the failure of the Selma depository, it must have been produced by neglect to enforce the law, as the Act of June 3, 1864, sec. 5153 R. S., provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated, as depositaries of public moneys, to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the further performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government.

It appears, by the act of the appellee, that it regarded the money as public money; after seizing, condemning and converting said property into money, the U. S. directed it to be placed in a bank which had been designated as a depository of public moneys, where it could not have been deposited if it had not been public money; but, being placed in said depository, it was subject to transfer, by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the credit of the Treasurer, as other public money (sec. 3640, R. S. Act Aug. 6, 1846), which made it subject to the draft of the Treasurer of the U. S. (Secs. 3644, 3593, Act, Aug., 6, 1846).

This, then, is an action for money had and received.

No priority of contract between the parties is required in order to support this claim, except that which results from the fact of one man's having the money of another which he cannot conscientiously retain.

Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass., 563; Hall v. Mars-ton, 17 Mass., 579; Bk. v. Smith, 5 Conn., 71; Rapalje v. Emory, 2 Dall., 54.

When money has been received by the defendant in consequence of some tortious act to the plaintiff's property, the plaintiff may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for money had and received.

Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. (Mass.), 285; Beardsley v. Root, 11 Johns., 464; Pritchard v. Ford, 1 J. J. Marsh., 543; Tutt v. Ide, 3 Blatchf., 249;

Wright v. Butler, 6 Wend., 290; Eddy v. Smith, 13 Wend., 488; Hall v. Schultz, 4 Johns., 249; Moses v. MacFerlan, 2 Burr., 1012; Feltham v. Terry, Loftt., 208.

Blackstone says: "This is a very extensive and beneficial remedy, applicable to almost every case where the defendant has received money which ex æquo et bono he ought to refund. It lies for money paid by mistake * * or through imposition, extortion or oppression, or where any undue advantage is taken of the plaintiff's situation."

3 Bl., 163.

The appellee cannot refuse to refund the money of the appellants, because the Selma depository failed; that was their concern; and, furthermore, the Selma depository was part of the Treasury of the United States, as designated depository banks are so regarded by law.

U. S. Revised Statutes, secs. 310, 3527, 3593, 3642, 3644, 3646, 3649, 3655, 5153, 5489, 5492.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen. and Thomas Simons, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellee:

It appears that from the time the cotton and its proceeds in this case came into the custody of the court until the loss by failure of the depository bank, the relations of all concerned, as to moneys in the registry, were regulated by statute (Act, March 3, 1817, 3 Stat. at L., 395), which so far as relates to this case left the disposition of the fund to the discretion of the court.

It follows that the funds so received by the court in its custody, and so deposited by it under the discretion inherently belonging to it, (The Bark Laurens, 1 Abb. Adm., 513), and which is recognized also by the statutes, was in no sense public money, but a mere private credit as between the court and the Bank, as to which the defendant had no knowledge or concern, as the opinion very clearly shows.

In fact, the only attempt to establish the liability claimed is rested on the fact stated in the third finding, that the clerk of the court was notified by the Interior Department that the Bank had been designated as a depository of public money, which is quite immaterial.

The notice was proper, as the court, in revenue and other cases, might have funds in its custody which might be found to be public money, as in the case of a recovery of taxes, or fines and penalties, the disposition of which might be lawfully directed or suggested; but the Secretary had no right to interfere with the authority of the court to control such a fund as that in question, and it is evident that he did not attempt to.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents the following state of facts: in June, 1865, the Marshal of the United States for the Middle District of Alabama seized certain cotton belonging to the appellants, by order of the district court of that district, upon the information of the district attorney, under the Confiscation Act. Pursuant to an order of the court made in the progress of the suit for condemnation, the property was sold, and the proceeds paid over, under the direction of the court, to the clerk. The clerk, having been notified by the Interior Department that the First National Bank of Selma, Alabama, had been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a depository of public money, deposited in July, 1866, to his own credit as clerk in that bank the money received by him from the marshal. This deposit was made pending the condemnation suit and to await the further orders of the court. In January, 1871, the suit was dismissed and judgment entered in favor of the defendants for costs. In the meantime, the Bank of Selma had failed and, in the proceedings for winding up its affairs under the National Banking Act, a dividend amounting to $641.32 upon this deposit was paid to the court, and then by order of the court paid over to the claimants, less a small amount allowed by the judge to an auditor appointed by him to ascertain the facts. This suit was brought against the United States to recover the balance of the original deposit, upon the ground that, as the bank was at the time when the deposit was made a designated depository of public money, it was part of the Treasury of the United States, and that, consequently, the deposit made by the clerk was equivalent to a payment of the money into the Treasury, binding the United States to the claimants for its return in case the court should determine, in the condemnation suit, that the cotton when seized was not liable to confiscation.

The position assumed by the appellants is, to our minds, wholly untenable. The designated depositories are intended as places for the deposit of the public moneys of the United States; that is to say, moneys belonging to the United States. No officer of the United States can charge the Government with liability for moneys in his hands not public moneys by depositing them to his own credit in a bank designated as a depository. In this case, the money deposited belonged for the time being to the court, and was held as a trust fund pending the litigation. The United States claimed it, but their claim was contested. So long as this contest remained undecided, the officers of the Treasury could not control the fund. Although deposited with a bank that was a designated depository, it was not paid into the Treasury. No one could withdraw it except the court or the clerk, and it was held for the benefit of whomsoever in the end it should be found to belong.

The whole subject is elaborately considered in the opinion of the Court of Claims, and we deem it unnecessary to attempt to add to what has there been said.

The judgment is affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Wm. Henry Arnoux, Henry H. Anderson and James Emott, for plaintiff in error:

Law presumes that a fact, continuous in its character, still continues to exist.

1 Phil. Ev., Cow. & H., note 177, and cases cited in subd. 7.

Where a given state of things is shown to exist, the law presumes that it continues and the burden of proof is upon the opposite party to show that it has changed.

Messrs. James C. Carter and Henry J. Seudder, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff below, now defendant in error, on the 2d day of December, 1868, employed the defendant and one Hall, as its general agents for New York and other States, to secure applications for life insurance, and to collect and pay over premiums on insurances effected. It was stipulated that the agreement should continue in force three years from Sep. 1, 1867, and that it might thereafter be terminated by either party on giving six months' notice. By the contract, the compensation allowed to Hall and Manning was twenty per cent on the ordinary premiums upon all policies, excepting those paid for by single payments, for the first year, and seven and one half per cent for the second and subsequent years of assurance. An additional allowance was also made for traveling and incidental expenses. It was further stipulated that these allowances should continue to be paid for twenty-five years from the date of each policy, should any continue so long in force; and, further, that the agents should remit monthly all moneys collected by them, and return all uncollected policies and receipts sent to them for collection by the Company. The contract declared that commissions should accrue only as the premiums were paid to the Company.

On the 13th of May, 1870, Hall assigned his interest in the contract to Manning, with the approval of the plaintiff.

On the 17th day of September, 1870, a new arrangement in lieu of the former was made between the parties, by which it was agreed that Manning should thenceforward receive for his compensation $5,000 per annum, the commission to sub-agents to be twenty-five and seven and one half per cent; that Manning should collect the renewals of the old business of Hall, and Hall and Manning, and receive the renewal commissions which said renewals were entitled to under the former contract. This contract was terminable at the option of the Company at any time within three years.

About the 1st of June, 1871, the plaintiff discharged the defendant from the service, for reasons which the verdict in the case establishes to have been lawful and sufficient, and this suit was brought to recover money in his hands belonging to the Company.

Among other defenses set up against the claim of the plaintiff, the defendant offered to show that a set-off existed in his favor for commissions collected and received by the plaintiff from May 1, 1871, to Dec. 23, 1871, and interest thereon to the time of the trial. To sustain this (after having made proof of notice to the plaintiff to produce the books and papers necessary to show the amount of renewal premiums received by it from policies obtained through his agency during the period mentioned, and the books and papers not being produced), he gave evidence to prove that, on the 2d of June, 1871, there were policies in force upon which the annual premiums would be $87,000, as it appeared in his accounts with his subagencies: that his annual commissions upon the premiums would amount to $8,391.14; and that, computing the amount which would be due to him, accruing between June 2, 1871, when he was discharged, and Dec. 23, 1871, when the suit was commenced, they amounted to about $4,754.97.

But no direct proof whatever was given that any of the policies in force on the first of May, 1871, or on the 2d of June, 1871, had been renewed or extended, or that any of the annual premiums becoming payable after those dates had been paid to the plaintiff or received by it.

Upon this evidence the circuit court instructed the jury, in effect, that if the defendant had been removed from his agency without justifiable cause, they might find from it what amount the plaintiff should have received of renewal premiums; but if they found he was justifiably removed, there was no proof for their consideration of the amount of renewal premiums received or collected in the hands of the Company upon which he was entitled to commissions.

In another part of the charge the same instruction was given, though in different order. It was, that, if by his own conduct the defendant rendered the action of the plaintiff in removing him necessary, before he could recover from the plaintiff his portion of the renewals, it would be incumbent upon him to show, not only how many policies had been taken by his agency, and the premiums due upon them, but also that the premiums had been paid to the plaintiffs. On the other hand, if, by its wrongful act of removing him, the plaintiff deprived him of the means of collecting the premiums, then when he had shown that renewal premiums to a certain amount were due and payable upon life policies at the time when he was removed, which because of its own act the plaintiff was bound to collect, if collectible, he was entitled to the presumption that they were collected as they became due and, therefore, the burden would rest upon the Company to show that policies had lapsed, or that without its fault it had been unable to collect the renewal premiums. To so much of these instructions as ruled, in effect, that, if the defendant was rightfully dismissed from the employment of the plaintiff there was no evidence for the consideration of the jury as to the amount of the renewals and of course, of the amount of commissions thereon, exception was taken, and it is now assigned for error.

We think, however, the defendant has no reason to complain. The charge was, at least, quite as favorable to him as he had any right to ask. By his contract with the plaintiff it was expressly stipulated that the "commissions should accrue only as the premiums are paid to the Company." It was incumbent upon him, therefore, to prove, not merely that they were due, which might possibly have been paid, but that they had been actually paid, and paid not merely to his subagents, but paid to the plaintiff. If they had been thus paid, the plaintiff held the money, to the extent of the commissions, for his use. If they had not been paid to the plaintiff, it had nothing in hand which belonged to him. His set-off was in the nature of an action for money had and received to his use. The plaintiff owed him nothing until it received the money. Now, it is very plain that proof of the existence of outstanding premiums which became payable before his set-off was pleaded fell short of any proof that those premiums had been actually paid, or that they were in the hands of the plaintiff.

It is argued, however, that, because the plaintiff failed to produce its books and papers necessary to prove the amount of renewal premiums received by it, the defendant was at liberty to prove the amount by what he calls "secondary evidence;" or, in other words, "by the best evidence the case afforded." This may be admitted; but the receipt of the renewal premiums by the plaintiff was still a fact to be proved, either by direct or circumstantial evidence.

No direct proof of such receipt was offered, as we have said. None was attempted. The defendant might have resorted to a subpoena duces tecum, or to an order of the court to produce papers and books; or, perhaps, to a bill of discovery. He did neither. He simply proved, as a fact, that there were life policies in existence, secured through his agency, renewal premiums upon which fell due before the suit was brought. His evidence stopped there, and he now complains that the jury was not allowed to presume from that fact that the renewal premiums had been paid to the plaintiff, and to presume it against a party who was not in the wrong, a party who had rightfully dismissed him from his agency, and who was under no obligation to collect the premiums at all. But was that a conclusion which the jury should have been permitted to draw from the fact proved? It is error to submit to a jury to find a fact of which there is no competent evidence. It does not follow as a necessary or even reasonable sequence from the fact that a debt existed, that it has been paid. Nor is there any presumption of its payment upon which a jury can act. Certainly, none until after the lapse of twenty years. Much less can such a presumption arise in regard to the payment of renewal premiums upon policies of insurance such premiums not being debts due to the insurers, and not being collectible as debts. We do not question that a jury may be allowed to presume the existence of a fact in some cases from the existence of other facts which have been proved. But the presumed fact must have an immediate connection with or relation to the established fact from which it is inferred. If it has not, it is regarded as too remote. The only presumptions of fact which the law recognizes are immediate inferences from facts proved. Remark upon this subject in U. S. v. Ross, 92 U. S., 281, 284 [XXIII., 707, 709], we said: "Whenever circumstantial evidence is relied upon to prove a fact, the circumstances must be proved, and not themselves be presumed." Referring to the rule laid down in Starkie on Evidence, page 80, we added: "It is upon this principle that courts are daily called upon to exclude evidence as too remote for the consideration of the jury. The law requires an open and visible connection between the principal or evidentiary facts and the deductions from them, and does not permit a decision to be made on remote inferences. Best, Ev., 95. A presumption which a jury may make is not a circumstance in proof, and it is not, therefore, a legitimate foundation for a presumption. There is no open and visible connection between the fact out of which the first presumption arises and the fact sought to be established by the dependent presumption. Douglass v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. St., 440.

If these principles be applied to the present case, the inadmissibility of the presumption which the defendant contends the court should have permitted the jury to draw becomes apparent. That renewal premiums to a certain amount, upon which he was entitled to commission, had been paid to the Company, was the ultimate fact which was necessary to be proved. What the evidence did prove was, that there were policies in force on the 2d of June 1871, the annual premiums upon which were $87,000; that he would be entitled to commissions upon renewals of the policies, if they should be thereafter renewed, and if the renewal premiums should be paid to the Company, and that these premiums were to be collected by his subagents and paid over by them. These were the primary facts. Everything more was left to presumption. The jury, therefore, were to presume that the policies did not lapse, and that they were renewed. Built on this presumption was another, namely: that the renewal premiums were paid to the agents; and upon this a further presumption, that the premiums had been paid over by the agents to the Company, or had been immediately collected by it. This appears to us to have been quite inadmissible. A verdict of a jury found upon such evidence would have been a mere guess. The evidences of fact did not go far enough. We think, therefore, the court was not in error in withdrawing it from the consideration of the jury.

What we have said renders it unnecessary to notice at length the several assignments of error. If there was no evidence of the receipt of renewal premiums by the Company, what would have been the interest upon them, had they been received, was quite immaterial. So, See 10 OTTO.

also, was it immaterial to show what would have been the probable duration of the policies. The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Surgeon-General—government contract.

*1. The Acts of the Assistant Surgeon-General, appointed under the Act of Congress and located at St. Louis, are the acts of the Surgeon-General, and have the same validity until countermanded or revoked.

2. Where, in the effort to fulfill an order for a large amount of ice for the use of the Government, which claimants were bound to furnish by their contract, they purchased ice which was lost by the suspension of the order of the Assistant Surgeon-General, by his superior officer, they are entitled to recover the cost of the ice so lost, and the expense of the care and attempt to preserve it.

Argued Jan. 20, 21, 1880. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. John B. Sanborn, R. P. Lowe and R. G. & E. C. Ingersoll, for appellant.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced in the Court of Claims, under an Act of Congress specially authorizing it, approved May 31, 1872.

There is nothing in the Act which furnishes any rule for its decision, though some of its provisions are emphasized in the argument of counsel. The action was brought on the following contract:

"Article of agreement made this fifth day of March, 1863, between Henry Johnson, medical store-keeper, United States Army, and Acting Medical Purveyor, Washington, D. C., on the one part, and Joseph W. Parish and William L. Huse, comprising the firm of Joseph W. Parish & Co., of the City of St. Louis, State of Missouri, of the other part, witnesseth:

That the said Henry Johnson, medical store-keeper, United States Army, for and on behalf of the United States of America, and the said Joseph W. Parish and William L. Huse, comprising the firm of J. W. Parish & Co., for themselves, their heirs, executors and administrators, have mutually agreed, and by these presents do mutually covenant and agree, to and with each other, in the manner following, viz.:

"First. That said J. W. Parish & Co. shall deliver at Memphis, Tennessee; Nashville, Tennessee; St. Louis, Missouri; and Cairo, Illinois, the whole amount of ice required to be consumed at each respective point and vicinity during the remainder of the year 1863. Ice to be in quality A No. 1, and delivered at two thousand (2,000) pounds to the ton.

Second. That for each and every ton of ice delivered at Nashville, Tennessee, and accepted by the medical officer in charge, the said J. W.

* Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

Parish & Co. shall receive the sum of twenty-five dollars ($25).

Third. That for each and every ton of ice delivered at St. Louis, Missouri, and accepted by the medical officer in charge, the said J. W. Parish & Co. shall receive the sum of sixteen dollars ($16).

Fourth. That for each and every ton of ice delivered at Cairo, Illinois, and accepted by the medical officer in charge, the said J. W. Parish & Co. shall receive the sum of twenty dollars ($20).

Fifth. That for each and every ton of ice delivered at Memphis, Tennessee, and accepted by the medical officer in charge, the said J. W. Parish & Co. shall receive the sum of twenty dollars ($20).

Sixth. All the ice delivered under this contract to be subjected to the inspection and approval of the medical officer in charge of the post where it is delivered, and such as does not conform to the specifications, set forth in this contract shall be rejected.

Seventh. That payments shall be made from time to time on receipted bills of lading and duplicate accounts certified to by the medical officer in charge of the post where it is delivered.

Eighth. No member of Congress shall be admitted to any share herein or any benefit to arise therefrom.

Ninth. It is further agreed that the said J. W. Parish & Co. will allow three (3) working days for discharging each cargo at either one of the points before mentioned; after that time demurrage to be allowed by the said Henry Johnson, medical store-keeper, United States Army, as per charter-party or bill of lading of the vessel.

In witness whereof the undersigned have hereunto placed their hands and seals the day and date above written.

[SEAL.] HENRY JOHNSON,
Med. Store-keeper, U.S.A., Acting Med. Purveyor.
J. W. PARISH & Co."

Under this contract, there was delivered and paid for by the Government, at the stipulated prices, 12,768 tons of ice, about which there is no dispute.

The controversy grows out of the following correspondence and the acts of parties under it.

"ASSISTANT SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 25, 1863.
Messrs. J. W. PARISH & Co.:

GENTLEMEN—I am instructed by the Assistant Surgeon-General to direct that the ice, which you have agreed to deliver at the points designated in your contract, shall be distributed in the following quantities, viz.:

At St. Louis	- - - -	5,000 tons,
At Cairo	- - - -	5,000 tons,
At Memphis	- - - -	10,000 tons,
At Nashville	- - - -	10,000 tons, making the total of 30,000 which you have contracted to deliver. The ice to be delivered at Nashville and Memphis is for the use of the sick of the armies in the field, and should be furnished without delay.

Very respectfully, your ob't servant,
By order of the Assistant Surgeon-General:
(Sig.) JOSEPH B. BROWN,
Surgeon United States Army."

A copy of this order being received at the Surgeon-General's office, the following telegram and letter were sent to Assistant Surgeon-General Wood:

"SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
March 31, 1863.

Parish & Co. have not contracted for 30,000 tons of ice. Suspend the order you gave him.
(Sig.) W. A. HAMMOND, Surgeon-General.
Col. R. C. Wood,
Asst. Surgeon-General U. S. Army, St. Louis."

"SURGEON GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1863.
SIR—Your communication of the 25th instant to J. W. Parish & Co., in regard to the quantities of ice to be delivered at the different points for which they contract, forwarded to this office for the information of the Surgeon-General, has been received.

I am instructed to inform you that the contract with Parish & Co. was made for such quantities as might be needed; and that the ice should be ordered from them, from time to time, to different points, in lots of a few hundred tons, as needed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. H. ALDEN, Assistant-Surgeon, U.S.A.
Col. R. C. WOOD,
Assistant Surgeon-General, St. Louis, Mo."

"ASSISTANT SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, March 31, 1863.
To J. W. PARISH & Co. (Care C. H. WICKER & Co.), Chicago, Ill.:

I am instructed by the Surgeon-General to suspend the order I have given you till further instructions are given from him.

(Sig.) R. C. WOOD, Asst. Surgeon-General."

In the finding of facts by the Court of Claims, it is said that it does not appear that this last dispatch was received by the claimants, though they had knowledge of the notice by oral information from the Assistant Surgeon-General at St. Louis, on the 2d day of April.

The sixth finding of fact by the Court of Claims, which is also important, is thus stated: "Prior to the delivery to the said Parish, of Joseph B. Brown's letter of March 25, 1863, set forth in finding V, the said Parish had purchased for delivery under the contract sued on 8,100 tons of ice; and after the delivery of said letter to him, he set about purchasing ice for delivery in pursuance of said letter; and thereafter, and before he was, on the 2d day of April, 1863, apprised of the aforesaid order of Surgeon-General Hammond, of March 31, he had purchased or contracted for the purchase of 23,000 tons of ice."

If we add to this that 10,000 tons of this latter purchase was made at Lake Pepin, on the upper Mississippi River, which was stored there at the time and which became a total loss, and that the order of the Surgeon-General suspending the order of the Assistant Surgeon-General remained in that condition and has never been revoked or modified, we have the main elements on which the case was decided in the court below by dismissing the claimants' petition.

The petitioners claim to recover the contract price of the entire 30,000 tons, after deducting what they have been paid and the reasonable costs of delivering the ice not received by the Government.

The opinion of the Court of Claims, found in the record, bases the dismissal of the petition on the ground that the Assistant Surgeon-General, in making the order on claimants for the 30,000 tons of ice, was acting so wholly without authority; that Parish & Co. had no right to treat it as of any validity or as one which they were bound to regard. In the argument of the case before us, the counsel for Government abandons this view of the matter and, we think, very properly. We apprehend if the case were reversed, and the United States were suing for damages incurred by a refusal of the contractors to conform to this order, the amount specified being needed and not forthcoming, there would be no question of the validity of the notice of the Assistant Surgeon-General.

The office of Surgeon-General is one of the distinct or separate Bureaus of the administrative service of the War Department. It has been found, in regard to many of these Bureaus, and even to the heads of departments, that it is impossible for a single individual to perform in person all the duties imposed on him by his office. Hence, statutes have been made creating the office of assistant secretaries for all the heads of departments.

It would be a very singular doctrine, and subversive of the purposes for which these latter offices were created, if their acts are to be held of no force until ratified by the principal secretary or head of department. It was to relieve the overburdened principal of some part of those duties that the office of assistant was created. In the immense increase of business in the office of Surgeon-General during the war, similar relief was found necessary, and the office of Assistant Surgeon-General was created.

For the very reason that the prompt exercise of the powers of the Bureau was essential in the field of operations of the army, the assistant in this case was located at St. Louis, over a thousand miles from the City of Washington. He was appointed for the purpose of exercising, at that place, the functions of the office of Surgeon-General. He was, by law, the Assistant Surgeon-General. If no virtue attached to his acts until approved by the Surgeon-General in Washington, any inferior clerk would have answered the purpose as well. It is not intended to deny that he was subordinate to the chief of his Bureau; could be ordered to do or not to do particular things; and when an order made by him was disapproved, it might be revoked by that officer. But until so revoked or disapproved it was valid, and parties required to act under it had a right to rely on it.

The order of the 25th of March, made within twenty days after the contract was signed, was an unequivocal demand, under that instrument, that the amount of 30,000 tons, part of an unlimited quantity which might have been required of the contractor, should be delivered as therein directed. No one familiar with the climate and the sources of supply could doubt that, to enable him to fulfill this demand, made at that season, required promptitude and diligence in securing the ice. If claimants had failed to have the amount thus demanded ready for use when required, the officers of the Government would have procured it at any price in the market, a price which would have been enormously enhanced by this very demand, and the claimants would have been liable for the difference between what the Government paid under these circumstances and the price fixed in the agreement. They were, therefore, under an imperative necessity to prepare to fulfill this requirement.

Impelled by this necessity, the Court of Claims finds that, between the time they received the order and the 2d day of April, when they first learned of its suspension by the Surgeon-General, they purchased over 23,000 tons of ice. They were then informed, not that the order was revoked, but that it was suspended. It never was revoked. It remained suspended, until the time during which the entire delivery was to be made was passed; and during that time 10,000 tons of the ice melted away at Lake Pepin, and was a total loss. As we have already stated, 12,768 tons were delivered and paid for; 10,000 tons perished by melting. What became of the 7,232 tons, neither received by the Government nor lost at Lake Pepin is not disclosed by the record, nor whether claimants made by selling it to others, or lost by it in that or any other way.

What are the rights of the parties under these circumstances?

If claimants intended to treat the matter as a completed contract to deliver 5,000 tons at St. Louis, 5,000 at Cairo, 10,000 at Memphis, and 10,000 at Nashville, after the order of Brown, and to hold the Government to the contract price for all those amounts, they should have delivered or tendered or offered to deliver, and demanded payment.

If the order had been revoked instead of suspended, and they intended to deny the right of the Government to revoke it, they must clearly have offered a delivery to make the Government liable. Had they offered to deliver, and been in condition to deliver, or, to use the old forms of declaration, if they had shown that they were ready and willing to deliver after such revocation, it would still remain a question as to the measure of damages, or, rather, whether the Government did not have a right to countermand the order and pay for what it actually received, and the necessary loss of claimants from the change of the order.

In point of fact, the order was never revoked but suspended, so that the claimants could not tell whether it would be revoked or revived, and they never made or offered to make delivery of the amount demanded by that order. The Government did require, accept and pay for part of it. The balance was never delivered or tendered.

Without elaborating the matter, we are of opinion that, as the claimants neither delivered or offered to deliver the remainder, they cannot recover either the contract price or the profits they might have made if they had done so. And as the Government left the demand suspended, so that while claimants were compelled to purchase under the original order, and could not safely dispose of it while it remained unrevoked, they are entitled to recover what they paid for the ice that was lost, and what expense they were at in making the purchase and in keeping it until it was lost. So, if they lost anything on the other ice not purchased at Lake Pepin, but purchased before they learned of the order of suspension, they should recover that.

The case of Bulkley v. U. S., 19 Wall., 37 [86 U. S., XXII., 62], is an analogous case. In that case Bulkley had contracted to do all the transportation of supplies, from Fort Leavenworth to army posts further west, which might be required of him by the Government. He was notified that 1,700,000 pounds would be needed, and made large preparations to meet this requirement. The United States did not need half this amount, and the freight was not delivered to him. He claimed the profits which he would have made by the terms of the contract if the freight had been delivered and carried. This court said he could not recover profits, but that, "In making ready to meet the requirements of the notice, he was subjected to the loss of time, to trouble and expense. He is entitled to be paid accordingly."

We think the case before us comes within that principle. Claimants are entitled to the expenses and losses incident to the preparation to meet the demand of the notice served on them. The cost of the ice purchased at Lake Pepin and lost, the expense bestowed upon its care, and the time and expense of making that purchase, and any sum actually lost in regard to the other 7,232 tons of ice purchased to enable them to meet that requirement, must form the measure of plaintiffs' recovery. Because these are not found by the Court of Claims, the judgment of that court is reversed and the case remanded, that their damages may be ascertained and judgment rendered accordingly.

Charge to jury—division of time—bank deposit—usage.

1. Where the charge to the jury was full and correct and covered the entire case, the court is not bound to give any further instructions.

2. For most purposes the law regards the entire day as an indivisible unit. But when the priority of one legal right over another is involved, depending upon the order of events occurring on the same day, this rule is necessarily departed from.

3. Whether or not a check presented at a bank and left with the teller, was received by the bank on deposit, was a question of fact for the jury.

4. Usage cannot make a contract where there is none, nor prevent the effect of the settled rules of law.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio.

This action was brought in the court below, by the plaintiff in error against the defendant in error, to recover a loan alleged to have been made to one John Cinnamon, upon the credit of a written guaranty by Burkhardt.

The case is stated by the court.

NOTE.—Computation of time; days "after the expiration," "before," Sundays, "within." Fractions of a day, when regarded and when not. See note to Griffith v. Bogert, 59 U. S., XV., 307.

Mr. T. D. Lincoln, for plaintiff in error:

1. A check of one depositor of a bank drawn upon the bank in favor of another depositor, and left by the latter as a deposit with the bank, in the ordinary course of business, nothing being said at the time, is subject to examination during the same day and to return within reasonable time during the day to the depositor, and he is not entitled to a credit of the same, simply because the receiving teller received it without any conditions expressed relating to such examination.

2. There is no definite rule of law which makes a check when received at a bank from a depositor, without condition expressed at the time, a credit to the depositor if the account of the drawer of the check is not good when left, nor during the day afterwards.

Above authorities.

3. If there were any rule of law, such as was laid down by the circuit court, it was subject to a usage among the bankers, by which the check could be returned the same day, if upon an examination of the account early after banking hours, the check was found not good.

McDonald*, 51 Cal., 66; Bk. v. Dyer, 19 Conn., 136; Oddie v. Bk., (supra); Levy v. Bk., (supra); Form. & Mech. Bank v. Cham. Tr. Co., 18 Vt., 139; S. C., 23 Vt., 208; McMasters v. R. R. Co., 69 Pa., 378; Van Santvoord v. St. John, 6 Hill, 157; Hutch. Carr., sec. 366; Gibson v. Culver, 17 Wend., 305.

The question upon which Judge Swing made the case below turn did not arise, as Burkhardt was not the depositor of Evans, Lippincott & Cunningham.

The usage of the First National Bank of Cincinnati, to the same effect, of long standing and notorious among the customers of the Bank, was binding upon the depositors of the Bank, whether he knew of such usage or not.

Mills v. Bk. (supra); Bk. v. Triplett, 1 Pet., 32; Dor. & Mil. Bk. v. N. E. Bk., 1 Cush., 188; 1 Duer, Ins., sec. 58, p. 264; Morse, Bank., 336; Form. & Mech. Bk. v. Champ. Tr. Co. (supra).

5. It is not necessary that the usage should embrace all the banks of Cincinnati, or the very small banks, if it be general among the banks of the class of the First National.

Vallance v. Dewar, 1 Camp., 508, Ongier v. Jennings, 1 Camp., 506 note; 1 Duer, Ins. sec. 58, p. 264.

Messrs. Stallo & Kittredge and Sage & Hinkle, for defendant in error:

1. If the Bank, the plaintiff in error, before the execution of the guaranty sued upon, accepted and received on deposit, checks drawn upon it by John Cinnamon, it thereupon became indebted to the depositor, and creditor of John Cinnamon, to the amount of such checks, and the guaranty does not include such transaction.

II. The defendant, as guarantor, could only be held by the strict terms of the obligation into which he had entered. This is the law of Ohio, where the guaranty was entered into and to be performed. There is no reason nor authority for giving it an expanded signification beyond the fair import of the terms.

III. As to usage or custom:

1. It must be ancient, reasonable, generally known and certain.

U. S. v. Buchanan, 8 How., 83.

2. It must be general as to place, and notorious; not confined to a particular bank. It must be the rule of all the banks of the place.

Adams v. Otterback, 15 How., 539.

3. It is not allowed to operate unless contract made with reference to it, and known to the other contracting party.

Bliven v. Screw Co., 23 How., 420 (64 U. S., XVI., 510); Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall., 383 (77 U. S., XIX., 987).

4. The office of it is to ascertain and explain the meaning and intention of parties to a contract. It must not be inconsistent with the contract nor contradict it. "It may be admissible to explain what is doubtful; it is never admissible to contradict what is plain."

Barnard v. Kellogg (supra).

5. Even if it can be applied to the mode of dealing, of a particular house, a party cannot be bound thereby unless he be shown to have had notice of it.

Chit. Cont., 11th Am. ed., 84; Moore v. Voughton, 1 Stark., 487.

IV. A guaranty, entered into after the contract, to which it relates, must have valuable consideration to support it.

Bickford v. Gibbs, 7 Cush., 154.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 23d of February, 1875, Burkhardt, the defendant in error, executed, for the benefit of John Cinnamon, an instrument to the Bank whereby he stipulated "To guaranty and make good to said Bank any sum or sums which may hereafter be held against the said John Cinnamon, to an amount not exceeding $50,000," and notice "from time to time of the amount and extent of such indebtedness" was waived.

As originally drawn, the guaranty included Cinnamon's existing as well as his future liabilities. Burkhardt refused to sign it, unless what related to the former was stricken out.

This was done by the vice-president of the Bank, and Burkhardt thereupon signed and delivered the instrument. This was in the afternoon of the day above named.

The only controversy between the parties, as the case is presented here, relates to a check for $10,997, drawn by Cinnamon upon the Bank, in favor of Evans, Lippincott & Co.

It appears by the bill of exceptions that the See 10 OTTO.

check was presented to the Bank by the payees on the day of its date, the 23d of February, 1875, and that the Bank "Gave evidence tending to show that when the check was so handed in, it was without the pass-book, and was placed aside by the receiving teller for examination after the close of banking hours before it should be credited; that the receiving teller had been instructed by the cashier not to credit Cinnamon's account with checks left until after the close of bank hours, when the account was examined and found good; that when the checks of Cinnamon were left on that day, the depositors were informed that they would not be passed to their credit unless found good after the close of bank hours; that there was at the time, and for a long time had been, a notorious usage in Cincinnati in receiving checks from depositors on them, and that this usage peculiarly applied to large banks, like the First National, by which checks left in the Bank in the morning by depositors were held until after close of the Bank, subject to be returned in the afternoon if found, upon balancing the accounts, not to be good; that such had been the usage in the First National Bank since its organization in 1861, and that it was a Bank of $1,500,000 capital; and that such usage was general and notorious among the customers of the Bank." And that the "Defendant thereupon gave evidence tending to show that no such usage existed, and to contradict all the evidence of plaintiff in relation thereto, and in reference to any notice to the depositors in regard to Cinnamon's check as testified to by the plaintiffs, and tending to show that Evans, Lippincott & Co. had no knowledge or understanding in regard to said check, except that it was received on deposit and as a deposit when it was left with the Bank."

If the check were to be considered as received on deposit when it was left with the teller, and Cinnamon was the debtor of the Bank and the Bank his creditor from that time, then the transaction was not within the guaranty, and Burkhardt was not liable. If, on the other hand, the Bank had the right to hold the check until after bank hours, and then to make its election, and to credit the depositor and charge Cinnamon with the amount, as was done, the check was covered by the guaranty, and the Bank was entitled to recover.

These alternatives were the hinges of the controversy upon the trial.

The question presented was decisive of the case. Its solution was for the jury under instructions from the court. It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the court erred in the instructions given.

The general charge embraced topics not brought before us, doubtless for the reason that, with respect to them, both parties acquiesced in the findings of the jury. The charge was full and able. In our judgment, it was correct in everything it touched upon, and it covered the entire case.

Having given such a charge, the court was not bound to give any further instructions, and it would have been as well if the Judge had declined to give those submitted by the plaintiff in error.

It appears that they were seven in number. Only the last four are in the record. They affirm or deny, with only a change of phraseology, what had been said in the charge already given.

The jury was properly cautioned not to be misled or confused by them. There is danger of both in such cases.

The first of these special charges, as we find them in the record, was given as asked for without qualification. Nothing need, therefore, be said in relation to it.

The second one, with the addition made to it by the court, is as follows: "That if checks of John Cinnamon on the Bank were left at the Bank on the 28d of February, 1875, but were not passed upon by the receiving teller, or received as a deposit, nor entered in any pass-book or other book of the Bank to the credit of the parties leaving them, but were laid aside for examination until after bank hours, when an examination could be made to see whether Cinnamon's account was good, then they did not become a debt of Cinnamon to the Bank until they were so passed upon and entered."

This charge the court gave, adding: "If it was handed in as a deposit, it became a deposit at the time it was received. Taking the surrounding circumstances into consideration, if it was received by the teller as a deposit, it became a deposit. That I give you, for it has these words in it, 'or received as a deposit.'"

For most purposes the law regards the entire day as an indivisible unit. But when the priority of one legal right over another, depending upon the order of events occurring on the same day, is involved, this rule is necessarily departed from. Thus, where a mortgage took effect from the time it was deposited for record on a particular day, and a judgment became a lien upon the premises on the same day proof was received to show that the mortgage was deposited before the court sat, and it was held that the mortgage must be first satisfied. Follett v. Hall, 16 Ohio, 111. A like inquiry is involved in this case.

In Morse's well considered work on Banking, p. 321, it is said: "But if at the time the holder hands in the check he demands to have it placed to his credit, and is informed that it shall be done, or if he holds any other species of conversation which practically amounts to demanding and receiving a promise of a transfer of credit, as equivalent to an actual payment, the effect will be the same as if he had received his money in cash, and the Bank's indebtedness to him for the amount will be equally fixed and irrevocable."

We regard this as a sound and accurate exposition of the law upon the subject, and it rests upon a solid basis of reason. The authority referred to sustains the text.

When a check on itself is offered to a bank as a deposit, the bank has the option to accept or reject it, or to receive it upon such conditions as may be agreed upon. If it be rejected, there is no room for any doubt or question between the parties. If, on the other hand, the check is offered as a deposit and received as a deposit, there being no fraud and the check genuine, the parties are no less bound and concluded than in the former case. Neither can disavow or repudiate what has been done. The case is simply one of an executed contract. There are the requisite parties, the requisite consideration and the requisite concurrence and assent of the minds of those concerned. It was well said by an eminent Chief Justice: "If there has ever been a doubt on this point, there should be none hereafter." Oddie v. Bk., 45 N. Y., 735.

We see no objection to the amendment, made by the court, to the instruction under consideration. It was correct in point of law, and it was proper to prevent any misunderstanding by the jury. It told them, tersely and clearly, as the principal charge had done, that if the check was offered and received as a deposit it was a deposit, and it followed as matter of law that the Bank was bound accordingly. Whether there had or had not been a consummated deposit was the ultimate fact to be found by the jury. The evidence is not, and should not have been, set forth in the bill of exceptions. All on the subject to be found there is that the parties gave evidence tending to prove what they respectively claimed. What that evidence was we do not know, and it is in nowise necessary that we should be advised upon the subject. The facts and circumstances, whatever they were, and the probative force and weight of each one, were exclusively for the consideration of the jury. The evidence may have been more or less cogent on either side, and more or less characterized in parts or in its entirety by internal conflicts and contradictions, or by other neutralizing qualifications. With all this we have nothing to do. The subject is beyond the sphere of our power and duties. We sit here to correct the errors committed by the court, if there were any, as disclosed in the record. The verdict, as the case is before us, is as if it were not. If it was wrong, the remedy was with the court below by a new trial. It cannot be administered here.

The third instruction involves substantially the same point as the second. It was given with a like addition, and an exception was taken. What we have said with respect to the second exception applies here.

The fourth and last instruction was, that if, at the Bank, there had been for a long time a usage "That the receiving teller entered checks in the pass-book, as they came in, subject to a return of the checks to the depositors if in the afternoon of the day, when the accounts were examined, the checks were found not to be good, and to return the same to the party depositing them, and such were then made good by the depositor, * * * such usage would be a valid and legal usage as between the depositors and the Bank."

The court refused to give this charge as asked, but gave it as thus qualified:

"Nothing in this case shows that Mr. Evans knew anything about this usage. As to the question of general usage, I have said that it was not competent to change the law in the case, when the deposit was made without anything said about the deposit by the persons receiving the deposit, the law made that a debt against the Bank in favor of the depositor; but if the depositor knows the usage in cases of that kind, why, as a matter of course, it will change it."

The plaintiff in error excepted.

The proposition submitted was fatally defective in not including as one of its terms that the depositors knew of the special and particular usage mentioned. Without such knowledge it was entirely ineffectual. The objection of the Judge was conclusive. Moore v. Voughton, 1 Stark., 487; 1 Chit. Cont., 84.

The principal charge was full and clear in regard to the general usage or custom insisted upon by the plaintiff in error. Upon that subject the Judge, among other things to the like effect, remarked: "It is said by the plaintiff, by way of proof, that although there was no express agreement between Evans, Lippincott & Co., the depositors of this check, and the Bank, that it should be returned in case it should not be found good at three o'clock, or shortly thereafter, yet that there was a general usage among bankers of the City of Cincinnati of that character, which extended to all their customers and, therefore, it had become a law. The question of usage, as presented here, is, undoubtedly, a very important question, and as a general proposition of law every commercial contract is entered into with the understanding that the usage in regard to the particular matter of the contract becomes a part and parcel of the contract itself."

A large part of the able and elaborate argument of the counsel for the plaintiff in error was addressed to this point. In our view, conceding the usage to have been established, it was in nowise material as a factor in the case.

The verdict of the jury, by rejecting the claim of the Bank touching the check, established the fact that the deposit became complete by the agreement of the parties when the check was handed in. As a necessary consequence, it was not within the undertaking of Burkhardt. Usage, therefore, could have had no effect upon the rights of the parties, and was immaterial. The result of the case must have been the same as if that subject had not been drawn in question.

A general usage may be proved in proper cases, to remove ambiguities and uncertainties in a contract, or to annex incidents, but it cannot destroy, contradict or modify what is otherwise manifest. Where the intent and meaning of the parties are clear, evidence of a usage to the contrary is irrelevant and unavailing.

Usage cannot make a contract where there is none, nor prevent the effect of the settled rules of law. Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall., 390 [77 U. S., XIX., 989]; Bliven v. Screw Co., 23 How., 433 [64 U. S., XVI., 514]; Collender v. Dinsmore, 55 N. Y., 200; Adams v. Goddard [48 Me., 212]; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall., 674 [72 U. S., XVIII., 706]; Dykens v. Allen, 7 Hill, 497.

These considerations apply to the posture of the case as it was found to be by the verdict of the jury, under instructions, properly given, by the court. According to those tests, the contract was clear, complete and irrevocable when the check was delivered by one party and received by the other. After that there was nothing left for usage to do. Its aid, when the controversy arose, was invoked too late. If the Bank proposed to hold the check on conditions, it was but fair and just to the other party to have said so when it was received, and thus have given him the option, after such notice, to do with it as he might think proper. The saving or loss of the amount to the payees might have depended on the promptitude and energy of their conduct. Delay until after bank hours might have determined the result inevitably against them. It would be contrary to plainest principles of reason and justice to permit a bank, under such circumstances, to shift the burden of the loss from itself to the shoulders of an innocent depositor.

It does not appear by the record that any evidence offered by the Bank, touching the general usage, was excluded and, we think, what was said by the court in that connection, as well as with respect to the special usage of the institution, was unexceptionable, and was quite as favorable to the Bank, as it had a right to claim.

If either side had ground for complaint, it was not the plaintiff in error.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

WILLIAM W. JOHNSON ET AL.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 617-620.)

Trade-mark—transfer of.

1. When a trade-mark is affixed to articles manufactured at a particular establishment, and that establishment is transferred to others, the right to the use of the trade-mark may be lawfully transferred with it.

2. Its subsequent use, by the person to whom the establishment is transferred, only indicates that the goods to which it is affixed are manufactured at the same place and are of the same character as those to which the mark was attached by its original designer.

Argued Apr. 7, 1880. Decided Apr. 19, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

This action was commenced in the court below by the appellees.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. T. Merrick and M. F. Morris, for appellant:

Sebastian on Trade-Marks, the latest English authority on this subject, lays down the law as follows: "A trade-mark is assignable and transmissible, but only in connection with the goodwill of the business concerned with the goods or classes of goods to which it relates." A trade-mark cannot exist in gross and unattached to specific articles; for if that could be so, the mark might come to be an instrument of deception, instead of a guaranty of genuineness. In an assignment of the business and goodwill, the trade-mark passes as a matter of course, or if specially excepted, must cease to be available by the vendor."

Sebastian, Trade-Marks, secs. 6, 55, 60; Hall v. Barrows, 33 L. J. Ch., 204; Shipwright v. Clements, 19 Weekly Rep., 599; Leather Cloth Co's. Case, 33 L. J. Ch., 199; Dixon Crucible Co. v. Guggenheim, 2 Brewst., 321; Congress Spring Co. v. High Rock, etc., Co., 57 Barb., 526; S. C., 45 N. Y., 291; Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav., 566; Bradbury v. Dickens, 27 Beav., 53; Upton, Trade-Marks, 52; Coddington Trade-Marks, secs. 22, 23, 125, 148, 149.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that in 1864, S. N. Pike ceased to be the individual owner of the trade-mark in question, and the firm of S. N. Pike and Company became the owners of it. It follows as a necessary consequence, that in 1868, during the continuance of the partnership, Pike individually had no right to dispose of the trade-mark, and could give no title to Mills, Johnson and Company, nor to anyone else.

Neither could he as a partner of the firm of S. N. Pike & Co. convey the right to anyone to use the trade-mark, without the concurrence of his copartner.

Messrs. Hoadly, Johnson & Colston and Thos. Allen Clarke, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented in this case relates to the ownership of a trade-mark used by the complainants on packages and barrels containing whisky manufactured and sold by them in Cincinnati, and arises out of the following facts:

In 1849, one S. N. Pike, doing business in that city as a wholesale dealer in whisky, adopted as a trade-mark for his manufacture the words, "S. N. Pike's Magnolia Whiskey, Cincinnati, Ohio," inclosed in a circle, which he placed on packages and barrels containing the liquor. Between that date and 1863 he was in partnership with different persons doing business there under the name of S. N. Pike & Co. In 1863, having dissolved his connection with others, he took as partners two of his former clerks, Tilney and Kidd, continuing the original firm name and soon afterwards opened a branch house in New York City. The same trade-mark was used by the new firm, as it had been by the preceding firm, without any change. At this time, and subsequently until its sale in 1868, the real property in Cincinnati, upon which the business was conducted, and the distillery, with its fixtures and appurtenances, belonged to Pike individually. In 1868, the firm removed its entire business to New York City, and Pike sold the real property in Cincinnati, and the stills, tubs, engines, boilers, tubing and all apparatus in his distillery, for the consideration of $125,000, to the firm of Mills, Johnson & Co., who were also engaged in the manufacture and sale of whisky at that place. At the same time, Pike executed and delivered to the purchasers a separate instrument, stating that, having sold his premises to them, he extended to them and their successors the use of all his brands formerly used by him in his Cincinnati house.

Mills, Johnson & Co. continued for some years the manufacture and sale of whisky on the premises thus purchased, using, without objection from anyone, the brands previously used by S. N. Pike & Co. They were succeeded in business by the complainants, who, it is admitted, are entitled to all the rights which they possessed in the trade-mark in question. S. N. Pike died in 1872, and his surviving partners formed a new partnership, under the name of George W. Kidd & Co., which was subsequently dissolved, and to its business Kidd, the appellant in this case, succeeded.

The complainants finding that whisky bearing this trade-mark, manufactured by the firm of Tyra, Hill & Co., of St. Louis, was sold in large quantities by dealers in New Orleans, filed the present bill to enjoin the dealers from selling or trafficking in whisky contained in packages thus marked. By an amendment to the bill, the defendant Kidd was made a party. He filed an answer and cross-bill, asserting title to the trade mark as surviving partner of the firm of S. N. Pike & Co., and setting forth that Tyra, Hill & Co were acting under a license from him.

The principal question for determination is, whether the complainants, claiming under the sale of Pike to their predecessors, or the defendant, Kidd, claiming as survivor of S. N. Pike & Co., have the exclusive right to the trade-mark mentioned. The court below decided that the complainants possessed the exclusive right, and our judgment approves of the decision.

It is admitted that Pike was the owner of the trade-mark when he took two of his clerks into partnership and formed the firm of S. N. Pike & Co. He did not place his interest in the trade-mark in the concern as a part of its capital stock. He allowed the use of it on packages containing the whisky manufactured by them; but it no more became partnership property from that fact than did the realty itself, which he also owned and on which their business was conducted. He was engaged in the same business before the partnership as afterwards, and taking his clerks into partnership changed in no respect, beyond its terms, their relation to his individual property. Their subsequent conduct, moreover, plainly shows that they claimed no interest in the trade-mark. They knew of his conveyance of its use to Mills, Johnson & Co. on the first of October, 1868, when they removed their own business to New York, and made no objection to the transfer. Their subsequent correspondence discloses, beyond question, their knowledge of the transfer and recognition of his power to make it. That transfer was plainly designed to confer whatever right Pike possessed. It, in terms, extends the use of the trade-mark to Mills, Johnson & Co. and their successors. Such use, to be of any value, must necessarily be exclusive. If others also could use it, the trade-mark would be of no service in distinguishing the whisky of the manufacture in Cincinnati; and thus the Company would lose all the benefit arising from the reputation the whisky there manufactured had acquired in the market. The right to use the trade-mark is not limited to any place, city or State and, therefore, must be deemed to extend everywhere. Such is the uniform construction of licenses to use patented inventions. If the owner imposes no limitation of place or time, the right to use is deemed perpetual and co-extensive with the whole country.

The claim of Kidd to the trade-mark, as survivor of the partners in the firm of S. N. Pike & Co. is without any merit. Pike, in his lifetime, repudiated any ownership in the trade-mark after his sale, and Kidd knew that fact, and never even pretended that the firm had any such right until after Pike's death.

As to the right of Pike to dispose of his trade-mark in connection with the establishment where the liquor was manufactured, we do not think there can be any reasonable doubt. It is true, the primary object of a trade-mark is to indicate by its meaning or association the origin of the article to which it is affixed. As distinct property, separate from the article created by the original producer or manufacturer, it may not be the subject of sale. But when the trade-mark is affixed to articles manufactured at a particular establishment and acquires a special reputation in connection with the place of manufacture, and that establishment is transferred either by contract or operation of law to others, the right to the use of the trade-mark may be lawfully transferred with it. Its subsequent use by the person to whom the establishment is transferred is considered as only indicating that the goods to which it is affixed are manufactured at the same place and are of the same character as those to which the mark was attached by its original designer. Such is the purport of the language of Lord Cranworth in the case of Leather Cloth Co. v. Am. Leather Cloth Co., reported in 11th Jur. (N. S.), 513. See, also, Ainsworth v. Walmesley, 35 L. J. Eq. (N. S.), 352-5, and Hall v. Barrows, 10 Jur. (N. S.), 55.

Appeal to circuit court in admiralty case—findings of fact.

1. An appeal in admiralty from the district court to the circuit court vacates the decree appealed from. The cause is heard de novo in the circuit court, and an entire new decree entered, which the latter court carries into execution. The cause is not remanded to the district court.

Argued Apr. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

This was a libel in rem, filed by the present appellee, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois. That court rendered a decree in favor of the libellant, and the claimants appealed to the circuit court, where the following decree was entered.

"And now, on this day, come again the parties in this cause, by their respective proctors, and the court having fully considered the proofs and arguments of counsel, and being now sufficiently advised in the premises, doth, upon the proofs aforesaid, find as follows, to wit:

First. That, as matter of fact, the libellant made and entered into a contract of charter with respondent, in manner and form substantially as set forth in the libel, and under and by virtue of the terms of which the respondent received libellant's Barge, Swallow in good order and condition, agreeing to pay libellant charter therefor at the rate of $10 for each and every day until returned, and to return said barge in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear excepted.

Second. That, as matter of fact, the said barge, while in custody of the respondent, under the terms of charter aforesaid, was sunk and wholly lost to the libellant through the want of care and negligence of respondent in and about the management, loading and fastening of said barge, the barge at the time of such loss being of the value of $4,000.

Third. That, according to the terms of the contract of bailment for hire, it became the duty of the respondent, as a matter of law, to return and deliver the barge, Swallow, to the libellant, in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear excepted; and the fact being that the barge was not so returned or delivered according to the contract, and no sufficient reason or excuse in law being shown therefor, the respondent is in law liable for the damage sustained by the libellant.

Wherefore, in consideration of the premises and findings, of fact and law aforesaid, and inasmuch as the court is of opinion that respondent is liable upon both the law and the facts, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the decree rendered by the district court be, and the same is, hereby, affirmed, with interest and costs, and that the libellant, William P. Halliday, recover of and from the claimants, David Gibson and Godfrey Holterhoff, the said steamboat having been heretofore released on bond according to law, the sum of $5,700.65, as decreed by the district court, with interest from the rendition of such decree (November 10, 1864), amounting to the sum total of $6,494.90, and costs taxed in the district and circuit courts.

And it is, accordingly, ordered that a summary judgment be rendered against Jacob Bunn and Robert J. Roberts, the obligees in the appeal bond filed in this case for the sum of $7,000 and that an execution issue therefor, to be satisfied and discharged on the payment of the decree herein and the costs.

Messrs. Lincoln, Smith & Stephens, for appellants.

Mr. William B. Gilbert, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

It is conceded that, upon the facts found by the circuit court, the decree appealed from was right. That finding is conclusive upon us. The Abbotsford, 98 U. S., 440 [ante, 168]. No exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial.

An appeal in admiralty from the district court to the circuit court vacates the decree appealed from. The case is heard de novo in the circuit court, without any regard to what was done below. An entire new decree was entered, which the circuit court carries into execution. The cause is not remanded to the district court. After the suit once gets into the circuit court, it is proceeded with substantially as it would have been if originally begun in that court.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Wyoming.

Motion to dismiss.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. Edward P. Johnson and W. R. Steele, for defendant in error.

Mr. W. W. Corlett, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

To give us jurisdiction in cases coming from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Wyoming, the value of the matter in dispute must exceed $1,000. This writ of error was sued out by the defendant below on a judgment against him for only $969.63. It is claimed we have jurisdiction, however, because the defendant in his answer set up a counter claim for $1,340. The only question presented here on that branch of the case is whether the plaintiff below was liable for interest on a note of $210, at the rate of three per cent. a month from the 24th day of June, 1872, until the date of the judgment, July 26, 1876, or for some shorter period. In no event could the amount thus put in controversy reach $1,000; and since if error should be found in the charge of the court on this claim, it would only result in a reduction of the judgment as it now stands, and not in an actual money recovery in favor of the defendant below, it follows that our jurisdiction is not shown by the record, and that the suit must be dismissed. It is, consequently, so ordered.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Amendment to writ of error—dismissal of case.

1. A writ of error will be dismissed, for the omission to state with certainty its return day.

2. Although amendable, yet where no application is made by the plaintiff in error for leave to amend, and no citation has been served, this court will not, on its own motion, make any order in that behalf.

Submitted Apr. 29, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

On motion to dismiss.

The case is stated by the court.

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court depends on amount; interest cannot be added to give jurisdiction; how value of thing demanded may be shown; what cases reverivable without regard to sum in controversy. See note to Gordon v. Ogden, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 33.

Messrs. E. S. Isham and Robert T. Lincoln, in support of motion.

Mr. H. O. McDaid, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This motion is granted on the authority of Carroll v. Dorsey, 20 How., 207 [61 U. S., XV., 804], because of the omission to state with certainty the return day of the writ of error. The defect is one that is amendable under section 1005, R. S., but as no application is made by the plaintiff in error for leave to amend, and no citation has ever been served, we are not inclined, on our motion, to make any order in that behalf.

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 10 Otto, 680-685.)

Salary of suspended postmaster.

1. A postmaster suspended from office is not entitled to salary during such suspension, although subsequently restored.

2. Congress has full control of salaries, except those of the President and the Judges of the Courts of the United States.

[No. 253.]

Argued Apr. 9, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter and James H. Embry, for appellant.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., and Thomas Simons, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellee.

By the Tenure of Office Act, passed March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 430, it was enacted that every person appointed to a civil office, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, should hold his office until his successor should be in like manner appointed and duly qualified, except as therein otherwise provided; but the President was authorized during the recess of the Senate to suspend an officer for misconduct, crime or incapacity. In case of suspension, the President could designate some suitable person to perform temporarily the duties of the office until the matter should be acted on by the Senate when in session. If the Senate concurred in the suspension, and advised and consented to the removal, the President might remove and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint another person to the office. If, however, the Senate refused to concur, the officer suspended might resume the functions of his office, but his salary and emoluments during the suspension went to the person who performed his duties, and not to him.

On the 20th of April, 1867, while this law was in force, Embry, the appellant, was, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed and commissioned Postmaster at Nashville, Tennessee, the salary being at the rate of $4,000 a year. By his commission he was to hold his office for four years, "subject to the conditions prescribed by law."

On the 5th of April, 1869, the original Tenure of Office Act was amended, 16 Stat. at L., 6, so as to authorize the President in the recess of the Senate to suspend an officer at his discretion until the end of the then next session of the Senate, and to designate some person to perform the duties of the office in the meantime, who should be entitled to the salary and emoluments while he served, instead of the officer suspended.

Under the authority of this Act, Embry was suspended from office on the 5th of May, 1869, during a recess of the Senate, and Enos Hopkins designated to perform his duties. Embry, however, remained in the office until May 27. The Senate did not advise or consent to the appointment of anyone to fill the place of Embry during its next session, which terminated July 15, 1870, and he was, on the 21st of July, notified to resume the charge of his office, which he did on the 25th of that month. The salary from May 27, 1869, to July 25, 1870, was paid to Hopkins. This suit was brought by Embry to recover for the same time. The Court of Claims decided against him, and he appealed.

We have had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the appellant is not entitled to recover. The important constitutional question which has at times occupied the attention of the Political Department of the Government ever since its organization, and which was brought to our attention in the argument, is not, as we think, involved. The question here presented is not one of office, but of salary. Wherever the power of removal from office may rest, all agree that Congress has full control of salaries, except those of the President and the Judges of the Courts of the United States. The amount fixed at any one time may be added to or taken from at will. No officer except the President or a Judge of a Court of the United States can claim a contract right to any particular amount of unearned compensation. If an officer is not satisfied with what the law gives him for his services, he may resign.

When Embry was appointed, the President had power to suspend him for cause. The law also provided that if suspended he should draw no salary so long as another person was performing his duties. While he was in office, further power of suspension was given the President, with a like provision as to pay. He was suspended. The Senate did not see fit to advise or consent to the appointment of another person in his place and, consequently, on the 15th of July, 1870, when the next session of the Senate ended, he became entitled to enter again on the performance of the duties which pertained to his office. This he did on the 27th of July, but not before. His present claim rests not on any contract with the Government, either express or implied, but upon the Acts of Congress which provide for his salary. We so held in U. S. v. McLean, 95 U. S., 750 [XXIV., 579]. To adjudge in his favor would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one. Although he was lawfully in office, he was not entitled to pay or emolument while not performing its duties because of his suspension.

It is true his lawful suspension ended on the 15th of July, but he did not resume possession until ten days afterwards. In the meantime, the person designated for that purpose performed his duties. Under these circumstances, the law gave the salary to the actual incumbent and not to him. The delay was an incident to the suspension, and does not seem to have been unreasonable. No more time elapsed than was necessary to give the proper notices and transfer the possession.

Affirmed.

NOTE.

The Extra Annotation here following is arranged in the order of the cases in the original reporter's volume which precede it. At the upper outside corner of the page is given the volume and pages of the cases to which the Annotation refers. After the official reporter's volume and page in the heading of each case is given book and page of the present edition, the abbreviation L being used for Lawyers' Edition, or Law. Ed. for brevity, as it is throughout in the duplicate citations of cases from the Supreme Court.

ABBREVIATIONS.

F. C. appended to a citation from the regular reports of the U. S. Circuit and District Courts refers to the series of reprints called the Federal Cases and gives, as its publishers do and recommend, the number of the case in that series.

Fed. Cas. is used when the case is contained in the series of Federal Cases but is not reported in the regular series of U. S. Circuit and District Court Reports, and the citation of such cases is to the volume and page of Fed. Cas., not to the number of the case.

Fed. or Fed. Rep. refers to the well known series Federal Reporter, containing reports of the Circuit and District Court decisions since 1880.

L. R. A. will be readily recognized as the abbreviation for the Lawyers' Reports Annotated, and particular attention should be given to these citations, as in a large proportion of cases the citing case will be found accompanied by a note on its principal point absolutely exhaustive of the authorities thereon.

Am. Dec., Am. Rep. and Am. St. Rep. will be readily recognized as the abbreviations for the well known trinity of selected case reports, The American Decisions, American Reports and American State Reports.

Pennsylvania State Reports (Pa. St.) The New Jersey Law Reports (N. J. L.) and Equity Reports (N. J. Eq.) are distinguished by the number of the series, not by the name of the reporter, while the North and South Carolina Reports, Law and Equity, are cited by the name of the reporter where the reports are so titled and it has been the universal custom.

Duplicate citations are given to the National Reporter System where cases are therein contained, and to the Reporter System alone of cases not, at the date of the preparation of the annotation, officially reported. The usual abbreviations are used, as follows:

Atl. Atlantic Reporter,	So. Southern Reporter,
Pac. Pacific Reporter,	S. E. Southeastern Reporter,
N. E. Northeastern Reporter,	S. W. Southwestern Reporter,
N. W. Northwestern Reporter,	S. Ct. Supreme Court Reporter.

We think that in all other respects the abbreviations used are clear and familiar to all who are accustomed to the use of legal reports and text books.

Rep. 686, note, majority holding grantor's covenant to abstain from business on adjoining tract, invalid. See 90 Am. Dec. 104, note, and 49 Am. St. Rep. 136, monographic note on perpetuities.

Distinguished in Duncan v. Central, etc., Ry., 85 Ky. 530, 4 S. W. 229, holding condition restricting property to particular use waived by grantor's subsequent conduct.

Deeds.—On breach of condition in deed, that intoxicating liquor shall not be sold or made on premises, grantor may, in Colorado, bring ejectment without previous entry or demand, p. 58.

Approved in Atlantic Pacific R. v. Mingus, 165 U. S. 431, 41 L. 777, 17 S. Ct. 352, holding United States have right of re-entry upon breach of condition, exercisable by legislation; Ellis v. Kyger, 90 Mo. 606, 3 S. W. 24, holding ejectment maintainable by grantor for condition broken, without entry or demand.

Corporations.—By interstate comity, corporations created in one State may carry on any lawful business in another, acquiring and transferring property there equally as individuals, p. 59.

Approved in Black v. Caldwell, 83 Fed. 883, holding denial of right of foreign corporation mortgagee to purchase at foreclosure, a violation of fourteenth amendment; Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 382, 56 Am. Rep. 777, 6 N. E. 185, holding corporation created in one State may exercise in another, general powers conferred by its charter; Elston v. Piggott, 94 Ind. 18, holding foreign corporation may purchase at judicial sale; Atchison, etc., R. R. v. Fletcher, 35 Kan. 243, 10 Pac. 601, holding corporation clothed everywhere with powers given by charter; Enterprise Brewing Co. v. Grime, 173 Mass. 257, 53 N. E. 858, holding foreign corporation organized to sell liquor in another State, may do so in Massachusetts.

Corporations.—Policy of State not to permit business of a foreign corporation in its limits, or their acquisition of real property, must be expressed affirmatively, and is not enforceable from fact that legislature has made no provision for similar corporations, p. 60.

Approved in Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 356, 25 L. 890, holding it presumption that corporation may exercise charter powers in other States; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry., 10 Sawy. 449, 23 Fed. 474, holding prohibition of territory from passing special acts of incorporation, does not preclude corporation so incorporated elsewhere from doing business therein; Reorganized Church, etc. v. Church, 60 Fed. 942, holding specific enumeration of religious corporations charterable in State, does not restrict foreign corporations; American Water-Works Co. v. Dairy Co., 60 Ohio St. 107, 53 N. E. 713, holding doctrine of ultra vires less strictly applied in suits between corporation and individual than when State is a party; Gilbert v. Hole, 2 S. Dak. 168, 170, 49 N. W. 2, holding ultra vires deed passes title as between parties subject to proceedings by State; Russell v. Railway, 68 Tex. 652, 5 S. W. 690, holding corporation's right to acquire land, questionable by State alone. Cited generally in Potter v. Rio Arriba, etc., Co., 4 N. Mex. 327, 17 Pac. 614, holding act of 1887, providing for forfeiture of lands acquired by aliens, not retroactive.

Distinguished in In re McGraw, 111 N. Y. 103, 19 N. E. 237, 2 L. R. A. 395, and n., holding, under charter providing that college could hold property not exceeding certain value, heirs might question devise thereto.

Estoppel.—Defendant going into possession under deed, with condition that if intoxicating liquors should be sold or made on premises, title should revert to grantor, is estopped, when sued by grantor for premises, after breach of condition, from denying corporate existence of grantor, or validity of title conveyed, p. 61.

Cited and principle applied in Oregonian Ry. v. Oregon Ry., etc., Co., 10 Sawy. 471, 22 Fed. 249, holding legal disability of corporation may be set up thereby, not by other party to contract; Oregonian Ry. v. Oregon Ry., etc., Co., 10 Sawy. 478, 23 Fed. 236, and School Dist. v. Alderson, 6 Dak. 149, 41 N. W. 467, holding one having contracted with corporation as such may not question corporate existence in action on contract; Eastern Building, etc., Assn. v. Bedford, 88 Fed. 18, holding one having received benefit of contract with corporation cannot raise question of ultra vires; Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 605, 34 Pac. 337, holding one having received from corporation consideration of mortgage note, estopped from denying corporate capacity, in action to foreclose; Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 402, 24 Atl. 24, holding grantee cannot enter and hold under deed, and repudiate title thereby conveyed; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 127, 15 N. W. 45, holding claimant under deed cannot establish claim by adopting provisions favorable to him, and repudiating others; Jefferson County v. Grafton, 74 Miss. 441, 60 Am. St. Rep. 518, 21 So. 248, 36 L. R. A. 799, holding purchaser from county cannot, on latter's suit to cancel deed, deny its power to acquire property; Pittsburg Mining Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 327, 17 Am. St. Rep. 160, 42 N. W. 264, holding persons who were active agents in forming corporation, estopped from contesting regularity thereof; Southern Pacific R. R. v. Orton, 6 Sawy. 182, 32 Fed. 471, note, trespasser cannot question corporation's right to hold land.

Public lands.—Although act of September 28, 1850, granting swamp lands to States, declared that said grants were made exclusively to enable States with proceeds therefrom, to drain and reclaim said lands, it is questionable whether security for such application does not rest upon good faith of the States, p. 69.

Cited and applied in McNee v. Donahue, 76 Cal. 507, 18 Pac. 442, doubting whether agricultural land grant of 1866 fastened trust on State; Kiefer v. German-American Seminary, 46 Mich. 638, 10 N. W. 51, holding donor has no redress, where fund created by absolute conveyance is not applied as directed; A. P. Cook Co. v. Aptham, 79 Mich. 105, 44 N. W. 421, holding drainage taxes a lien on swamp lands; Sturgeon v. Hampton, 88 Mo. 210 (see dissenting opinion in 88 Mo. 216), holding trust in swamp lands granted to State, a personal trust reposed in State, and not following land. Cited, arguendo, in Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 627, 15 N. W. 621.

Public lands.—Where grant of swamp lands to State is for certain purposes exclusively, Congress alone has power to enforce the conditions of the grant, by revocation, or other suitable action, p. 69.

Approved in McNee v. Donahue, 142 U. S. 602, 35 L. 1128, 12 S. Ct. 216, holding no disposition of proceeds of sale of agricultural grant of 1866, to California, could affect titles acquired thereunder; Chandler v. Calumet, etc., Min. Co., 36 Fed. 667, holding swamp land grants of 1850, conferred upon States absolute dominion, as far as third parties were concerned; Kings v. Tulare, 119 Cal. 512, 51 Pac. 867, holding only United States can question disposal made of swamp lands by States; United States v. Louisiana, 127 U. S. 187, 32 L. 68, 8 S. Ct. 1050, affirming rule; United States v. Louisiana, 127 U. S. 189, 32 L. 69, 8 S. Ct. 1051, arguendo.

Public lands.—Grant by State of swamp lands, subject to conditions of swamp land grant of 1850, to county for general county purposes, is valid, and county cannot rescind its contracts for disposal thereof, on ground that State grant was in violation of said act, p. 69.

Followed in Mills Co. v. Railroad Cos., 107 U. S. 564, 27 L. 581, 2 S. Ct. 660, and Acker v. Walker, 53 Iowa, 457, 5 N. W. 586, similar cases.

Public lands.—County cannot maintain bill to set aside its contract for sale of State swamp lands, because same includes sale of county's claims against United States for indemnity for lands sold contrary to law, p. 70.

Contracts.—Where covenants are mutual and dependent, failure of one party to perform absolves the other, and authorizes him to rescind, p. 70.

Vendor and purchaser.—Remedy for breach of agreement not made a condition of sale, is in action on covenant, not bill to rescind contract, p. 71.

Interest.—Where note specifies interest at rate different from legal rate, it is presumed, in absence of contrary stipulation, that agreement to pay same extends only to maturity, after which legal rate is chargeable, p. 74.

Cited and applied in Nashua, etc., Corp. v. Boston, etc., Corp., 61 Fed. 249, 21 U. S. App. 50, holding court below, on cause being remanded for taking of account, should allow interest from filing of bill; Hovey v. Edmison, 3 Dak. 471, 22 N. W. 604, holding contract to pay compound interest at specified rate, valid; O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 430, 47 Am. Rep. 65, holding reduction of legal rate affected judgment rendered prior thereto. See 47 Am. Rep. 74, note. The following cases follow the above rule: Sherwood v. Moore, 35 Fed. 109, and Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 94 Fed. 455, both holding legal rate governs after maturity of bonds, in absence of contrary stipulation; Hicks v. Coody, 49 Ark. 428, 5 S. W. 714, holding legal rate governs after maturity, in absence of agreement for specified rate, "until paid;" Burns v. Anderson, 68 Ind. 205, 34 Am. Rep. 253, and Smith v. Tatman, 71 Ind. 176, both holding interest after maturity computable at legal rate; Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 581, holding interest on State bonds after maturity, determined by legal rate, where payable; Brown v. Hardcastle, 63 Md. 491, holding mortgage bears legal rate after it becomes due.

The following cases adopt the contrary rule: Shaw v. Rigby, 84 Ind. 378, 43 Am. Rep. 99, holding interest after maturity recoverable as damages, and measurable at contract rate; Union Inst., etc. v. Boston, 129 Mass. 94, 37 Am. Rep. 313, holding interest on contract to be computed until paid, at rate stated therein; Borders v. Barber, 81 Mo. 645, holding contract rate governs after maturity, where stipulation is for interest "from date"; Hydraulic Co. v. Chatfield, 38 Ohio St. 577, holding bonds bear interest at contract rate until paid; judgment thereon bearing same interest.

Distinguished in New Orleans v. Warner, 175 U. S. 147, holding contract rate governs where warrants bear interest "until paid;" Sanford v. Savings, etc., Soc., 80 Fed. 61, specific agreement as to interest existing.

Courts.—Question as to whether contract rate of interest on commercial paper governs after maturity, is one of local law, p. 74.

Approved in Ohio v. Frank, 103 U. S. 698, 26 L. 531, holding contract rate governs after maturity of note, in Illinois; United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 218, 34 L. 339, 10 S. Ct. 923, holding interest not payable on North Carolina bond coupons after maturity of bonds; Massachusetts Ben. Assn. v. Miles, 137 U. S. 691, 34 L. 835, 11 S. Ct. 235, holding question of interest always one of local law; Bolles v. Amboy, 45 Fed. 169, holding, under Illinois decisions, interest on overdue coupons of railroad-aid bonds, not recoverable. See 69 Am. Dec. 348, and 47 Am. Rep. 71, notes on subject.

Appeal and error.—Trial court's ruling on motion for new trial, is not reviewable on error, p. 81.

Followed in Boogher v. Insurance Co., 103 U. S. 98, 26 L. 312, and M'Clellan v. Pyeatt, 50 Fed. 688, 4 U. S. App. 319.

Appeal and error.—Rulings in regard to instructions, not objected to when made, cannot be reviewed by appellate court on error to order refusing new trial, although incorporated in bill of exceptions, p. 81.

Cited in Danks v. Rodeheaver, 26 W. Va. 290, holding errors in rulings during jury trial, reviewable only when objected to, exception taken and new trial asked and refused.

Statutes.—Repeal of statute authorizing action after judgment, and during pendency of writ of error, does not authorize Supreme Court to remand same with instructions to enter non-suit, p. 81.

Cited generally in Anderson v. Hygeia, etc., Co., 92 Va. 695, 24 S. E. 272, holding appellate court may reverse erroneous judgment and order entry of proper judgment.

Appeal and error.—Writ of error to Supreme Court does not vacate judgment below, p. 81.

Approved in Sharon v. Hill, 11 Sawy. 303, 26 Fed. 345, holding writ of error merely prevents execution of judgment; Hughes v. Dundee Mortgage, etc., Co., 11 Sawy. 557, 28 Fed. 42, and Oregonian Ry. v. Oregon Ry., etc., Co., 11 Sawy. 574, 27 Fed. 284, holding writ of error to Circuit Court does not suspend operation of judgment as an estoppel; In re Kirby, 84 Fed. 608, holding attorney convicted of crime may be disbarred therefor pending his appeal; Goodrich v. Wilson, 135 Mass. 33, holding judgment remains in force until actually reversed; Hughes v. Green, 84 Fed. 835, 56 U. S. App. 60, doubting whether order of dismissal in State court is not operative because of appeal by defendants.

Distinguished in dissenting opinion in Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 471, 15 Pac. 859, majority holding appeal from decree in equity does not annul same.

Trademarks and tradenames.—Property rights in trademarks are recognized at common law, and were not created by acts of Congress, p. 92.

Approved in La Croix v. May, 15 Fed. 237, holding property in trademarks does not derive its existence from rights of Congress; Stachelberg v. Ponce, 23 Fed. 431, holding assignee of trademark must, in use thereof, indicate that he is assignee in order to be protected therein; Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 36 Fed. 325, 1 L. R. A. 617, upholding general right of protection to reputation acquired by commodity; *Price, etc., Powder Co. v. 911, 33 U. S. App. 452, holding trial court may not entertain bill of review after decision by appellate court.

Equity.—Leave to file bill of review on ground of newly-discovered matter may be refused, although the facts, if admitted, would change the decree, if court deems it productive of mischief to innocent parties, or otherwise inadmissible, p. 107.

Equity.—Before bill of review can be filed, decree must first be performed, and costs paid, p. 108.

Followed in Kimberly v. Arms, 40 Fed. 555, holding bill of review must aver performance of decree; Hoffman v. Knox, 50 Fed. 492, 8 U. S. App. 19, holding money must be paid as directed in decree before bill of review is filed; Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 852, 21 U. S. App. 658, holding relief on ground of newly-discovered evidence, cannot delay appeal or execution of judgment. See 20 Am. Dec. 174, extended note on bills of review.

Courts.—Where bill of review rests partly on grounds requiring leave to file, and partly on error of law, the whole is still discretionary, and latter must stand or fall with former, p. 109.

E. 385, holding jurisdictional amount determined by sum in controversy at commencement of action, excluding costs and interest; Richmond v. Brummie, 52 Kan. 248, 34 Pac. 784, refusing to entertain appeal by defendant alone from decree of less than jurisdictional amount.

Distinguished in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 618, 33 L. 671, 10 S. Ct. 495, holding appellate jurisdiction from judgment on note determined by amount of judgment, including interest to date thereof.

100 U. S. 113-119, 25 L. 587, LANSDALE v. DANIELS.

Public lands.—Declaratory statement by settler on public lands in California, under act of March 3, 1853, confers no right of pre-emption if made before return of plat of survey to land office, p. 116.

Approved in Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 94, 39 L. 909, 15 S. Ct. 800, holding settlement alone, without declaratory statement, confers no pre-emption rights; Northern Pac. R. R. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 387, 41 L. 480, 17 S. Ct. 99, holding pre-emption, or homestead, claim does not attach to public land until entry in local land office; Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. M'Cann, 126 Cal. 554, 58 Pac. 1045, holding pre-emption claim, under act of 1862, does not attach until entry in local land office; Bank v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 285, 26 L. 738, arguendo.

Distinguished in Baker v. Jamison, 54 Minn. 28, 55 N. W. 751, holding subsequent recognition of premature applications for State lands confers validity thereon.

Public lands.—As between two locators, neither of whom has filed his notice at proper time, the superior equity of the first to enter and settle must prevail, p. 118.

Cited in Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 97, 39 L. 910, 15 S. Ct. 801, holding entry proceedings not vitiated by tardy filing of declaration; Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Abbott, 44 Kan. 178, 24 Pac. 56, holding failure to file report of commissioners on time did not invalidate condemnation proceedings.

Public lands.—Declaratory statement by settler on unsurveyed public lands in California, under act of March 3, 1853, although filed subsequent to period prescribed in act, is sufficient to give pre-emption right, unless some other person has previously commenced a settlement and given notice required, p. 117.

Cited in Osgood v. El Dorado, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 578, and Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 433, 437, 10 Pac. 779, 782, arguendo.

100 U. S. 119-124, 25 L. 571, UNITED STATES v. CURTIS.

Judgment.—Appearance of sureties after service of writ upon them, and suffering voluntary default, is a confession of indebtedness on account of breach of bond sued on, p. 123.

Interest on claim of government against sureties for money unaccounted for by principal, runs only from notice that definite sum is due United States, p. 123.

Cited and rule applied in United States v. Denvir, 106 U. S. 536, 27 L. 264, 1 S. Ct. 481, holding disbursing officer not chargeable with interest until failure to account is shown; United States v. Poulson, 30 Fed. 232, a like case; Hagood v. Blythe, 37 Fed. 250, 252, holding interest on claim, as against sureties, runs from filing suit; Frink v. Southern Express Co., 82 Ga. 45, 46, 8 S. E. 867, 3 L. R. A. 486, and n., holding where, in absence of demand, sureties liable for interest only from service of writ; Pennsylvania Co., etc. v. Swain, — Pa. St. —, 42 Atl. 298, holding surety on bond of defaulting officer liable for interest on penalty only from time of demand; Whereatt v. Ellis, 103 Wis. 355, 74 Am. St. Rep. 870, 79 N. W. 418, holding commencement of action against sureties for unliquidated demand will not start interest. Cited, arguendo, in Curtis v. Banker, 136 Mass. 357, 360. See 87 Am. Dec. 750, 753, voluminous note on interest.

Distinguished in United States v. Fitzsimmons, 50 Fed. 384, holding, in suit against marshal's sureties, interest allowable from date when balance was stated against him by treasury.

Principal and surety.—Service of process upon sureties, in action on bond for money unaccounted for by principal, is sufficient demand, p. 124.

100 U. S. 124-138, 25 L. 554, HATCH v. OIL CO.

Sale.—Contracts for purchase and sale of chattels, if complete and unconditional, and not within statute of frauds, are sufficient, as between the parties, to vest the property in purchaser, even without delivery, p. 128.

Approved in M'Elwee v. Metropolitan Lumber Co., 69 Fed. 306, 37 U. S. App. 266, holding agreement for temporary retention of designated article does not affect passage of title; Rail v. Little Falls Lumber Co., 47 Minn. 424, 50 N. W. 472, holding neither payment nor delivery necessary, contract being complete and goods designated; Abraham v. Karger, 100 Wis. 391, 76 N. W. 332, holding vendee may maintain replevin against vendor where price has been paid and goods set apart.

Distinguished in First Nat. Bank v. C. D. Woodworth Co., 7 Wyo. 18, 49 Pac. 408, where contract was conditional.

Sale.— Where property in thing sold is to remain for a time in seller, only passing to buyer at a future time or on certain conditions inconsistent with its immediate transfer, contract is deemed an executory agreement, p. 131.

Approved in Schreyer v. Kimball Lumber Co., 54 Fed. 655, 13 U. S. App. 23, holding agreement to sell lumber, then in the log, an executory agreement; Cunningham Iron Co. v. Warren Mfg. Co., 80 Fed. 879, holding agreement for sale of boilers, to be taken out and delivered before certain day, an executory contract; New England, etc., Co. v. Standard Worsted Co., 165 Mass. 329, 52 Am. St. Rep. 518, 43 N. E. 112, holding, in sale of portion of mass, vendor retaining whole, with right of separation, no title passes until separation.

Sale.— Question whether contract is a sale or an executory agreement is one of intention of parties, p. 131.

Approved in Merchants' Exch. Bank v. M'Graw, 76 Fed. 937, 48 U. S. App. 68, and Kneeland v. Renner, 2 Kan. App. 454, 43 Pac. 96, both holding intent of parties, as to time of vesting of title, governs, irrespective of delivery; Nash v. Brewster, 39 Minn. 533, 41 N. W. 106, 2 L. R. A. 410, holding intention of parties and right of vendee to remove goods being shown, sale complete; Hobart v. Littlefield, 13 R. I. 346, holding, on sale without stipulation for credit, title may pass, although vendor is to retain goods; Bank of Huntington v. Napier, 41 W. Va. 487, 23 S. E. 802, holding contract one of sale, notwithstanding it contained agreement for transportation also.

Sale.— Where there is no manifestation of intention, except what arises from terms of sale, presumption, if thing to be sold is specified and ready for immediate delivery, is that contract is an actual sale, p. 131.

Approved in Dillard v. Paton, 19 Fed. 623, holding title to cotton passed on examination and approval by vendee; Lucas v. Pittman, 94 Ala. 620, 10 So. 605, holding contract for sale of wagon, to be paid in work at so much per day, passed title.

Sale.— If no place of delivery is specified in contract of sale, articles are deliverable at place where they are at time of sale, unless some other place is required by nature of articles, usage of trade or custom of parties, p. 135.

Cited in Van Valkenburgh v. Gregg, 45 Neb. 657, 63 N. W. 950, holding, where no place of delivery is provided, it may be inferred from circumstances or usage.

Sale.— Where place of delivery is prescribed as part of contract, tender elsewhere need not be accepted nor made, p. 135.

Sale.— Where, by terms of contract, article is to be delivered at particular place, seller, before he can recover price, is bound to prove delivery there, p. 135.

Sale.— Where plaintiff, in action for goods sold and delivered, proves delivery at place specified, and that nothing further remained for him to do, he need not show acceptance by defendant, p. 135.

Sale.— Where there has been complete delivery, in accordance with terms of sale, title passes, although something remains to be done in order to ascertain total value of goods at rate specified in contract; hence, sale of a quantity of staves, to be counted and filed from week to week, delivery to be complete upon counting, vests title in vendee before time of final delivery, as against attaching creditor of vendor, p. 135.

Approved in Farmers' Phosphate Co. v. Gill, 69 Md. 548, 9 Am. St. Rep. 448, 16 Atl. 217, 1 L. R. A. 770, and n., and Barr v. Borthwick, 19 Or. 580, 25 Pac. 361, where delivered goods were to be weighed to ascertain quantity; Byles v. Colier, 54 Mich. 6, 19 N. W. 567, holding necessity for inspection to determine sum payable not inconsistent with passage of title.

Distinguished in Rosenthal v. Kahn, 19 Or. 575, 24 Pac. 991, holding sale of wood at so much per cord not complete until measurement.

Sale.— Personal property may be purchased in an unfinished condition, buyer acquiring title to same, though possession be retained by vendor in order to fit property for delivery, if intention to that effect be fully proved, p. 136.

Sale.— Executory contract may be converted into complete sale by appropriation of specific goods to contract, p. 136.

100 U. S. 138-145, 25 L. 574, BROWNSVILLE v. CAVAZOS.

Public lands.— By laws of Mexico, in force in 1826, Pueblos, when recognized as such by public authority, became entitled for their use to certain lands embracing their sites and adjoining territory to extent of four square leagues, p. 139.

Approved in Vernon Irr. Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 245, 39 Pac. 765, holding Pueblos' right to stream flowing through pueblo lands superior to riparian proprietor's.

Overruled in United States v. Santa Fé, 165 U. S. 704, 706, 41 L. 885, 17 S. Ct. 483, holding right of Pueblos to four square leagues not one of law, but of custom.

Treaties.— Rights of private property previously existing in territory east of the Rio Grande were not affected by Treaty of Guada-inpe Hidalgo, and, if arising before independence of Texas, their validity was to be determined by laws of Mexico, p. 143.

Approved in Lerma v. Stevenson, 40 Fed. 356, holding Mexican grant admissible evidence, notwithstanding Texas constitutional prohibition of such admission.

Trespass to try title.—Texas law, giving dissatisfied party right, within one year, to re-litigate controversy respecting land, does not bar him from setting up his claim if, within that period, a similar suit respecting same land is commenced against him by former defendant, p. 145.

Cited generally in Slauson v. Goodrich Transp. Co., 99 Wis. 26, 74 N. W. 575, 40 L. R. A. 829, and n., holding, on vacation of judgment, action stands as for original trial.

100 U. S. 145-147, 25 L. 590, MOORE v. SIMONDS.

Appeal and error.—Where appeal has been taken in name of firm instead of in names of individual partners, which appear in record, defect in appeal may be cured by amendment, p. 146.

Approved in Estis v. Trabue, 128 U. S. 229, 32 L. 438, 9 S. Ct. 59, a like case; Walton v. Marietta Chair Co., 157 U. S. 347, 39 L. 727, 15 S. Ct. 628, holding writ of error amendable by substitution of new administrator's name; United States v. Hopewell, 51 Fed. 800, 5 U. S. App. 137, holding irregularity in addressing citation to firm curable, on objection, by new citation in proper form; In re Woerishoffer, 74 Fed. 916, 41 U. S. App. 411, dismissing appeal in firm name only when same could not be amended by record.

Cited, but application denied, in Van Horn v. Natchez, 27 Fed. 310, holding appearance of appellee in admiralty estops him from denying validity of appeal.

Shipping.—Under sections 4192 and 4193, revised statutes, unrecorded mortgage of domestic vessel is valid as between parties and persons with actual notice, p. 147.

Followed in The W. B. Cole, 49 Fed. 589, holding unrecorded mortgage of vessel valid as against parties with notice thereof; Dize v. Beacham, 81 Md. 609, 32 Atl. 245, holding unregistered transfer of interest in vessel conveys no title except as against grantor and persons with actual notice; Read v. Horner, 90 Mich. 157, 51 N. W. 209, holding actual notice to purchaser, of unrecorded chattel mortgage, equivalent to filing mortgage.

Ct. 43, holding appeal from several judgments against heirs on one note lies only from judgments exceeding $5,000; Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 37, 30 L. 1087, 7 S. Ct. 1071, holding, in suit by several on distinct demands, defendants can appeal only as to plaintiffs decreed over $5,000; Walter v. North-eastern Ry., 147 U. S. 373, 37 L. 208, 13 S. Ct. 350, where railroad sued to enjoin collection of taxes in different counties; Sioux Falls Nat. Bank v. Swenson, 48 Fed. 624, suit by national bank, for stockholders, to enjoin collection of tax; Wheless v. St. Louis, 96 Fed. 867, 868, where separate lotowners attempted to join to confer Federal jurisdiction in suit to enjoin assessment; Guarantee Trust, etc., Co. v. Buddington, 23 Fla. 518, 2 So. 887, holding parties cannot, by joining in appeal, unite separate interests to make up jurisdictional amount; Farwell v. Becker, 129 Ill. 269, 16 Am. St. Rep. 269, 21 N. E. 792, 6 L. R. A. 402, holding separate claims against several defendants cannot be united to confer appellate jurisdiction; Chapman v. Banker, etc., Pub. Co., 128 Mass. 480, holding jurisdiction cannot be compelled by improper joining of distinct claims.

Mortgages.—Trustee's public sale of land to corporation, payee of note secured by trust deed, deed being made to trustee in individual capacity, is not void because trustee was an officer of corporation and price at sale was inadequate, sale being fair, p. 152.

Approved in Gray v. Quicksilver Min. Co., 68 Fed. 682, holding purchase by corporation at probate sale not invalidated because administrator was its employee; Monroe v. Fuchtlar, 121 N. C. 104, 28 S. E. 63, holding fact that trustee is clerk of cestui que trust does not create fiduciary relation between grantor and latter. See 19 Am. St. Rep. 293, monographic note on sales by trustees.

Distinguished in Hunt v. Fisher, 29 Fed. 809, where price was grossly inadequate.

Receiver appointed by State court, who, on removal to Federal, voluntarily appears therein, may be compelled by latter to account for funds, p. 156.

Approved in Oyster v. Bank, 107 Iowa, 43, 77 N. W. 525, holding, on transfer of jurisdiction from one court to another, latter gains jurisdiction over receiver appointed by former; Hinckley v. Morton, 103 U. S. 764, 26 L. 459, arguendo.

Receivers.—Amount of compensation of receivers of insolvent corporations is discretionary with Circuit Court, p. 157.

Cited in Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U. S. 253, 42 L. 457, 18 S. Ct. 84, holding acts of legitimate warfare cannot be made basis of individual liability. See 89 Am. Dec. 616, note on civil liability of military officer.

100 U. S. 195-208, 25 L. 621, SAVINGS BANK v. WARD.

Attorney and client.—Attorney employed to investigate title to real property impliedly contracts to exercise reasonable care and skill in so doing, and is responsible to client for loss arising from failure so to do, p. 195.

Approved in Mechanics' Bldg. Assn. v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 551, holding recorder liable for breach of contract to certify truth as to title; Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 111, 19 N. W. 770, holding abstracter liable for careless omission, resulting in expense to client.

Attorney acting with proper degree of skill, and with reasonable care, and to best of his knowledge, will not be held responsible for every mistake in practice or error in judgment in conduct of client's cause, p. 198.

Approved in Ahlhauser v. Butler, 57 Fed. 123, holding attorney not liable for insufficiency of his affidavit on attachment; Staples v. Staples, 85 Va. 84, applying rule to collection of debt by attorney; Daugherty v. Herzog, 145 Ind. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 206, 44 N. D. 458, 32 L. R. A. 838, holding contractor not liable to stranger for injury from negligent construction of building.

Attorney and client.—Persons acting professionally in legal formalities, negotiations or proceedings, by warrant or authority of clients, may be regarded as attorneys-at-law, p. 199.

Cited in Moore v. Staser, 6 Ind. App. 367, 32 N. E. 564, holding agreement in note to pay attorney's fees, covers fee for collection without suit.

Attorney and client.—Where client is injured by deficiencies of attorney, latter is liable for such want of skill, care and diligence as men of the legal profession commonly profess and exercise in such employment, p. 200.

Cited in Western, etc., R. R. v. Kehoe, 83 Md. 450, 35 Atl. 94, on negligence generally.

Attorney and client.—Obligation of attorney is to his client, not to third party; hence attorney is not liable to stranger for damages arising from latter's reliance on his certificate of title, made for client, pp. 200-207.

Followed in Dundee, etc., Co. v. Hughes, 10 Sawy. 148, 20 Fed. 41, a like case; Talpey v. Wright, 61 Ark. 280, 54 Am. St. Rep. 207, 32 S. Master and servant.—To bring case within rule exempting master from liability for injuries to servant by fellow servant, both must be engaged in same department of common employment, pp. 220-224.

The following citing cases apply the rule: King v. Ohio, etc., Ry., 11 Biss. 366, 14 Fed. 280, holding master's immunity does not extend to cases where servants are engaged in different departments of work; Gravelle v. Minneapolis, etc., Ry., 3 McCrary, 364, 11 Fed. 573, charging jury as to who are fellow servants; The Phoenix, 34 Fed. 763, holding negligence of ship being immediate cause, fact that negligence of fellow servant contributed, only mitigates damages; Bloyd v. Railway, 58 Ark. 71, 22 S. W. 1090, holding whether relationship of fellow servant exists to be determined according to circumstances of each case; Beeson v. Green Mountain, etc., Co., 57 Cal. 37, holding superintendent having entire charge of business with power to discharge employees, not a fellow servant; Palmer v. Utah, etc., Ry., 2 Idaho, 296, 13 Pac. 428, holding corporation liable to employee injured through negligence of servants invested with controlling duty in management of business; Jaques v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 66 N. H. 484, 22 Atl. 553, 13 L. R. A. 826, holding servant, of whatever rank, charged with performance of master's duties towards servants, not a fellow servant within the rule; Willis v. Oregon, etc., Ry., 11 Or. 264, 4 Pac. 125, holding master liable for injury by vice-principal; Pool v. Southern Pac. Co., 7 Utah, 308, 26 Pac. 655, holding exemption does not extend to injuries caused by negligence of servant in another department; Madden v. Railway, 28 W. Va. 619, 57 Am. Rep. 697, holding fact that inferior servant is under control of superior, sufficient to render master liable. The following, under authority of the principal case, are held not fellow servants within the rule: Craig v. Continental Ins. Co., 26 Fed. 800, marine inspector and engineer of pump on barge; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., Ry., 34 Fed. 619, express and baggage-men and employees on freight train; *Pike v. Mex. 169, 34 Pac. 539, section hand on hand car going to repair road, and conductor of working train, also repairing road. See 2 McCrary, 244, note on fellow servants.

Master and servant.—Where servant notifies master of defects in machinery, e. g., defective locomotive, and relying on latter's promise to repair same within a reasonable time, continues to use it, his continuance in employment for such reasonable time, with knowledge of defect, is not, as a matter of law, conclusive of contributory negligence, p. 225.

Ct. 916, holding State decisions not binding on question of who are fellow servants; Gardner v. Michigan, etc., R. R., 150 U. S. 358, 37 L. 1109, 14 S. Ct. 143, holding responsibility of railroad to employees, a question of general law; Chicago, etc., Ry. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 137, 42 L. 692, 18 S. Ct. 290, holding State construction of right of railroad to contract for exemption, not binding; Mason v. Edison Machine Works, 24 Blatchf. 95, 28 Fed. 229, Willis v. Board of Commrs., 86 Fed. 874, holding Federal courts not bound to follow decisions of State court on questions of general law; Johnston v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Fed. 364, holding State decisions on question of telegraph company's right to restrict its liability, not binding; Newport News, etc., Co. v. Howe, 52 Fed. 366, 6 U. S. App. 172, holding State construction of general contract of service does not bind Federal courts; Griffin v. Overman, etc., Co., 61 Fed. 572, 21 U. S. App. 151, holding rule that contributory negligence is matter of defense, applicable in Federal court, notwithstanding contrary State decision; Gatton v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 95 Iowa, 145, 63 N. W. 600, 28 L. R. A. 567, denying existence of national common law. See 42 Am. Rep. 666, note.

Contra where State has statute governing subject: Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hogan, 63 Fed. 105, 27 U. S. App. 184, holding construction of State statute defining employer's liability, by State court, will be followed in Federal; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mase, 63 Fed. 115, 27 U. S. App. 238, holding State statute regulating master's liability, a rule of decision in Federal court; Krogg v. Atlanta, etc., R. R., 77 Ga. 214, 4 Am. St. Rep. 82, holding construction placed by courts of another State upon its own laws, should be followed.

100 U. S. 226-234, 25 L. 577, CRAIG v. SMITH.

Appeal and error.— Only those original papers should be transmitted on appeal which require actual inspection as originals, in order to give them full effect, p. 232.

Cited in Nashua, etc., R. Corp. v. Boston, etc., R. Corp., 61 Fed. 243, 21 U. S. App. 50, holding bringing of whole record unnecessary where appeal is on question of law alone.

Equity.— Allowing introduction of newly-discovered evidence under bill of review, to prove facts in issue on former hearing, is a matter in sound discretion of court, to be exercised sparingly, and only under circumstances which demonstrate it to be indispensable to the merits and justice of the cause, p. 234.

Approved in Society of Shakers v. Watson, 77 Fed. 515, 516, 47 U. S. App. 170, and Hilts v. Ladd, — Or. —, 58 Pac. 34, where new evidence consisted in mere accumulation of witnesses to fact once litigated; Snyder v. Botkin, 37 W. Va. 368, 16 S. E. 595, holding bill of review alleging matters supplemental to original bill, properly dismissed.

100 U. S. 235-238, 25 L. 645, UNITED STATES v. PERRYMAN.

Indians.— Sections 2154 and 2155, revised statutes, providing that any white man convicted of taking property of friendly Indian shall be sentenced to repay double value thereof, and, if unable to pay, such Indian shall be reimbursed from treasury, has no application where theft was by negro, p. 238.

100 U. S. 239-250, 25 L. 580, OATES v. NATIONAL BANK.

Bills and notes.— Alabama act of April 8, 1873, amending section 1833, revised code, places bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable at designated places, on same basis as to immunity from set-offs or equities, as bills and notes payable at banks, p. 244.

Approved in Mobile Savings Bank v. Patty, 16 Fed. 752, holding Alabama act of 1873, regarding negotiable instruments, repealed act of 1867, where conflicting therewith; Gwathmay v. Clisby, 24 Blatchf. 403, 31 Fed. 223, holding bills of exchange drawn and accepted in Alabama, governed by commercial law, although not payable at designated place.

Statutes.— Courts should not defeat clearly-expressed legislative intent by adhering too rigidly to mere letter of the statute, or technical rules of construction, p. 244.

Reaffirmed in Lee Kan v. United States, 62 Fed. 919, 15 U. S. App. 516, and State v. Smith, 40 Ark. 433. Cited and principle applied in Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 35, 27 L. 365, 2 S. Distinguished in Bank of Sherman v. Apperson, 4 Fed. 31, holding State statute enlarging negotiability of bills and notes, binding on Federal courts; New Orleans, etc., Co. v. Southern Brewing Co., 36 Fed. 835, following State decisions in construction of State laws; Pipps v. Harding, 70 Fed. 476, 34 U. S. App. 148, holding Federal courts will administer law of State which controls contract.

Bills and notes.—Creditor taking negotiable note before maturity, so indorsed that he becomes a party thereto, as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, and in consideration of extension of time to debtor, is a holder for value, unaffected by equities between antecedent parties, p. 248.

Followed in Newman v. Aultman, etc., Co., — Tenn. Ch. App. —, 51 S. W. 201, a like case. Cited and principle applied in American File Co. v. Garrett, 110 U. S. 294, 28 L. 152, 4 S. Ct. 93, and Mobile Savings Bank v. Board of Supervisors, 24 Fed. 112, both holding fact that bonds were taken for pre-existing debt does not render holder any the less a bona fide holder for value; Black v. Reno, 59 Fed. 919, and Greenway v. Orthwein Grain Co., 85 Fed. 538, 56 U. S. App. 527, both holding taker of note by way of pledge to secure repayment of simultaneous loan, acquires it for value; Tabor v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 48 Ark. 460, 3 Am. St. Rep. 244, 3 S. W. 807, and Dearman v. Trimmer, 26 S. C. 511, 2 S. E. 504, holding one receiving commercial paper before maturity, as security for precedent debt, a holder for value, unaffected by previous equities; Spencer v. Sloan, 108 Ind. 188, 58 Am. Rep. 39, 9 N. E. 152, and Nat. Bank v. Dakin, 54 Kan. 662, 45 Am. St. Rep. 302, 39 Pac. 181, both holding pre-existing debt sufficient consideration for transfer of collaterals as security; Deere v. Marsden, 88 Mo. 514, holding express agreement to delay suit on pre-existing debt until collateral matures, constitutes transferee holder for value. Cited generally in Winship v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 42 Ark. 24, holding possession by payee prima facie evidence of title to note.

Distinguished in Loewen v. Forsee, 137 Mo. 43, 59 Am. St. Rep. 497, 38 S. W. 715, and Napa Valley, etc., Co. v. Rinehart, 42 Mo. App. 178, both holding holder of note as collateral for pre-existing debt, without other consideration, holds liable to prior equities; Conrad v. Fisher, 37 Mo. App. 413, 8 L. R. A. 166, holding pledge as security for antecedent debt, creditor parting with no new value, does not constitute pledgee purchaser for value.

Banks and banking.—National banking act, while subjecting to penalty bank taking usurious interest, does not authorize courts to declare contracts under which it is taken void, p. 250.

Approved in Slaughter v. First Nat. Bank, 109 Ala. 161, 19 So. 432, holding penalties of banking act cannot be set off in action on note; Neilsville Bank v. Tuthill, 4 Dak. 301, 30 N. W. 155, holding, unless statute makes purchase of note by bank void, maker cannot plead ultra vires; Hill v. National Bank of Barre, 21 Blatchf. 259, 15 Fed. 433, and Boerner v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 90 Tex. 445, 39 S. W. 286, both holding one paying national bank usurious interest, can recover double whole amount paid.

Usury.—Where contract for indorsement rests upon sufficient valid consideration, presence of additional illegal consideration, such as payment in advance of usurious interest, does not destroy entire contract, p. 250.

Approved in McBroom v. Scottish Investment Co., 153 U. S. 325, 38 L. 732, 14 S. Ct. 854, holding sections 1736-1738, compiled laws of New Mexico, make contract for usurious interest void only as to excess of legal rate; Davis v. Seeley, 71 Mich. 219, 38 N. W. 906, holding negotiable instruments enforceable in hands of bona fide holders, although unenforceable between original parties; Scottish, etc., Investment Co. v. McBroom, 6 N. Mex. 587, 30 Pac. 863, holding reservation of usurious interest does not avoid contract, unless statute so declares; Memphis Bethel v. Bank, 101 Tenn. 133, 45 S. W. 1072, holding fact that contract is usurious between parties does not affect innocent holder; Hoots v. Williams, 116 Ala. 374, 22 So. 498, refusing to extend contrary Alabama doctrine to purchaser at foreclosure sale, without notice that mortgage was affected by usury; Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. Scott, 91 Va. 656, 50 Am. St. Rep. 863, 22 S. E. 488, 29 L. R. A. 829, holding plea of usury not sustainable in action by bona fide holder for value, acquiring before maturity; dissenting opinion in Ward v. Sugg, 113 N. C. 501, 18 S. E. 721, 24 L. R. A. 283, majority holding note embracing usurious interest void.

Distinguished in Ward v. Sugg, 113 N. C. 493, 18 S. E. 717, 24 L. R. A. 281, holding note embracing usurious interest void as against maker in hands of purchaser for value, before maturity.

Public lands.—History and status of San Francisco pueblo lands reviewed, pp. 251-255.

Cited in Baker v. Brickell, 87 Cal. 334, 25 Pac. 490, holding San Francisco held pueblo lands in trust for inhabitants, subject to governmental regulations; Galvin v. Palmer, 113 Cal. 52, 45 Pac. 173, holding, upon conquest of California, title to pueblo lands not in private ownership, passed to United States; San Francisco v. Le Roy, 138 U. S. 664, 34 L. 1099, 11 S. Ct. 366, arguendo.

Public lands.—Title of San Francisco to municipal lands vests upon decree of Circuit Court, as entered May 18, 1865, and confirmatory act of 1866, p. 255.

Public lands.—Trespassers in possession at time of passage of act of 1866, confirming San Francisco's title to pueblo lands, in trust for parties in bona fide actual possession, are not beneficiaries thereunder, as against parties subsequently recovering possession in ejectment, p. 256.

Public lands.—Right of pre-emption cannot be acquired by intrusion and trespass upon lands in actual possession of others, p. 256.

Reaffirmed in Davis v. Scott, 56 Cal. 171, and Durand v. Martin, 120 U. S. 369, 30 L. 677, 7 S. Ct. 589, both holding California school lands not open to pre-emption while in possession of State's patentee; North, etc., Min. Co. v. Orient Min. Co., 6 Sawy. 508, 11 Fed. 128, holding trespasser acquires no rights against actual possessor of claim, irrespective of latter's compliance with statute; Field v. Gray, 1 Ariz. 407, 25 Pac. 793, holding one working mining claim may eject intruders showing no superior title; McBrown v. Morris, 59 Cal. 74, where entry was made on inclosed dairy land; Keller v. Berry, 62 Cal. 490, where defendant, by connivance of mortgagor, attempted to enter homestead on mortgaged land; Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 123, 26 N. W. 892, holding actual possession of mining claim sufficient evidence of title against intruder; Nickals v. Winn, 17 Nev. 195, 30 Pac. 436, holding pre-emption rights cannot be acquired on land occupied by one not entitled to make pre-emption; dissenting opinion in Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 641, 31 L. 853, 8 S. Ct. 1239, arguendo.

Distinguished in Haven v. Haws, 63 Cal. 515, 516, holding claim to whole quarter-section may be vitiated by settlement on unin-closed half; Bullock v. Rouse, 81 Cal. 595, 22 Pac. 920, holding land by reason of dilapidated fences, and lack of improvements, not in actual possession; Caldwell v. Bush, 6 Wyo. 359, 45 Pac. 492, where entry was made on land merely inclosed for grazing.

Public lands.—Right of pre-emption cannot be acquired by entry on lands, claim to which, under a foreign title, is pending before United States tribunals. p. 256.

Approved in United States v. Williams, 12 Sawy. 147, 30 Fed. 314, holding land not open to settlement pending contest of State's right to select same; dissenting opinion in Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 296, arguendo.

Distinguished in Lockhart v. Wills, 9 N. Mex. 355, 54 Pac. 340, holding lands within boundaries of Mexican grant in New Mexico, and sub judice in court of private land claims, open to exploration and purchase under Federal mining laws.

Removal of causes.—Petition representing that act for which petitioner was indicted was done by right of his office as revenue collector, makes case for removal to Federal court, p. 261.

Approved in Omaha, etc., Ry. v. Cable, etc., Co., 32 Fed. 729, and St. Paul, etc., Ry. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 68 Fed. 10, 32 U. S. App. 372, both holding, where face of complaint shows Federal question, jurisdiction of court extends to whole case; Whelan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 35 Fed. 864, 1 L. R. A. 74, and n., holding suit ipso facto, removed by filing petition showing case within act on face thereof; State v. Kirkpatrick, 42 Fed. 694, holding it prerogative of Federal courts to determine upon habeas corpus whether homicide resulted from act done in pursuance of Federal law; State v. Sullivan, 50 Fed. 597, holding removal of prosecution against revenue officer, effected upon filing petition therefor in Federal court; Eighmy v. Poucher, 83 Fed. 856, refusing to remand action against Federal district attorney for malicious prosecution.

Distinguished in Illinois v. Fletcher, 22 Fed. 778, holding mere fact that petitioner held Federal commission at time of indictment, not ground for removal.

Removal of causes.—Section 643, revised statutes, providing for removal to Federal courts of prosecutions against Federal officers for acts done under color of office, includes prosecutions for alleged violation of State laws, p. 262.

Approved in In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 61, 34 L. 70, 10 S. Ct. 667, reprinted in 14 Sawy. 303 (see dissenting opinion in 135 U. S. 89, 93, 94, 34 L. 80, 82, 10 S. Ct. 677, 678, 679), discharging Federal marshal held for homicide, committed in defense of Supreme justice; Georgia v. Bolton, 11 Fed. 218, and State v. Kirkpatrick, 42 Fed. 690, both holding prosecution "commenced" and cause removable, when warrant is issued, irrespective of indictment. Cited generally in Ex Parte Fagg, 38 Tex. Cr. 589, 44 S. W. 297, 40 L. R. A. 215, holding proceeding by municipality to enforce fine for gambling, not a prosecution.

Distinguished in State v. Grand Trunk Ry., 3 Fed. 889, holding criminal case not removable upon claim of alienage.

Removal of causes.—A case arises under the Constitution, or a law or treaty of the United States, either in a criminal prosecution or civil suit, whenever its correct decision depends upon the construction of either, p. 264.

Reaffirmed in Van Allen v. Atchison, etc., R. R., 1 McCrary, 600, 3 Fed. 547, Sowles v. Witters, 46 Fed. 497, and Nashville, etc., Ry. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 181. Cited and principle applied in Bailey v. Mosher, 63 Fed. 491, 27 U. S. App. 339, holding petition averring violation of national bank laws, discloses cause arising under Federal laws; Wood v. Drake, 70 Fed. 883, holding action against Federal marshal for false imprisonment, within jurisdiction of Federal court exclusively; Arkansas v. Kansas, etc., Coal Co., 96 Fed. 357, holding existence of Federal question to be determined from complaint itself. The following have been held to involve Federal questions: *Railroad v. S. 36, 44, 49, 27 L. 847, 850, 852, 3 S. Ct. 38, 45, 49, majority holding civil rights act, prohibiting denial of equal accommodations in inns, etc., not authorized by amendment; King v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 458, 460, 45 Am. Rep. 247, 248, note, majority opinion below. See 25 Am. St. Rep. 875, note on fourteenth amendment.

Distinguished in Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo. 551, 23 Am. St. Rep. 898, 15 S. W. 766, 11 L. R. A. 829, upholding law providing for separate schools for colored children; King v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 446, 455, 45 Am. Rep. 236, 244, holding establishment of schools for separate and exclusive use of whites and negroes, not contrary to amendment; dissenting opinion in Attorney-General v. Abbott, — Mich. —, 80 N. W. 381, majority holding woman ineligible as prosecuting attorney.

Constitutional law.— West Virginia act of 1873, in effect excluding negroes from juries, is in violation of fourteenth amendment, p. 309.

Cited and followed in Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 385, 26 L. 570, holding statute excluding negroes from juries rendered inoperative by adoption of amendment; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. Ct. 636), holding indictment found by grand jury selected under like statute should be set aside; Commonwealth v. Johnson, 78 Ky. 509, holding like statute unconstitutional; dissenting opinion in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 556, 41 L. 262, 16 S. Ct. 1145, majority opinion below; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 383, 42 L. 788, 18 S. Ct. 384, majority upholding Utah law prohibiting employment of miners for more than eight hours daily. See also 25 Am. St. Rep. 878, extended note on fourteenth amendment.

Distinguished in Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 321, 25 L. 670, holding negro cannot claim right to jury composed partly of negroes; Gisbon v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 580, 40 L. 1078, 16 S. Ct. 906, holding negro cannot claim colored jury as of right; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 545, 41 L. 259, 16 S. Ct. 1141, upholding Louisiana law requiring equal separate accommodations on trains for whites and negroes; Ex parte Murray, 66 Fed. 298, holding failure to summon colored jurors to try negro not violative of amendment; Green v. State, 73 Ala. 34, and State v. Joseph, 45 La. Ann. 905, 12 So. 935, both holding fact that venire included only whites raises no presumption of exclusion of negroes; Vierling v. Stifel, etc., Co., 15 Mo. App. 131, upholding statute allowing either party right to special venire; Nevada v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 59, 40 Am. Rep. 493, holding exclusion of Mongolians from juries not violative of amendment.

Constitutional law.— Whether fourteenth amendment had any other aim than to prevent discrimination because of race or color, is doubtful, p. 310.

Approved in Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 289, 36 L. 438, 12 S. Ct. 624, and Green v. Elbert, 63 Fed. 309, 27 U. S. App. 325, both holding amendment confers no new rights or privileges on citizens generally; United States v. Sanges, 48 Fed. 84, holding right to testify before Federal grand jury not right conferred by Constitution; Dabbs v. State, 39 Ark. 356, 43 Am. Rep. 276, holding act prohibiting sale of all but certain kinds of pistols not violative of amendment; State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 58, 40 Am. Rep. 491, holding amendment did not confer right of citizenship upon Mongolians; Allen v. Wyckoff, 48 N. J. L. 93, 57 Am. Rep. 550, 2 Atl. 660, holding discrimination against non-residents in game laws not violative of amendment; McKinney v. State, 3 Wyo. 725, 726, 30 Pac. 295, 16 L. R. A. 713, holding exclusion of women from jury not a discrimination prohibited by amendment; In re Hall, 50 Conn. 133, 47 Am. Rep. 627, holding right of women to be admitted as attorneys not secured by amendment; dissenting opinion in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 724, 42 L. 917, 18 S. Ct. 485 majority holding Chinese born in United States a citizen thereof; Alabama, etc., v. R. v. Christian, 82 Ala. 311, 1 So. 123, arguendo.

Constitutional law.—Rights or immunities created or guaranteed by Federal Constitution may be protected by Congress without express delegation of power thereto; hence power of Congress to enforce fourteenth amendment is sufficient to justify enactment of section 641, revised statutes, providing for removal to Federal courts of prosecutions against persons denied equal civil rights of citizens, p. 312.

Reaffirmed in California v. Chue Fan, 14 Sawy. 578, 42 Fed. 865.

Approved in Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 345, 25 L. 679, upholding act of 1875, prohibiting race discrimination in selection of jurors; United States v. Lancaster, 44 Fed. 895, upholding right of Federal court to punish citizen of another State for contempt of its decree; Dubuclet v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 551, 26 L. 504, holding suit to try title to office not removable on claim that negroes were deterred from voting; dissenting opinions in Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 34, 35, 50, 27 L. 847, 852, 3 S. Ct. 38, 39, 50, majority holding civil rights act of 1875, sections 1 and 2, unconstitutional; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 88, 34 L. 80, 10 S. Ct. 676, arguendo.

Distinguished in California v. Chue Fan, 14 Sawy. 583, 42 Fed. 868, holding prosecution against Chinaman for having lottery tickets, under law applying to "any person," not removable.

Removal of causes.—Where petition sets forth case for removal on ground that petitioning prisoner is denied equal rights by State law excluding negroes from juries, it is error to proceed to trial after filing thereof, or to overrule challenge to array of jury, p. 312.

Cited in Henen v. Baltimore, etc., R. R., 17 W. Va. 891, holding order of lower court removing case to Federal court reviewable by State appellate court.

100 U. S. 313-338, 25 L. 667, VIRGINIA v. RIVES.

Removal of causes.—Where petition filed in State court, before trial, exhibits sufficient ground for removal, under section 641, revised statutes, protecting citizens in their civil rights, cause in legal effect is removed and all subsequent proceedings by State court are void, p. 317.

Approved in Kern v. Huidekoper, 103 U. S. 493, 26 L. 357, holding proceedings of State court, subsequent to entry therein of transcript, void; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 116, 122, 37 L. 390, 392, 13 S. Ct. 539, 542, holding Federal jurisdiction depends on statements in petition; Wagner v. Drake, 31 Fed. 852, holding Federal court, after removal, may enjoin further proceedings of State court; Biglew v. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 122, 34 U. S. App. 261, 30 L. R. A. 341, holding removal merely an indirect means by which Federal court secures original jurisdiction.

Distinguished in In re Barnesville Ry., 2 McCrary, 219, 4 Fed. 12, 13, holding Federal court's jurisdiction not complete, so as to hear cause, until day prescribed by statute; California v. Chue Fan, 14 Sawy. 578, 42 Fed. 865, holding petition of Chinaman, held for possessing lottery ticket, alleging fear of unfair trial, stated no cause for removal; Birdseye v. Shæffer, 37 Fed. 826, holding removing order merely suspends State court's jurisdiction, to be resumed on remanding.

Constitutional law.—Object of fourteenth amendment and of civil rights acts (§§ 1977, 1978, R. S.) is to make civil and criminal rights and responsibilities of whites and negroes identical, p. 318.

Approved in Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 385, 26 L. 570, holding adoption of fifteenth amendment enlarged statute rendering only electors eligible to juries, to include negroes; Claybrook v. Owensboro, 16 Fed. 302, holding Kentucky act, discriminating between races in distribution of school fund, unconstitutional; Davenport v. Cloverport, 72 Fed. 694, holding act taxing whites alone for exclusive schools, unconstitutional; Nevada v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 58, 40 Am. Rep. 491, holding right of citizenship not conferred on foreign-born Chinese by amendment; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 45, 38 L. 901, 14 S. Ct. 1112, holding judgment that purchaser at probate sale of land of living person is entitled thereto, contrary to amendment; McKinney v. State, 3 Wyo. 726, 30 Pac. 295, 16 L. R. A. 713, holding amendment does not prohibit discrimination because of sex; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 383, 42 L. 788, 18 S. Ct. 384, upholding Utah eight-hour law, respecting miners; dissenting opinions in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 556, 41 L. 262, 16 S. Ct. 1145, majority opinion, infra; People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 458, 45 Am. Rep. 247, note, majority holding establishment of separate, exclusive schools for different races not violative of amendment.

Distinguished in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 545, 41 L. 259, 16 S. Ct. 1141, holding Louisiana act, requiring railroads to provide equal, separate, exclusive accommodations for each race, not violative of amendment.

Constitutional law.—Provisions of fourteenth amendment refer to State action exclusively, not to that of individuals, p. 318.

Reaffirmed in Claybrook v. Owensboro, 16 Fed. 301. Cited and principle applied in Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 12, 27 L. 839, 3 S. Ct. 22, 45 Am. Rep. 252, note, holding acts of 1875, prohibiting denial of equal accommodations in inns, etc., not warranted by amendment; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 639, 27 L. 294, 1 S. Ct. 609, holding section 5519, revised statutes, punishing interference with equal rights by individuals, unconstitutional; Le Grand v. United States, 12 Fed. 580, holding Congress lacks power to punish individuals who invade rights protected by amendment; Smoot v. Kentucky, etc., Ry., 13 Fed. 344, holding discrimination in accommodations, by railroad, not within amendment; Pacific Gas Imp. Co. v. Ellert, 64 Fed. 430, 431, holding prohibition of taking property without due process applies to acts of persons acting under State authority; Nashville, etc., Ry. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 184, holding amendment covers State action through every department of State government; Kiernan v. Multnomah, 95 Fed. 849, holding amendment does not cover unlawful taking of property by individual; Ex parte Alabama, 71 Ala. 366, holding existence of local race prejudice not ground for removal, under section 641, revised statutes; Clark v. Maryland, 87 Md. 660, 41 Atl. 129, holding 'semi-public educational institution may exclude negroes.

Removal of causes.—Section 641, revised statutes, providing for removals of prosecutions against defendants denied equal rights, refers only to legislative denial of such rights; hence it only authorizes removal before commencement of trial, p. 319.

Approved in Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 116, 117, 118, 27 L. 357, 1 S. Ct. 631, 632, 633, holding remedy of accused, if State court refuses to set aside panel, is through highest State court to Supreme Court; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 285, 35 L. 508, 11 S. Ct. 741, holding objection to jury should be raised in trial court and by error, not by habeas corpus to Federal courts; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 583, 40 L. 1079, 16 S. Ct. 907, holding exclusion of negroes from grand jury will not authorize removal, under section 641; California v. Chue Fan, 14 Sawy. 582, 583, 42 Fed. 863, holding prosecution against Chinaman for possessing lottery ticket, not removable before trial on ground of maladministration of law; Ex parte Murray, 66 Fed. 298, 299, denying habeas corpus on petition alleging that commissioners had failed to summon negroes for jury; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 114, 37 L. 389, 13 S. Ct. 538, prosecution of crimes against States may be interfered with only where removal is expressly authorized; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 394, 26 L. 573, arguendo; Dubuclet v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 551, 26 L. 504, holding suit to try title to State office, because of exclusion of negroes from voting, not removable.

Removal of causes.—Petition for removal, under section 644, revised statutes, must affirm that petitioner is actually denied equal rights, not merely apprehension of subsequent denial, p. 320.

Approved in Carter v. State, — Tex. Crim. App. —, 48 S. W. 510, holding motion to quash indictment for exclusion of negroes from jury, supported only by defendant's affidavit, properly overruled.

Removal of causes.—When subordinate State officer, in violation of State law, undertakes to deprive defendant of equal rights, as by exclusion of negroes from jury, such denial cannot be said to be that of the trial court, justifying removal to Federal court, p. 321.

Cited in Green v. State, 73 Ala. 34, 35, refusing to inquire into acts of persons empowered to select jurors.

Civil rights.—Colored defendant cannot claim, as of right, to be tried by jury composed partly of negroes, p. 323.

Commonwealth*, 81 Va. 485, cases on all fours with principal case; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 117, 119, 27 L. 357, 1 S. Ct. 631, 633, holding fact that panel consisted solely of whites, not ground for setting same aside; Cooper v. State, 64 Md. 47, 20 Atl. 988, holding fact that jury consisted exclusively of whites, not in itself a denial of rights; Nevada v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 60, 40 Am. Rep. 493, holding Chinese not entitled to jury composed partly of Chinese; Cavitt v. State, 15 Tex. App. 199, holding fact that grand jury was composed exclusively of whites no denial of rights; People v. Hampton, 4 Utah, 261, 262, 9 Pac. 510, holding Mormon not entitled to jury composed partly of Mormons; dissenting opinion in Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 398, 401, 402, 26 L. 574, 575, majority holding negroes unlawfully excluded from jury. See also 25 Am. St. Rep. 878, extended note on fourteenth amendment.

Mandamus does not lie to control judicial discretion, except where same has been abused, p. 323.

Cited in State v. Barnes, 25 Fla. 304, 23 Am. St. Rep. 521, 5 So. 725, refusing mandamus to control comptroller's discretion in rejecting bond; dissenting opinion in State v. Ross, 118 Mo. 77, 23 S. W. 210, majority holding order removing receiver not assailable in mandamus on account of judge's kinship with stockholders.

Mandamus lies where lower court has acted outside of the exercise of its discretion or of its jurisdiction, p. 324.

Cited and applied in In re Washington, etc., R. R., 140 U. S. 95, 35 L. 341, 11 S. Ct. 674, holding mandamus proper remedy for unauthorized allowance of interest, error not lying; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 123, 37 L. 392, 13 S. Ct. 542, awarding mandamus to compel remanding of prosecution improperly before Federal court; Gaines v. Rugg, 148 U. S. 243, 37 L. 437, 13 S. Ct. 617, awarding mandamus where lower court improperly entered judgment of reversal; Grinsfelder v. Street Ry., 19 Wash. 524, 67 Am. St. Rep. 744, 53 Pac. 721, 41 L. R. A. 517, holding duty of street railway to continue operation enforceable by mandamus. See also 89 Am. Dec. 739, extended note on mandamus.

Mandamus.—Previous demand is unnecessary where mandamus is sought to compel performance of duty of public nature, per Field, J., concurring, p. 330.

Courts.—In general, the issuance of habeas corpus by Supreme Court, directed to an inferior Federal court, is an exercise of appellate jurisdiction, p. 341.

Reaffirmed in Ex parte Hung Hang, 108 U. S. 553, 27 L. 812, 2 S. Ct. 864, holding Supreme Court can only issue habeas corpus under its appellate jurisdiction.

Habeas corpus.—While habeas corpus cannot generally be made to subserve purposes of writ of error, yet where prisoner is held without lawful authority, and under order beyond jurisdiction of inferior Federal court, Supreme Court will, in favor of liberty, grant writ, not to review whole case, but to examine authority of court below to act at all, p. 343.

Cited and principle applied in Ex parte Rowland, 104 U. S. 612, 26 L. 864, holding proceedings for contempt of valid order not reviewable on habeas corpus; Ex parte Crouch, 112 U. City Council*, 54 Tex. 392, holding mandamus will afford relief when applicant is held under void process;

Ex parte Degener, 30 Tex. App. 576, holding only ground for release of person sentenced by another court, is want of jurisdiction over person or cause; Ex parte Mooney, 26 W. Va. 40, 53 Am. Rep. 62, holding prisoner cannot be discharged on habeas corpus, however erroneous judgment may be, if court had jurisdiction; Miskimins v. Shaver, — Wyo. —, 58 Pac. 417, holding appellate court, on habeas corpus, may inquire into power of lower court to commit for contempt. Cited generally in In re Mineau, 45 Fed. 189, holding marshal holding criminal warrant may apply for habeas corpus for release of prisoner held under civil execution; United States v. Doherty, 27 Fed. 733, arguendo; dissenting opinion in In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 77, 34 L. 76, 10 S. Ct. 673, majority holding one detained for act done in pursuance of Federal law may be brought before Federal court on habeas corpus; Ex parte Henshaw, 73 Cal. 509, 15 Pac. 120, majority holding judgment declaring office vacant, although founded on repealed statute, unassailable on habeas corpus. See 26 Am. Dec. 40, note, 23 Am. St. Rep. 108, extended note.

Constitutional law.—Purpose of thirteenth and fourteenth amendments was to confer upon colored race perfect equality of civil rights with whites, p. 345.

Cited and relied on in Claybrook v. Owensboro, 16 Fed. 302, holding law discriminating between races in distribution of school fund, unconstitutional; People v. King, 110 N. Y. 425, 6 Am. St. Rep. 394, 18 N. E. 247, 1 L. R. A. 295, upholding act prohibiting exclusion by reason of color, from equal accommodations in places of amusement. The following cases cite the principal case generally as to scope of protection to equal rights of citizens: Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 383, 42 L. 788, 18 S. Ct. 384, upholding Utah eight-hour mining law; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 676; 42 L. 900, 18 S. Ct. 467, holding Chinese born in United States, of alien parents, a citizen; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 225, 42 L. 1016, 18 S. Ct. 588, holding unequal and discriminating administration of impartial law, within prohibition; In re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 389, 1 Fed. 521, holding California act of 1880, prohibiting employment of Chinese, unconstitutional; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawy. 303, 13 Fed. 774, arguendo, California constitutional provisions discriminating between corporations and individuals in assessment, unconstitutional; *United States v. Distinguished in Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 385, 397, 26 L. 570, 574, holding exclusion of negroes from jury, in absence of discriminating State law, no ground for removal; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 260, 19 S. Ct. 173, upholding Tennessee act of 1877, giving preference to resident creditors of foreign corporations within State; Board of Education v. Tinnon, 26 Kan. 17, holding separate, exclusive schools may be established for each race; King v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 446, 45 Am. Rep. 236, upholding establishment of equal, separate, exclusive schools for each race.

Constitutional law.—Whoever, by virtue of public position under State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or takes away equal protection of law, violates inhibitions of fourteenth amendment, and his act is that of the State, p. 347.

Maryland Inst.*, 87 Md. 661, 41 Atl. 129, holding private school, receiving State aid, may exclude negroes; dissenting opinion in Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 57, 58, 59, 27 L. 855, 3 S. Ct. 54, 55, majority holding civil rights act of 1875, sections 1, 2, unconstitutional; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 691, 32 L. 259, 8 S. Ct. 1259, majority upholding Pennsylvania act of 1885, prohibiting manufacture of oleomargarine. See 45 Am Rep. 248, 252, note, on fourteenth amendment.

Distinguished in In re Ah Lee, 6 Sawy. 413, 5 Fed. 902, holding person imprisoned under valid law, but by judge appointed under unconstitutional law, not imprisoned without due process. Criticised in Green v. State, 73 Ala. 36, holding violation of equal rights, by subordinate officer, not the act of the State.

Jury.—Selection of jurors, whether made by judge or not, is merely a ministerial act, p. 348.

Jury.—Section 4, act of March 1, 1875, prohibiting race discrimination in selection of jurors, is constitutional, hence habeas corpus denied State judge held under Federal indictment for violation thereof, p. 349.

Approved in Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 289, 36 L. 438, 12 S. Ct. 625, holding every right guaranteed by Constitution may be protected by Congress; dissenting opinions in Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 123, 27 L. 359, 1 S. Ct. 636, majority opinion below; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 44, 27 L. 850, 3 S. Ct. 45, majority opinion below; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 556, 41 L. 262, 16 S. Ct. 1145, majority upholding Louisiana law requiring railroads to provide separate, equal accommodations for each race. See 45 Am. Rep. 254, note.

Distinguished in Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 118, 27 L. 357, 1 S. Ct. 632, holding, in absence of discriminatory statute, prisoner cannot allege, before trial, denial of equal rights; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 12, 15, 27 L. 839, 840, 3 S. Ct. 22, 24, holding civil rights act of 1875, sections 1, 2, prohibiting denial of equal accommodations in inns, etc., unconstitutional.

Constitutional law.—Scope of fourteenth amendment discussed and held to extend to equal protection of civil as distinguished from political rights, per Field, J., dissenting, p. 367.

Cited in dissenting opinions in Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 312, 25 L. 667, and Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 408, 409, 26 L. 578, holding congressional legislation interfering with selection of jurors in State courts, unwarranted. See 25 Am. St. Rep. 877, note.

Constitutional law.—United States has no constitutional authority to compel State officers to perform their duties, per Field, J., dissenting, p. 359.

Approved in Sturtevant v. Armsby Co., 66 N. H. 559, 49 Am. St. Rep. 629, 23 Atl. 368, holding assignment under foreign insolvency law will not prevail against subsequent attachment of citizen or non-resident; Percey v. Powers, 51 N. J. L. 434, 14 Am. St. Rep. 695, 17 Atl. 970, holding right to testify in own behalf a civil right not deniable on account of religious belief; Brown v. Stewart, 60 Wis. 592, 50 Am. Rep. 391, 19 N. W. 431, holding right of extradition rests on comity of States; Green v. State, 73 Ala. 37, arguendo.

Trial.—Duties of county judge in selection of jurors are judicial, per Field, J., dissenting, p. 359.

Cited, arguendo, in Philbrook v. Newman, 85 Fed. 145, holding judges not liable to civil suit for disbarment of attorney.

Distinguished in People v. District Court, — Colo. —, 58 Pac. 609, 610, and Ex parte Bowler, 16 Mo. App. 21, both holding constitutionality of act not reviewable on habeas corpus, jurisdiction being original.

Elections.—Under its constitutional power to regulate elections for senators and representatives, Congress, without assuming exclusive control of whole subject, may alter or add to regulations made by States, pp. 383, 385.

Cited in Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 662, 28 L. 277, 4 S. Ct. 157, holding power to regulate congressional elections not annulled because of simultaneous State election.

Distinguished in Ex parte Perkins, 29 Fed. 905, holding fact that representative is to be elected, does not authorize regulation of election in other matters.

Constitutional law.—Where States and National government possess concurrent authority, that of latter is paramount; hence, congressional regulations of elections for Congress supersede those of State, where inconsistent, pp. 385-392.

Approved in United States v. Conway, 18 Blatchf. 569, 6 Fed. 52, holding State law no excuse for interference with Federal election officer; Ex parte Geissler, 9 Biss. 497, 4 Fed. 191, denying right of State to interfere with Federal election supervisor; In re Appointment of Supervisors, 52 Fed. 262, holding Georgia registration law void, as conflicting with section 2005, revised statutes; In re Massey, 45 Fed. 632, holding State election laws cannot justify refusal to produce ballots before Federal grand jury; In re Huttman, 70 Fed. 703, holding revenue collector cannot be compelled to divulge records in State court, contrary to departmental regulations.

Elections.—Under its constitutional power to regulate elections for Congress, Congress may pass laws punishing State election officers for committing frauds at such elections, p. 388.

Approved in In re Coy, 127 U. S. 743, reprinting S. C., 31 Fed. 804, holding Congress may require State officers to perform duties under State laws at congressional elections; United States v. Bader, 4 Woods, 190, 16 Fed. 117, holding fraudulent addition to list of voters punishable under section 5515, revised statutes; United States v. O'Connor, 31 Fed. 452, holding Congress may impose penalties for violating State election laws at congressional election; United States v. Kelsey, 42 Fed. 883, reaffirming rule.

Elections.—Congress, by refraining from altering State laws respecting congressional elections, has in effect adopted them, and has power to provide additional means for their enforcement, p. 389.

Approved in United States v. Coy, 32 Fed. 542, 543, holding violation of State election law at congressional election, an offense against United States under section 5515, revised statutes; Sowles v. Witters, 46 Fed. 499, holding State law respecting enforcement of judgments, adopted by Federal court, becomes law of United States; In re Kelly, 71 Fed. 547, holding State criminal laws may be adopted by Federal government for land acquired within State.

Distinguished in dissenting opinion in In re Coy, 127 U. S. 761, 762, 32 L. 282, 8 S. Ct. 1274, majority refusing to discharge petitioner held for violation of State election laws.

Elections.—Person owing duty to two sovereigns is amenable to both for its performance, hence; State election officers are liable to United States as well as to State, for commission of fraud in congressional election, p. 391.

Approved in Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 139, 33 L. 290, 10 S. Ct. 49, holding same act may constitute offense equally against United States and State; In re Green, 134 U. S. 380, 33 L. 953, 10 S. Ct. 587, upholding concurrent jurisdiction of State over indictment for illegal voting at presidential election; *United States v. 100 U. S. 446-456, 25 L. 695, CASE v. BANK.

Limitation of actions.—Action against bank for damages arising from refusal to permit transfer of its stock, is not action on "quasi-offense" prescribed, in Louisiana, by one-year limitation, p. 452.

Reaffirmed in St. Romes v. Cotton Press Co., 127 U. S. 620, 621, 32 L. 292, 8 S. Ct. 1338, 1339. Approved in Citizens' Bank v. Hyams, 42 La. Ann. 733, 7 So. 701, holding prescription does not run against debt secured by pledge while pledgee retains same.

Distinguished in Conger v. City, 32 La. Ann. 1253, holding, when pledgor in possession for pledgee, has sold pledge, prescription not interrupted by existence thereof.

Bank cashiers are held out to public as having authority to act according to general usage and course of business conducted by banks, and their acts within scope thereof bind bank in favor of strangers ignorant of secret instructions regarding particular case, p. 454.

Approved in Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 50 Fed. 804, holding vice-president of bank has authority to negotiate loan; Birmingham, etc., Co. v. National Bank, 99 Ala. 386, 13 So. 114, 20 L. R. A. 603, holding notice received by cashier, notice to bank; *First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Qualified in Second Nat. Bank

v. National Bank, 8 N. Dak. 54, 76 N. W. 506, holding pledgee suing bank for refusal to transfer, can only recover value of his interest in stock.

Banks and banking.— Unless forbidden by bank's charter or by-laws, cashier may properly make or superintend transfers of shares of its capital stock, p. 455.

Reaffirmed in National Bank v. Watsontown Bank, 105 U. S. 221, 26 L. 1041. Approved in Merchants' Bank v. Citizens' Gas, etc., Co., 159 Mass. 507, 38 Am. St. Rep. 455, 34 N. E. 1084, holding treasurer of gas company has authority to sign note binding corporation; Bank v. Dick, 73 Mo. App. 356, holding cashier may take book account in payment of note due bank. Cited, arguendo, in Robertson v. Buffalo, etc., Bank, 40 Neb. 241, 58 N. W. 716, holding president has no authority to bind bank to gratuitous donation. See 77 Am. Dec. 763, note.

Distinguished in Holden v. Upton, 134 Mass. 180, denying authority of savings bank treasurer to transfer to purchaser, note belonging to bank.

100 U. S. 457-482, 25 L. 593, REMOVAL CASES.

Removal of causes.— Removal act of 1875, section 2, construed to mean that when controversy in State court is between citizens of one or more States on one side, and citizens of other States on other side, either party may remove suit to Federal court without regard to position occupied in pleadings as plaintiff or defendant, p. 468.

The following citing cases rely upon the principal case in construing the act: Ayers v. Chicago, 101 U. S. 187, 25 L. 840, and Gage v. Carraher, 154 U. S. 656, 25 L. 989, 14 S. Ct. 1190, reaffirming construction; Pacific R. R. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 298, 25 L. 936, and Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Champlin, 22 Blatchf. 338, 340, 21 Fed. 88, 89, both holding construction applicable to both first and second sections of act; Barney v. Latham, 103 U. S. 211, 26 L. 517, holding removal right not affected because defendant, co-citizen of plaintiff, may be proper party plaintiff; Blake v. McKim, 103 U. S. 337, 26 L. 564, holding suit against two resident and one non-resident executors, not removable by latter; Harter v. Kernochan, 103 U. S. 567, 26 L. 412, holding non-resident sole shareholder, may remove suit against county officers and "unknown holders," to restrain tax levy; Hyde v. Ruble, 104 U. S. 409, 410, 26 L. 824, and Frasher v. Jennison, 106 U. S. 194, 27 L. 132, 1 S. Ct. 174, both holding cause, to be removable, must involve controversy wholly between citizens of different States; Corbin v. Van Brunt, 105 U. S. 578, 26 L. 1176, holding controversy being mere adjunct of principal dispute, not removable; Ayers v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 191, 192, 28 L. 695, 5 S. Ct. 92, 93, holding filing of separate answers by several defendants in foreclosure, raising separate issues, does not create separate controversies within act of 1875, section 2; Hancock v. Holbrook, 112 U. S. 231, 28 L. 715, 5 S. Ct. 116, reversing judgment in cause removed to Circuit Court and brought to Supreme Court on appeal, and ordering cause remanded, record not showing requisite citizenship; *Stone v. Removal of causes.—Objection that petition for removal was not signed, cannot be first raised in Federal court, p. 471.

Approved in Street R. R. v. Hart, 114 U. S. 660, 29 L. 228, 5 S. Ct. 1131, holding absence of oath to petition mere informality, waived by opponent not objecting on motion to remand; Cook v. Seligman, 17 Blatchf. 457, 7 Fed. 267, holding signature of counsel to removal petition sufficient; Deford v. Mehaffy, 13 Fed. 487, denying motion to remand on ground of defective bond, and allowing amendment thereof; Northern Pac., etc., Co. v. Lowenberg, 9 Sawy. 351, 18 Fed. 341, quare, can removal petition be amended in Circuit Court; dissenting opinion in Johnson v. Brewers, etc., Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 580, 9 N. W. 658, majority holding State court's judgment, after erroneous refusal to order removal, valid, unless set aside.

Removal of causes.—Requirement in section 3, removal act of 1875, for bond, with good and sufficient surety, is satisfied by presence of one surety able to respond to conditions of bond, p. 472.

Approved in Chambers v. M'Dougal, 42 Fed. 697, holding case will not be remanded for defects in security.

Removal of causes.—State court has no discretion to refuse acceptance of removal bond, with good and sufficient surety, p. 472.

Approved in Noble v. Massachusetts Ben. Assn., 48 Fed. 333, holding removal effected, notwithstanding State court's refusal to accept sufficient bond; La Page v. Day, 74 Fed. 978, and Monroe v. Williamson, 81 Fed. 986, both holding jurisdiction of State court ceases eo instanti on filing proper petition and bond; Dunn v. Burlington, etc., Ry., 35 Minn. 78, 27 N. W. 451, holding State court may retain jurisdiction, although petition be filed, if case is not within statute; Roberts v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 48 Minn. 530, 51 N. W. 479, arguendo, and Johnson v. Brewers, etc., Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 576, 577, 8 N. W. 298, 299 (see dissenting opinion, 51 Wis. 587, 9 N. W. 662), both holding judgment of State court, after erroneous refusal to allow removal, valid in collateral actions, until set aside.

Distinguished in Railroad v. Rabasse, 44 La. Ann. 180, 10 So. 709, where bond omitted condition for payment of costs in event of wrongful removal.

Removal of causes.—Applications for removal of suits pending at passage of removal act of 1875, were in time, if made during first term of court at which suit could be tried, after act became operative, p. 473.

Reaffirmed in Kings v. Worthington, 104 U. S. 48, 26 L. 654; dissenting opinion in Johnson v. Brewers, etc., Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 579, 9 N. W. 658, arguendo.

Distinguished in Bible Society v. Grove, 101 U. S. 612, 25 L. 848, holding suit tried prior to passage of act, resulting in disagreement of jury, not removable; Phoenix, etc., Ins. Co. v. Walrath, 11 Biss. 436, 16 Fed. 164, where action had been brought in State court after passage of act; Mauley v. Olney, 32 Fed. 709, remanding case commenced before, but removed after repeal of act of 1875.

Removal of causes.—To bar right of removal, on ground of diverse citizenship, under act of 1875, it must appear that trial in State court had actually began, and was in progress in orderly course of proceedings when application was made, p. 473.

Approved in Jifkins v. Sweetzer, 102 U. S. 179, 26 L. 130, denying right to remove after reversal by State appellate court, with instructions to refer to master; Cable v. Ellis, 110 U. S. 397, 28 L. 189, 4 S. Ct. 89, holding removal after intervention in trial, too late; Alley v. Nott, 111 U. S. 476, 28 L. 492, 4 S. Ct. 496, holding hearing on demurrer, on ground that complaint fails to state cause of action, trial within act; Pullman, etc., Car Co. v. Speck, 113 U. S. 86, 28 L. 926, 5 S. Ct. 375, holding cause removable at any time before final hearing is begun; Bank of Marysville v. Claypool, 120 U. S. 269, 270, 30 L. 633, 7 S. Ct. 545, 546, holding application made after verdict, too late; Manning v. Amy, 140 U. S. 141, 35 L. 388, 11 S. Ct. 708, holding conditional application, made before trial, invalid, and subsequent application too late; Miller v. Tobin, 9 Sawy. 412, 18 Fed. 616, holding hearing on demurrer, not such trial as to bar removal; Deford v. Mehaffy, 13 Fed. 486, holding to bar removal, cause must be at issue and triable as to all parties; Maloy v. Duden, 25 Fed. 674, holding removal in time where after calling of cause and continuance at petitioner's request; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. 339, holding application, after appearance on motion for temporary injunction and appeal therefrom, too late; Kalamazoo Wagon Co. v. Snively, 34 Fed. 824, holding application in time, although after setting aside of order dismissing case; Elliott v. Stocks, etc., 67 Ala. 299, holding removal bond filed in time, although case has been continued by consent of petitioner; Velie v. Manufacturers' Co., 40 Fed. 547, and Mecke v. Mineral Co., 122 N. C. 798, 29 S. E. 782, both holding, under act of 1888, petition must be filed before expiration of statutory time to answer, irrespective of extensions by stipulation.

Removal of causes.—State court is not required to relinquish jurisdiction until case is made, which, upon its face, shows that petitioner can remove as a matter of right, p. 474.

Reaffirmed in Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 432, 29 L. 962, 6 S. Ct. 800, and Hickman v. Missouri, etc., Ry., 151 Mo. 654, 52 S. W. 353. The following citing cases apply the principle: Pennsylvania Co. v. Bender, 148 U. S. 258, 37 L. 442, 13 S. Ct. 592, no Federal question arises from act of State court in proceeding after filing of defective removal petition; Merchants' Bank v. Brown, 4 Woods, 265, 17 Fed. 162, holding removal rightly refused where petition did not show diverse citizenship; Stix, etc., Co. v. Keith, 90 Ala. 124, 7 So. 424, holding face of petition must show cause for removal; Southern Pac. R. R. v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 612, refusing writ of prohibition, prohibiting lower court's proceeding after filing of removal petition; Hayes v. Todd, 34 Fla. 239, 15 So. 751, holding State court may refuse acceptance of petition and bond when not in compliance with statute; Angier v. East Tenn., etc., R. R., 74 Ga. 637, holding petition, in connection with record, must make case for removal; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffith, 104 Ga. 57, 30 S. E. 420, holding State court should determine whether, as matter of law, cause is removable; Bosler v. Booge, 54 Iowa, 252, 6 N. W. 301, holding suit cannot be removed for diverse citizenship, before filing of pleading by defendant; Bixby v. Blair, 56 Iowa, 420, 9 N. W. 320, holding, in passing upon application for removal, decision should be based on whole record; Stone v. Sargent, 129 Mass. 510, holding party demanding removal must show on record that his case comes under statute; National, etc., Ry. v. Pennsylvania R. R., 52 N. J. Eq. 60, 28 Atl. 72, holding State court may pass upon sufficiency of grounds for removal; Hyatt v. McBurney, 18 S. C. 212, holding removal properly denied, record failing to show requisite facts on face thereof; Texas, etc., Ry. v. McAllister, 59 Tex. 356, 361, upholding State court's power to pass upon sufficiency of petition; White v. Holt, 20 W. Va. 810, holding petition insufficient; dissenting opinion in North American, etc., Co. v. Colonial, etc., Co., 3 S. Dak. 604, 605, 54 N. W. 665, majority holding State court's proceedings, after filing of removal petition, invalid.

Distinguished in Carson v. Hyatt, 118 U. S. 286, 30 L. 169, 6 S. Ct. 1054, holding petitioner not estopped by answer from showing her diverse citizenship; Brown v. Murray, etc., Co., 43 Fed. 615, holding omission to ask State court to act on petition no ground for remanding; Monroe v. Williamson, 81 Fed. 984, holding State jurisdiction ceases eo instanti on filing petition showing cause for removal.

Removal of causes.—Party who fails in efforts to obtain removal and is forced to trial under protest, loses no rights by defending action, p. 475.

The following citing cases reaffirm and apply the rule: Railroad Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 141, 26 L. 98, Kern v. Huidekoper, 103 U. S. 492, 26 L. 357, Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. Valley, etc., Mineral Co.*, 89 Fed. 115, Mecke v. Valley, etc., Mineral Co., 89 Fed. 211, Stix, etc., Co. v. Keith, 90 Ala. 125, 7 So. 424, and Howard v. Railway, 122 N. C. 953, 29 S. E. 780. Also cited and applied in Edrington v. Jefferson, 111 U. S. 774, 28 L. 595, 4 S. Ct. 685, holding party forced to hearing in Federal court by erroneous refusal to remand has right of appeal; Baltimore, etc., R. R. v. Ford, 135 Fed. 172, holding motion for continuance in State court, after filing petition, does not confer jurisdiction; City v. Seixas, 35 La. Ann. 38, holding enforced appearance in Federal court pending appeal of appellant from order of removal, not acquiescence; Benedict v. Johnson, 4 S. Dak. 392, 57 N. W. 68, holding appearance after denial of motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, not waiver of objection; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. McMullen, 86 Wis. 508, 56 N. W. 632, holding right to removal not waived by answering and defending on merits after wrongful refusal to order removal; Chesapeake, etc., R. R. v. White, 111 U. S. 137, 28 L. 379, 4 S. Ct. 354, holding remedy for action of State court in proceeding after removal, writ of error after final judgment.

Distinguished in Barnhart v. Davis, 30 Kan. 524, 2 Pac. 634, holding judgment rendered by justice after erroneous refusal to change venue, not void.

Removal of causes.—Although removal act of 1875 requires that transcript be filed in Circuit Court on first day of term, latter is not deprived of jurisdiction by delay caused by accident or fault of State court, p. 475.

Followed in Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 16, 26 L. 646, holding Federal jurisdiction attaching on presentation of petition, not lost by failure to enter record on first day of next term; Woolridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. 666, holding provision of act of 1875, as to filing transcript, directory; Lucker v. Phoenix Assur. Co., 66 Fed. 162, reaffirming holding; Hamilton v. Fowler, 83 Fed. 324, 328, holding record may be filed before next term where special procedure is necessary; Eisenmann v. Delemar, etc., Co., 87 Fed. 250, refusing to remand on mere ground that record was filed seven days after commencement of term; Torrent v. Martin Lumber Co., 37 Fed. 729, holding time for pleading does not begin running until entry of record.

Distinguished in St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. McLean, 108 U. S. 215, 27 L. 704, 2 S. Ct. 499, holding it within discretion of Federal court to remand where record is not filed in time; In re Barnesville, etc., Ry., 2 McCrary, 219, 4 Fed. 13, holding Federal court's jurisdiction not complete, to hear cause, before day prescribed by statute; McLean v. St. Paul, etc., Ry., 17 Blatchf. 367, F. C. 8,893, holding cause remanded after negligent failure to perfect removal, cannot be again removed; White v. Holt, 20 W. Va. 812, holding filing transcript after State court's proper refusal to allow removal does not affect State jurisdiction.

Mechanics' liens.—Under laws of Iowa, mechanic's lien for work done under contract, precedes all incumbrances put on property by mortgage or otherwise after commencement of work, p. 476.

Approved in Thomas, etc., Co. v. Mowers, 27 Kan. 268, holding mechanic's lien dates from commencement of excavation for building, and precedes mortgage obtained thereafter, but before commencement of mechanic's work; Haxtun, etc., Co. v. Gordon, 2 N. Dak. 252, 33 Am. St. Rep. 780, 50 N. W. 709, holding materialman's lien precedes prior mortgage on building. See 54 Am. St. Rep. 423, 424, monographic note.

Assignment.—Agreement to pay out of particular fund is not an equitable assignment; hence, statement in contract that railroad would pay construction company from subscription of certain county is not such taking of collateral security by latter as to vitiate its lien, p. 477.

Miscellaneous.—Pac. Ry. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 582, 40 L. 542, 16 S. Ct. 396.

Aliens.—In absence of proof of naturalization, original citizenship of alien is presumed to have continued, p. 484.

Approved in Green v. Salas, 31 Fed. 107, holding naturalization provable only from record itself; Bode v. Trimmer, 82 Cal. 517, 23 Pac. 188, holding naturalization must be proved by record evidence; Thayer v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 730, 48 N. W. 753, holding fact of having voted and held office does not rebut presumption.

Aliens.—In Virginia, as at common law, aliens may take by grant or devise, but not by descent, p. 484.

Cited in Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 58, 33 N. E. 198, 19 L. R. A. 87, holding alien incapable of taking by descent at common law.

Aliens.—At common law, title of alien is liable to be divested by office found, at pleasure of sovereign, p. 484.

Cited in Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 64, 33 N. E. 200, 19 L. R. A. 88, holding aliens' title valid unless divested by office found.

International law.—Law of nations recognizes liberty of every government to give aliens only such rights, touching real property within its territory, as it sees fit to concede, p. 484.

Cited in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 267, 33 L. 645, 10 S. Ct. 297, holding treaty-making power limited only by Constitution.

Treaty of 1850, with Switzerland, article 5, secures to citizen of either country right to sell property, within the other, falling to him, and which, on account of alienage, he may not hold, and to withdraw proceeds; hence, alien heirs of alien, dying in Virginia, entitled to avails of sale of ancestor's land, sold by public escheator, p. 487.

Treaties.—Where treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive of rights claimable thereunder, and one liberal, latter is to be preferred, p. 487.

The following citing cases apply the principle: Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 272, 33 L. 646, 10 S. Ct. 298, construing French treaties of 1800 and 1853; Schultze v. Schultze, 144 Ill. 296, 36 Am. St. Rep. 434, 33 N. E. 203, 19 L. R. A. 91, holding word "representatives," in Bremen treaty of 1827, covers heirs; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 638, 48 N. E. 457, holding provision in Swedish treaty of 1827, as to disposal of goods, refers to real and personal property; Scharpf v. Schmidt, 172 Ill. 262, 50 N. E. 184, construing Wurtemberg treaty of 1848, as to property rights of aliens; Doehrel v. Hillmer, 102 Iowa, 172, 71 N. W. 205, construing German treaty of 1829, as to property rights of aliens; dissenting opinion in Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 703, 30 L. 772, 7 S. Ct. 765, arguendo; Kinthead v. United States, 150 U. S. 511, 37 L. 1162, 14 S. Ct. 183, construing Russian treaty of 1867, as to ownership of public buildings; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 517, 41 L. 249, 16 S. Ct. 1081, majority reversing S. C., 70 Fed. 605, 607, and holding privilege of hunting (Bannock Indian treaty of 1868), does not confer right to hunt in violation of State laws.

Treaties.—Rights secured by treaty are paramount to State legislation, p. 489.

Reaffirmed in Succession of Rabasse, 47 La. Ann. 1455, 49 Am. St. Rep. 435, 17 So. 867. Approved in In re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 370, 371, 1 Fed. 502, holding California constitutional prohibition of employment of Chinese invalid; In re Race Horse, 70 Fed. 607, holding treaty with Indians paramount to State laws; Opel v. Shoup, 100 Iowa, 424, 69 N. W. 563, 37 L. R. A. 586, holding treaty conferring property rights on aliens, contrary to State Constitution, controls. See 76 Am. Dec. 666, note, 81 Am. Dec. 538, note, and 12 Am. St. Rep. 95, extended note.

Cited, but application refused, in Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 54, 33 N. E. 197, 19 L. R. A. 85, holding disability of non-resident aliens, under Illinois law, not removed by any treaty with Germany.

Treaty-making clause of Constitution is retroactive as well as prospective, p. 489.

Escheats.—Where alien heir recovers avails of sale of ancestor's land sold by public escheator, latter is entitled to retain only percentage allowed by law for making sales of real property in ordinary cases, p. 491.

Attorney and client.—Settled rule of Supreme Court is never to allow counsel on either side to be paid from fund in dispute, p. 491.

Followed in In re Lloyd, 7 Fed. 460, disapproving allowance of attorney's fees to attorney of petitioning creditors from estate of bankrupt; Riddle v. Hudgins, 58 Fed. 494, 19 U. S. App. 144, holding court not justified in ordering payment of attorney from fund in court.

100 U. S. 491-499, 25 L. 558, KIRTLAND v. HOTCHKISS.

Taxation.—Supreme Court can afford citizen of State no relief from taxation thereof, however oppressive, where State laws regulating taxation neither touch upon Federal authority nor violate any constitutional right, p. 498.

The following citing cases apply the principle: Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 80, 26 L. 660, sustaining right of State to regulate taxation; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355, 31 L. 767, 8 S. Ct. 926, holding responsibility for oppressive taxation to people, not courts; Dundee, etc., Co. v. School District, 10 Sawy. 63, 19 Fed. 367, holding State may tax all persons and property within its reach; Chamberlain v. Walter, 60 Fed. 790, holding courts can only interfere with taxation when it is unconstitutional or illegal; Robinson v. Wilmington, 65 Fed. 858, 25 U. S. App. 144, holding Federal courts of equity will not enjoin taxing power of States for mere irregularity or illegality; People, etc., R. R. v. Commrs. of Taxes, 104 N. Y. 250, 10 N. E. 442, holding courts can only interfere when tax transcends legislative power.

Distinguished in Erie R. R. v. Pennsylvania, 153 U. S. 641, 38 L. 851, 14 S. Ct. 956, holding Pennsylvania taxation statute of 1885, section 4, unconstitutional; Cincinnati, etc., R. R. v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky. 500, holding legislative discretion as to taxation does not extend to discrimination.

Taxation.—A debt may, for taxation purposes, be regarded as situated at domicile of creditor, p. 498.

The following reaffirm the rule: Chicago, etc., Ry. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 714, 19 S. Ct. 799, Hauf v. Wilson, 31 Fed. 389, Central Trust v. Chattanooga R. Co., 68 Fed. 689, and Hawk v. Bonn, 6 Ohio C. C. 465. Approved and applied in Bank v. Sedgwick, 104 U. S. 111, 112, 26 L. 704, holding capital of State bank invested in foreign countries, taxable under section 3408, revised statutes; Taylor v. Life Assn., 13 Fed. 496, holding assignment of all assets to receiver passes notes of non-resident debtors; Boyd v. Selma, 96 Ala. 151, 158, 11 So. 396, 398, 16 L. R. A. 733, 736, and n., holding solvent credits evidenced by notes, taxable at owner's residence, although payable in another county; Louisville, etc., Ry. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 486, 23 So. 828, holding State court has no jurisdiction in garnishment, over debt due non-resident, and payable without State; Holbrook v. Ford, 153 Ill. 646, 46 Am. St. Rep. 924, 39 N. E. 1095, 27 L. R. A. 328, holding situs of debt due corporation in State creating same; Dykes

v. Lockwood Mortg. Co., 2 Kan. App. 228, 43 Pac. 271, holding judgment taxable only at domicile of owner; Meyer v. Pleasant, 41 La. Ann. 646, 6 So. 259, holding debts do not lose situs at creditor's domicile, because reduced to judgment at debtor's; Insurance Co. v. Board of Assessors, 44 La. Ann. 764, 11 So. 92, 16 L. R. A. 59, holding debt due non-resident creditor of State not taxable thereon; Railroad v. Commissioners, 91 N. C. 457, holding non-resident holder of stock in North Carolina corporation not taxable in North Carolina; Grant v. Jones, 39 Ohio St. 514, and Myers v. Seaberger, 45 Ohio St. 235, 12 N. E. 798, both holding credits owned by non-residents not taxable in State, although secured by mortgage; Goodsell v. Benson, 13 R. I. 244, holding money debt payable at creditor's domicile; Grundy County v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 94 Tenn. 317, 29 S. W. 121, holding owner's domicile situs for taxation of intangible personal property; Bank of Virginia v. Richmond, 79 Va. 116, holding notes held by bank taxable at place of its location, irrespective of residence of makers; Bragg v. Gaynor, 85 Wis. 488, 55 N. W. 925, 21 L. R. A. 168, debts due non-resident may be applied by equity to payment of debts due another resident from him. See 56 Am. Dec. 529, extended note, and 62 Am. St. Rep. 452, monographic note on this point.

Distinguished in New Orleans v. Stemple, 175 U. S. 321, holding municipal bonds and bank bills taxable where found, irrespective of owner's domicile; Walker v. Jack, 88 Fed. 578, 60 U. S. App. 128, overruling S. C., 79 Fed. 139, 141, holding State may tax credits due non-resident, when invested and controlled by resident agent; Street R. v. Morrow, 87 Tenn. 434, 11 S. W. 354, 2 L. R. A. 861, holding situs of shares for taxation purposes may be fixed at location of corporation.

Taxation.—Federal Constitution does not prohibit State from taxing, in hands of resident citizen, bonds evidencing debts due him from citizens of another State and secured by mortgages on lands therein, p. 499.

The following citing cases apply the principle: Saving Society v. Multnomah, 169 U. S. 431, 42 L. 806, 18 S. Ct. 396, upholding Oregon statute taxing mortgages of Oregon land to mortgagees, in county where land lies; Mackay v. San Francisco, 113 Cal. 398, 400, 45 Pac. 698, 699, holding railroad bonds held in State, taxable therein, although secured by mortgage of property without State; American Coal Co. v. County Commrs., 59 Md. 194, holding assessment on stock not illegal because value was determined by including foreign land of corporation; Detroit v. Lewis, 109 Mich. 160, 66 N. W. 959, 32 L. R. A. 441, holding credits held by resident trustees for non-residents, taxable in State; Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 36, 38 Am. Rep. 549, holding shares of stock of foreign corporation, owned by resident of Ohio, taxable therein; Judge v. Spenser, 15 Utah, 249, 48 Pac. 1100, holding mortgages owned by residents, taxable in State irrespective of location of land; Dwinnell v. Gaylord, 73 Wis. 325, 41 N. W. 524, holding notes secured by mortgage of land in another State, and held for collection therein, taxable at domicile of owner. See 74 Am. Dec. 95, note, and 62 Am. St. Rep. 457, monographic note on situs for purpose of taxation.

Distinguished in Augusta v. Kimball, 91 Me. 609, 40 Atl. 668, 41 L. R. A. 477, holding stock held by non-resident trustees, who have qualified in Maine, not taxable therein; Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 583, holding State statute did not include securities owned by resident, but held in another State.

100 U. S. 500-507, 25 L. 763, PARISH v. UNITED STATES.

Army and navy.—Acts of assistant surgeon-general are acts of surgeon-general and valid until revoked by latter, p. 505.

Approved in Shillito Co. v. M'Clung, 51 Fed. 872, 6 U. S. App. 128, upholding decision of assistant secretary on appeal to secretary of treasury; In re Huttman, 70 Fed. 702, holding acts of revenue commissioner presumed to be acts of secretary of treasury.

Contracts.—Where parties having contracted to furnish ice to government, purchased a quantity thereof, which, through suspension of surgeon-general's order for same, was lost, they should recover amount paid for ice and expense of keeping same until lost, p. 507.

Approved in United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 343, 28 L. 170, 4 S. Ct. 83, holding outlay and expenses recoverable on breach of contract; Howard v. Stillwell, etc., Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 206, 35 L. 150, 11 S. Ct. 503, and Cincinnati Gas Co. v. Western, etc., Co., 152 U. S. 206, 38 L. 413, 14 S. Ct. 525, both holding agreement to pay for loss of profits resulting from breach of contract, not part thereof.

100 U. S. 508-514, 25 L. 631, UNITED STATES v. BOWEN.

Pensions.—Under revised statutes, section 4820, only those pensioners who have not contributed to funds of soldiers' home are required to surrender their pensions thereto while receiving its benefits; hence, recovery allowed for pension withheld from inmate of home, p. 513.

Statutes.—Revised statutes are legislative declaration of statute law on subjects embraced on December 1, 1873, and original statutes can only be looked to, when necessary, to construe doubtful language therein, p. 513.

The following cases reaffirm the rule: Arthur v. Dodge, 101 U. S. 36, 25 L. 949, Cambria Iron Co. v. Ashburn, 118 U. S. 57, 30 L. 61, 6 S. Ct. 930, United States v. Averill, 130 U. S. 339, 32 L. 978, 9 S. Ct. 548, and Bate, etc., Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 33, 39, 39 L.

610, 612, 15 S. Ct. 515, 517. Cited and principle applied in Meyer v. Car Co., 102 U. S. 11, 26 L. 60, holding rule applicable to construction of Iowa code; Vietor v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 499, 500, 26 L. 634, Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 402, 29 L. 426, 6 S. Ct. 99, United States v. State, 44 Ohio St. 538, 9 N. E. 305, and State v. Long, 48 Ohio St. 512, 28 N. E. 1039, all holding former statute not examinable where language of revision is plain; Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 726, 30 L. 782, 7 S. Ct. 972, holding, in construing articles of Louisiana code originally enacted in French and English, French text may be examined to explain ambiguities in English; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 122, 41 L. 943, 17 S. Ct. 515, Barrett v. United States, 169 U. S. 227, 42 L. 726, 18 S. Ct. 331, and Pentlarge v. Kirby, 22 Blatchf. 264, 20 Fed. 900, all holding original acts examinable where meaning of revised act is doubtful; Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S. 420, holding prior acts may be cited to solve, not to create, ambiguity in later; Canan v. Pound Mfg. Co., 23 Blatchf. 174, 23 Fed. 186, and Gwathmay v. Clisby, 24 Blatchf. 400, 31 Fed. 221, both holding original statutes examinable when necessary to construe doubtful language of revision; Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 409, holding original acts examinable to obtain meaning of words in revision; Edison, etc., Light Co. v. United States Electric-Light Co., 35 Fed. 138, construing revised statutes, section 4887, respecting limitation of patents on articles covered by foreign patents; *King v. A. 791, construing revised statutes, sections 751, 752, respecting jurisdiction to issue habeas corpus; In re Dana, 68 Fed. 899, holding mere change of phraseology not construable as change in law; United States v. North American Comm. Co., 74 Fed. 149, affirming rule in construction of act of 1875, regulating seal fishery; Rice v. Sharpleigh, etc., Co., 85 Fed. 563, holding code presumed not to change, but only to revise; old statutes; Steadman v. Bank, 69 Tex. 53, 6 S. W. 676, holding former law, superseded by vague new law, may be resorted to in construing latter; Cortesy v. Territory, 7 N. Mex. 95, 32 Pac. 506, 19 L. R. A. 355, holding revised act must be looked to as embodying law on subject at time of passage; Gaines v. Marye, 94 Va. 227, 26 S. E. 512, holding last expression of legislative will, if embodied in revision, must prevail in construing inconsistent parts of law as revised; Grætz v. McKenzie, 3 Wash. 199, 28 Pac. 333, and Powder River, etc., Co. v. Board of County Commrs., 3 Wyo. 605, 29 Pac. 364, as to effect of combination of two prior statutes in revised statute. Cited generally in United States v. Auffmordt, 19 Fed. 896, holding subsequent acts modify revised statutes, and Ex parte Perkins, 29 Fed. 907.

Distinguished in United States v. Lacher, 134 U. S. 627, 33 L. 1082, 10 S. Ct. 626, holding, where revision is ambiguous, resort may be had to original statute; Bank v. Colgate, 120 N. Y. 395, 24 N. E. 802, 8 L. R. A. 717, and n., holding prior code may be referred to in construing revision.

Municipal corporation's powers do not rest upon contract with State, and may be modified or taken away at will of legislature, p. 525.

The following citing cases apply this principle: Sinton v. Carter, 23 Fed. 537, holding legislature may authorize county to create debt without submission to popular vote; Mayor, etc. v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 222, 34 Pac. 952, and True v. Davis, 133 Ill. 532, 22 N. E. 411, 6 L. R. A. 267, and n., both holding legislature may provide for organizing, uniting, dividing or annulling municipal corporations, at discretion; Woolverton v. Albany, 152 Ind. 79, 52 N. E. 456, and State v. Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. 457, 40 N. E. 514, 27 L. R. A. 750, and n., both holding boundaries of municipal corporations may be extended or restricted, or municipalities consolidated, at legislative discretion; Wooster v. Plymouth, 62 N. H. 212, holding legislature may divide town and property thereof without its consent; Dare v. Currituck, 95 N. C. 192, upholding power of legislature to create new counties from existing counties, and apportion debts; Morris v. Gussett, 62 Tex. 743, affirming rule, but holding legislative power to repeal municipal charters cannot be exercised to injury of creditors; Barre v. School Dist., 67 Vt. 113, 30 Atl. 808, holding State may abolish school districts and transfer their funds to towns; Board v. Board, 30 W. Va. 430, 4 S. E. 643, holding municipal corporations always subject to will of legislature; Richland v. Richland, 59 Wis. 599, 18 N. W. 501, holding statute devoting liquor-license money to counties for pauper support, gave no vested right; Forest v. Langlade, 76 Wis. 610, 45 N. W. 600, holding general law providing for apportionment of debts on creation of new counties, not binding on subsequent legislatures; State Joint School, etc. v. Sweeney, 103 Wis. 406, 79 N. W. 421, denying existence of vested interest in school-district boundaries. See 53 Am. Dec. 471, extended note.

Qualified in Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 653, 655, 42 L. 313, 17 S. Ct. 959, 960, holding disincorporation cannot affect subsisting contracts.

Appeal and error.—Parties not appealing from final decree below cannot be heard in opposition thereto when case is brought up by other parties, p. 527.

Followed in Bensiek v. Thomas, 66 Fed. 106, 27 U. S. App. 765.

Municipal corporations.—Where legislature creates new town out of portion of territory of old one, latter is liable for all debts contracted before separation, p. 528.

The following citing cases apply the principle: Brewis v. Duluth, 3 McCrary, 224, 13 Fed. 335, holding old corporation cannot enforce contribution from new, to which part of its property has been transferred; Board of Supervisors v. Thompson, 61 Fed. 921, 22 U. S. App. 418, holding liabilities of old corporation do not follow severed territory; Perry County v. Conway County, 52 Ark. 432, 12 S. W. 878, 6 L. R. A. 666, and n., holding remaining portion of county retains all county property and debts; Johnson v. San Diego, 109 Cal. 475, 42 Pac. 251, 30 L. R. A. 180, holding imposition of whole bonded debt on part of municipality exclusively benefited thereby, valid; Washington v. Weld, 12 Colo. 154, 20 Pac. 273, holding new county carved from old, receives none of latter's assets and assumes none of its liabilities; Winona v. School Dist., 40 Minn. 19, 12 Am. St. Rep. 692, 41 N. W. 542, 3 L. R. A. 49, holding old district, not being abolished, retains debts and property in territory annexed to new; Bloomfield v. Glen Ridge, 55 N. J. Eq. 507, 37 Atl. 64, holding, on division of municipality, old corporation retains title to all its property; Livingston v. School Dist., 9 S. Dak. 107, 68 N. W. 168, holding old school district liable for debts contracted before annexation of portion of territory to new.

Municipal corporations.—Where municipal corporation is extinguished by legislature and its territory annexed to other towns, in absence of legislation latter are entitled to public property and immunities of former and liable for its debts contracted prior to annexation, p. 528.

The following citing cases rely on the principal case: Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 302, 29 L. 625, 6 S. Ct. 403, reaffirming rule; Pacific Imp. Co. v. Clarksdale, 74 Fed. 533, 41 U. S. App. 68, and Broadfoot v. Fayetteville, 124 N. C. 486, 70 Am. St. Rep. 614, 32 S. E. 806, both holding debts of town, on repeal of its charter, fall to city succeeding thereto; Johnson v. San Diego, 109 Cal. 480, 42 Pac. 252, 30 L. R. A. 181, holding legislature, on making division, may adjust burden of existing debts; Louisville, etc., Ry. v. Boney, 117 Ind. 505, 20 N. E. 434, 3 L. R. A. 438, and n., applying rule to consolidation of railroad companies; *Wellington v. W. 903, holding consolidated school district liable for debts of former districts; District v. Greenfield, 64 N. H. 86, 6 Atl. 486, holding debts of abolished school district payable by town succeeding to property, when less than value thereof; Bloomfield v. Glen Ridge, 54 N. J. Eq. 280, 33 Atl. 927, holding, on division of corporation, property fixed to land within new corporation becomes property of that municipality; People v. Board of Suprs. of Ulster, 94 N. Y. 267, holding creditors' remedy is by mandamus against officers of succeeding towns; Coler v. Dwight, etc., Township, 3 N. Dak. 261, 55 N. W. 592, 28 L. R. A. 654, holding school township becomes, on organization, immediately liable for debts of former district; Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okl. 203, 31 Pac. 194, 21 L. R. A. 847, holding legislature may provide for payment of provisional government's debts by succeeding village corporation; Lawrence Co. v. Meade County, 6 S. Dak. 534, 62 N. W. 133, holding annexing county liable for proportion of floating debt of county partially annexed; O'Connor v. Memphis, 6 Lea, 737 (see dissenting opinion in 6 Lea, 749), holding suit pending against city at date of repeal of charter, renewable against new corporation composed of same people; Prescott v. Lennox, 100 Tenn. 592, 47 S. W. 181, holding each of new towns, created out of former municipality, holds in severalty public property within its limits; De Mattos v. Whatcom, 4 Wash. 130, 132, 29 Pac. 934, 935, holding consolidated city may issue bonds to pay debts of former corporations; Board v. Board, 30 W. Va. 432, 4 S. E. 644, holding legislature, on division of old corporation and creation of new, may apportion property and liabilities; Knight v. Ashland, 61 Wis. 242, 21 N. W. 70, holding attorney may recover from new town for services rendered old, before its annexation; Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 629, 29 N. W. 552, holding, on annexation of one town to another, assets and liabilities of former pass to latter; Comanche County v. Lewis, 133 U. S. 205, 33 L. 607, 10 S. Ct. 289, holding county debts, contracted during valid organization, remain obligations of county, although organization is suspended. See 35 Am. St. Rep. 539, and 59 Am. St. Rep. 555, monographic notes.

Distinguished in Morgan v. Waldwick, 17 Fed. 288, holding, on division of town into two towns, each liable for proportion of debt assumed thereby; Bloomfield v. Glen Ridge, 55 N. J. Eq. 508, 37 Atl. 64, holding, on division of corporation, old corporation retains title to all its property.

Municipal corporations.—Where municipality is extinguished and territory annexed to other towns, power to tax property transferred vests in latter immediately, p. 530.

Cited in Garrett v. Memphis, 5 Fed. 876, holding new corporation may be compelled to levy taxes to pay debt of old.

Municipal corporations, whenever engaging in transactions not public in nature, act under same pecuniary responsibility as individuals, p. 533.

Approved in Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 305, 29 L. 626, 6 S. Ct. 405, holding municipalities deemed private corporations to extent of fixing liability on bonds; Mt. Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 512, 35 Am. St. Rep. 518, 33 N. E. 695, holding municipalities may possess private ownership in property not under legislative control.

Municipal corporations.—Remedy of creditor of extinguished municipal corporation is in equity, against municipalities succeeding to its property and liabilities, p. 534.

Approved in Towle v. Brown, 110 Ind. 68, 10 N. E. 628, holding division of funds, on creation of new township from existing one, matter of equity jurisdiction; Swann v. Summers, 19 W. Va. 132, applying rule to other corporations.

Distinguished in Saving, etc., Assn. v. Alturas, 65 Fed. 684, denying equitable relief where act providing for bond issue provided for payment upon division of county; Livingston v. School Dist., 9 S. Dak. 109, 68 N. W. 169, holding old corporation retained liabilities.

Taxation.—Valuation is part of assessment of taxes, p. 545.

Cited in Bank of Albia v. City Council, 86 Iowa, 31, 33, 52 N. W. 334, 335, holding actual value of national bank stock, less proportionate value of bank's real estate, proper valuation for taxation; State v. Railroad, 54 S. C. 575, 32 S. E. 695, holding official valuation for taxation necessary to constitute liability to pay taxes.

Taxation.—Section 5219, revised statutes, providing that State taxation on national bank shares shall not exceed rate assessed on other capital, refers to entire process of assessment, including valuation of shares as well as rates of percentage charged thereon; hence, New York statute of 1850, permitting deduction of debts from personal property valuation, except as to exclusive property invested in such shares, establishes mode of assessment by which same are valued higher in proportion to real value than other capital, and is invalid as to them, although no greater percentage is levied on valuation, p. 546.

Approved and principle applied in Pelton v. National Bank, 101 U. S. 145, 25 L. 902, holding systematic valuation of all other capital at less rate than national bank stock violative of act; Super- visors v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 311, 315, 26 L. 1050, 1051, affirming S. C., 12 Fed. 87, 90, 91, holding New York statute of 1866, so far as not authorizing deduction for debts of shareholder of national bank, invalid; Evansville Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 324, 26 L. 1054, holding Indiana taxation of national bank shares without permitting deduction of indebtedness, as in case of other moneyed capital, invalid; Boyer v. Boyer, 113 U. S. 694, 695, 28 L. 1090, 1091, 5 S. Ct. 709, holding Pennsylvania statute, exempting from local taxation various kinds of moneyed capital, discriminatory against that invested in national banks; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Britton, 10 Biss. 505, 8 Fed. 868, holding Indiana revenue law invalid; Nat. Albany, etc., Bank v. Wells, 18 Blatchf. 481, 5 Fed. 251, holding assessment, under New York act of 1866, void; Albany Nat. Bank v. Maher, 19 Blatchf. 177, 6 Fed. 419, holding restriction on State power to tax national bank shares prohibits assessment discriminating unfairly against same; Richards v. Rock Rapids, 31 Fed. 508, 512, holding national bank shareholders entitled to right of deduction given taxpayers under section 814, Iowa code; First Nat. Bank v. Richmond, 39 Fed. 314, and Nat. Cartright*, 53 Ark. 365, 22 Am. St. Rep. 211, 14 S. W. 92, holding executor not barred by his own void conveyance from suing to recover land.

Limitation of actions.—Whenever right of action in trustee is barred by limitation, right of cestui que trust is also barred, p. 569.

Reaffirmed in Partee v. Thomas, 11 Fed. 778, and Chase v. Cartright, 53 Ark. 366, 22 Am. St. Rep. 212, 14 S. W. 92. Cited and principle applied in Trimble v. Woodhead, 102 U. S. 649, 26 L. 291, McCartin v. Perry, 39 N. J. Eq. 202, and Mount v. Manhattan Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 215, 3 Atl. 729, holding assignee's failure to recover assigned property within time limited gives bankrupt and creditors no right to do so; Walker v. Cronkite, 40 Fed. 136, holding execution debtor cannot collaterally attack validity of sale after redemption period; Willson v. Louisville Trust Co., — Ky. —, 44 S. W. 122, applying rule where beneficiaries were infants and trust constructive; Nash v. Simpson, 78 Me. 153, 3 Atl. 58, holding assignee's failure to recover property fraudulently conveyed confirms grantee's title.

Executors and administrators.—In California, when action is barred by limitation, against administrator, it is barred against heirs, right of possession and representation of their interests being in him, p. 569.

Approved in Lloyd v. Ball, 77 Fed. 368, 369, 370, holding, under California code, judgment in action by assignee, against administrator of deceased bankrupt, binds heirs; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 343, 2 Am. St. Rep. 822, 14 Pac. 884, holding heir barred, although a minor when action accrued to administrator; Mathews v. Durkee, 34 Fla. 563, 16 So. 413, holding prescriptive title barring administrator, bars heirs; Hyde v. Heller, 10 Wash. 602, 39 Pac. 256, holding legal title vests in administrator for purpose of conveying to purchaser under decedent's sale contract.

Distinguished in Staples v. Connor, 79 Cal. 15, 21 Pac. 380, holding heirs not barred where administrator had never qualified.

100 U. S. 571-578, 25 L. 692, MONTGOMERY v. SAWYER.

Abatement and revival.—In Louisiana, if defendant die pending suit and heir continues proceedings, judgment should be against heir or his succession, and if entered only against deceased eo nomine it is void as a judicial mortgage against third persons, p. 577.

Wagener*, 13 Utah, 241, 44 Pac. 1032, reversing S. C., 12 Utah, 11, 40 Pac. 765, and holding lessee relying upon lessor's declaration of forfeiture, not liable for rent thereafter; Marrow v. Brinkley, 85 Va. 62, 6 S. E. 609, holding party acquiescing in judicial sale cannot, long after, set up lack of notice; Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 269, 19 S. E. 446, 25 L. R. A. 236, and n., holding one who causes his land to be sold under void judicial process, retaining proceeds, estopped to set up invalidity; St. Paul, etc., Ry. v. Sage, 49 Fed. 320, 4 U. S. App. 160, holding laches, independent of limitations, may bar recovery; dissenting opinion in Lake Superior, etc., Co. v. Cunningham, 44 Fed. 843, majority holding State not estopped to claim title, through act of its agent, who was also officer of defendant company. See also 49 Am. Dec. 386, extended note on estoppel.

Limited in Naumburg v. Hyatt, 24 Fed. 904, holding doctrine of estoppel available only for protection, not attack. Cited, but application denied, in Brown v. Cranberry Iron Co., 72 Fed. 102, 25 U. S. App. 679, and Evans v. Belmont, etc., Co., 92 Tenn. 366, 21 S. W. 674, both holding facts did not justify application of doctrine of equitable estoppel. Distinguished in Paxson v. Brown, 61 Fed. 884, 27 U. S. App. 49, holding recital in deed that grantee derives title from certain source, does not estop one claiming under him from deraigning title from true source; Whitney v. Nat., etc., Bank, 84 Fed. 377, holding bank not estopped to set up agent's excess of authority in bidding; Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., Ry., 93 Fed. 119, holding conduct of party sought to be estopped must be viewed in light of contemporaneous understanding of his rights; Brickley v. Edwards, 131 Ind. 10, 30 N. E. 710, holding third party relying on correspondence not addressed to him, cannot claim estoppel; Stone v. Engstrom, 19 R. I. 204, 32 Atl. 918, holding estoppel not enforceable in favor of purchaser, where price was grossly inadequate; Edwards v. Dickson, 66 Tex. 618, 2 S. W. 721, holding representation referring only to future state of things, not estoppel; McLaren v. Jones, 89 Tex. 134, 33 S. W. 850, holding defendant not estopped by declarations neither made to, nor intended for, plaintiff; Trust Co. v. Wagener, 12 Utah, 11, 40 Pac. 765, reversed in 13 Utah, 241, 44 Pac. 1032, holding lessees prevented by knowledge of real facts from claiming estoppel.

Estoppel in pais is a defense available in law, as well as in equity, e. g., available in ejectment, p. 582.

Approved in Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 253, 30 L. 1222, 7 S. Ct. 1204, Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 327, 39 L. 174, 15 S. Ct. 134, Drexel v. Berney, 21 Blatchf. 350, 16 Fed. 524, *Concord v. App. 30, Hagan v. Ellis, 39 Fla. 472, 63 Am. St. Rep. 171, 22 So. 729, and Tracy v. Roberts, 88 Me. 317, 51 Am. St. Rep. 399, 34 Atl. 71, all holding equitable estoppel equally available in law and equity; Pitman v. Mining Co., 78 Mo. App. 441, holding estoppel in pais an available defense before justice of the peace; Duke v. Griffith, 9 Utah, 476, 35 Pac. 514, holding improvements made with plaintiff's knowledge may be set up as estoppel in ejectment.

Cited, but application refused, in Cleveland v. Cleveland, etc., Ry., 93 Fed. 123, holding facts insufficient to establish defense of estoppel. Distinguished in Brown v. Cranberry Iron, etc., Co., 72 Fed. 103, 25 U. S. App. 679, holding issue involving only question of estoppel improperly sent by equity court to law court. Questioned in United States v. California, etc., Land Co., 148 U. S. 45, 37 L. 361, 13 S. Ct. 463, holding one may become bona fide purchaser for value, although holding under quitclaim.

Ejectment can be maintained on title by estoppel, p. 583.

Affirmed in George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 570, 26 L. 233, holding title by estoppel effectual either for attack or defense in ejectment; Bicknell v. Comstock, 113 U. S. 152, 28 L. 963, 5 S. Ct. 400, Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 623, 29 L. 485, 6 S. Ct. 211, and Baker v. Oakwood, 123 N. Y. 29, 25 N. E. 315, 10 L. R. A. 392, all holding continuous adverse possession for period sufficient to bar owner's recovery confers title.

Deeds.—Grantee by quitclaim deed is not bona fide purchaser, p. 584.

Reaffirmed in Runyon v. Smith, 18 Fed. 582, United States v. Sliney, 21 Fed. 895, Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. 167, Hastings v. Nissen, 31 Fed. 600, Dunn v. Barnum, 51 Fed. 361, 10 U. S. 100 U. S. 585-594, 25 L. 585, COUNTY OF CASS v. GILLETT.

Municipal corporations.—Provisions of Missouri Constitution of 1865, requiring assent of two-thirds of voters of county to subscriptions to railroad stock, do not apply where subscription is pursuant to charter granted prior to adoption of Constitution, although contemplated road is a branch, and established under act passed subsequent to Constitution, p. 590.

Approved in Louisiana v. Taylor, 105 U. S. 458, 26 L. 1134, and Ralls v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 731, 26 L. 958, both holding said provisions prospective merely, and upholding bonds issued under prior granted authority; Green Co. v. Conness, 109 U. S. 104, 27 L. 872, 3 S. Ct. 69, holding rights of municipal bondholders to be determined by law as judicially construed when bonds were issued; Scotland v. Hill, 132 U. S. 112, 33 L. 263, 10 S. Ct. 27, upholding bonds issued under authority granted before Constitution went into effect; Lowell v. Railroad, 90 Me. 93, 37 Atl. 873, arguendo. See 98 Am. Dec. 669, extended note.

Municipal corporations.—Where branch road is organized by company, through committee thereof, county subscriptions thereto are not invalidated because partial assignment of franchises to another company was made prior to subscription, p. 591.

Internal revenue.—Tax on interest paid by corporations on bonds under section 122, internal revenue law of 1866, is a tax on the earnings of the corporation, not the bondholder, p. 598.

Reaffirmed and applied in Railroad v. United States, 101 U. S. 550, 25 L. 1070, and Bailey v. Railroad, 106 U. S. 115, 27 L. 83, 1 S. Ct. 67, both reaffirming construction; United States v. Erie Ry., 106 U. S. 330, 703, 27 L. 153, 1 S. Ct. 228 (but see dissenting opinion in 106 U. S. 337, 27 L. 156, 1 S. Ct. 233), decided on authority of principal case; Memphis, etc., R. R. v. United States, 108 U. S. 234, 236, 27 L. 713, 714, 2 S. Ct. 484, 486, holding railroad liable to pay tax on dividends earned in Confederacy and paid in Confederate notes; United States v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 33 Fed. 831, applying same construction to act of July 14, 1870.

Cited generally in United States v. Little Miami, etc., R. R., 1 Fed. 701, holding taxes imposed under said act can be recovered in debt, although not previously assessed.

Arguendo, in Little Miami R. R. v. United States, 108 U. S. 279, 27 L. 725, 2 S. Ct. 629, holding act does not apply to earnings used in construction; Pollock v. Farmers, etc., Trust Co., 157 U. S. 578, 39 L. 818, 15 S. Ct. 688, as to purpose of war revenue acts.

Internal revenue.—Congress may tax earnings of corporations after deducting interest paid on their debts, or may treat same as part of net earnings, p. 598.

Internal revenue.—Tax on interest paid by corporations on bonds, under section 122, internal revenue law of 1866, is not invalidated by provision that amount thereof might be withheld from dividends or interest payable to stock or bondholders, p. 599.

Distinguished in Pollock v. Farmers, etc., Trust Co., 157 U. S. 573, 39 L. 816, 15 S. Ct. 686, holding tax on income derived from interest on municipal bonds, unconstitutional.

Co.*, 5 McCrary, 30, 15 Fed. 52, holding beneficiaries in railway mortgages bound by acts of trustee.

Railroads.—If mortgage bondholder not party to suit can, under any circumstances, bring bill of review, he can have only such relief as trustee of mortgage would be entitled to in same form of proceeding, p. 611.

Mortgages.—Where bondholders differ as to what their interests require, trustee of mortgage should be governed by voice of majority, p. 612.

Approved in First Nat. Bank v. Shedd, 121 U. S. 86, 30 L. 882, 7 S. Ct. 813, holding sale should not be postponed because minority object thereto; Gates v. Boston, etc., R. R., 53 Conn. 346, 5 Atl. 701, holding dissenting minority can assert no private rights against reorganization of corporation by majority; Waldoborough v. Railroad, 84 Me. 471, 24 Atl. 942, holding minority bondholder cannot enjoin sale voted by majority; State v. Brown, 73 Md. 516, 21 Atl. 378, holding minority bondholders have no right to interfere with trustee acting in good faith; Brown v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 73 Md. 582, holding minority of bondholders cannot intervene to obstruct relief prayed by trustees.

Distinguished in Toler v. Tennessee, etc., Ry., 67 Fed. 180, holding trustee having power to vote shares, not bound to vote according to wishes of majority.

Railroads.—Power of courts ought never to be used in enabling railroad mortgagees to protect their securities by borrowing money to complete unfinished roads, except under extraordinary circumstances, p. 612.

Approved in Credit Co. v. Arkansas, etc., R. Co., 5 McCrary, 27, 15 Fed. 50, holding court will not, with assent of all parties interested, authorize receiver to issue lien certificates for purpose of extending road; Insurance Trust, etc., Co. v. Roanoke Iron Co., 68 Fed. 624, denying jurisdiction of equity to authorize receiver to issue certificates, to be paramount lien on property of corporation, for purpose of carrying on business thereof; Seibert v. Minneapolis, etc., Ry., 52 Minn. 155, 38 Am. St. Rep. 534, 53 N. W. 1136, 20 L. R. Marietta, etc., Co.*, 75 Fed. 203, 41 U. S. App. 339, arguendo.

Railroads.—Bare fact that some of trustees were holders of bonds secured by their trusts, is not sufficient to render them incompetent to consent to foreclosure decree embodying plan for reorganization of road, p. 613.

Cited in Symmes v. Union Trust Co., 60 Fed. 871, holding reorganization by trustees, on full notice, and to interest of corporation, not fraud, although trustees profited personally thereby.

Witnesses.—Except to show bias or prejudice, or to lay foundation for evidence of prior contradictory statements, a witness cannot, without leave of court, be cross-examined as to matters not connected with those stated in direct examination, p. 625.

Witnesses.—Party wishing to examine witness as to matters not stated in direct examination, must make him his own witness, p. 626.

Reaffirmed in Seymour v. Malcolm, etc., Co., 58 Fed. 960, 16 U. S. App. 245.

Appeal and error.—Order and time of introducing evidence are matters largely belonging to practice of trial court; hence, refusal to enforce rule limiting cross-examination to matters opened in direct examination is not reversible error where ruling worked no injury to opposite party, p. 626.

Customs duties.—Instruction in action to recover duties paid under protest, that it was for jury to find whether or not jute rejections were of a class of non-enumerated substances similar to enumerated articles in act under which they were imported, held correct, p. 629.

Cited in United States v. Cobb, 11 Fed. 77, arguendo; In re Smith, 55 Fed. 478, holding whether article falls within class claimed, question for jury, and witness' opinion inadmissible.

Mortgages.—Property subject to judgment or mortgage lien, and alienated in separate parcels to different persons at different times, is subject to satisfaction of liens in inverse order of alienation, p. 643.

Reaffirmed in Warden v. Raymond, 17 S. C. 206, and Watson v. Neal, 38 S. C. 99, 16 S. E. 836. Applied in Aurora Bank v. Black, 129 Ind. 599, 29 N. E. 398, to sale of parcels of personal property incumbered by laborers' liens; generally, in Stanton v. Catron, 8 N. Mex. 367, 45 Pac. 887.

Distinguished in Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 55 S. C. 30, 33 S. E. 25, holding rule inapplicable to voluntary conveyances.

100 U. S. 644-648, 25 L. 605, RAILROAD CO. v. SCHUTTE.

Appeal and error.—Approval of bond by justice, obtained by fraud and perjury, will be set aside and supersedeas vacated, p. 646.

Cited in Draper v. Davis, 102 U. S. 371, 26 L. 122, holding power of trial court over supersedeas, in absence of fraud, exhausted on perfection of appeal; Railroad v. Schutte, 103 U. S. 136, 26 L. 333, incidentally; Dueber Watch, etc., Co. v. Fahys, etc., Co., 45 Fed. 698, holding appeal and supersedeas stop effect of decree; Morrin v. Lawler, 91 Fed. 694, holding, after perfection of appeal, motion for substitution of bond must be addressed to appellate court; Tampa St. Ry. v. Tampa, etc., R. R., 30 Fla. 410, 11 So. 910, holding action of judge in accepting sureties conclusive, unless acceptance was obtained by fraud.

Appeal and error.—Where supersedeas is vacated because approval of bond was obtained by fraud, new bond will not be accepted, p. 647.

Courts.—Appellant having copied into transcript only such papers and proofs in hearing below as he considered necessary, Supreme Court ordered him to file copies of such omitted papers as appellee should deem necessary, appeal to be dismissed on default thereof, p. 648.

Procedure followed in Gregory v. Pike, 64 Fed. 417, 21 U. S. App. 474, holding court may require appellant to file complete transcript, on pain of dismissal.

Distinguished in Nashua, etc., R. Corp. v. Boston, etc., R. Corp., 61 Fed. 245, 21 U. S. App. 50, holding appellee, deeming transcript defective, must resort to certiorari, where omitted papers do not appear necessary to hearing.

100 U. S. 648-659, 25 L. 609, IMPROVEMENT CO. v. SLACK.

Internal revenue.—Money involuntarily paid for internal revenue taxes illegally exacted may be recovered from collector in assumption, p. 654.

Railroads.—Improvement company having charter power to construct railroad, and transporting thereon passengers for hire, is a railroad within meaning of act of July 13, 1866, imposing tax on railroad coupons, p. 658.

100 U. S. 661-662, 25 L. 587, RAILROAD CO. v. BLAIR.

Appeal and error.— Citation is unnecessary where appeal is taken and perfected in open court during term at which decree is actually entered, and taking of appeal should, in some form, appear on records of court, p. 662.

Cited in Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Chicago, etc., Co., 73 Fed. 317, 34 U. S. App. 626, holding citation may be waived by proof of equivalent notice.

Appeal and error.— When appeal is allowed at a term subsequent to rendition of decree, citation is necessary, although appellees were present by their solicitors, p. 662.

Cited in Richards v. Mackall, 113 U. S. 542, 28 L. 1133, 5 S. Ct. 536, holding allowance of appeal in session at Special Term does not avoid necessity of citation; Hewitt v. Filbert, 116 U. S. 143, 29 L. 582, 6 S. Ct. 319, denying jurisdiction to issue citation in appeal docketed in Supreme Court of the term to which appeal was returnable.

Distinguished in Peugh v. Davis, 110 U. S. 229, 28 L. 128, 4 S. Ct. 18, holding appellate court may grant supersedeas after expiration of time allowed for filing bond.

Appeal and error.— Where appellants, by reason of allowance of appeal in presence of appellee's solicitors, although at term subsequent to decree, might well suppose citation would be waived, court will not dismiss appeal, but will order that citation be served, p. 662.

Cited in Dodge v. Knowles, 114 U. S. 438, 29 L. 297, 5 S. Ct. 1109, holding failure to cite appellee does not deprive Supreme Court of jurisdiction where security is not furnished until subsequent term; Gurnee v. Blair, 154 U. S. 659, see 25 L. 587, 14 S. Ct. 1202, argued and decided with principal case; Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 41 Fed. 867, holding court may enlarge time for filing motion for new trial, same having expired.

100 U. S. 663-670, 25 L. 747, UNITED STATES v. LIPPITT.

Courts.— Limitation prescribed by section 10, act of March 3, 1863, is not pleadable in Court of Claims, against claim cognizable therein and referred thereto by head of an executive department, where claim was presented at proper department within six years after accrual, p. 668.

Approved in United States v. New York, 160 U. S. 617, 40 L. 557, 16 S. Ct. 409, holding delay of department in disposing of seasonably-presented claim cannot impair claimant's rights.

Cited generally in Finn v. United States, 123 U. S. 231, 31 L. 130, 8 S. Ct. 84, holding it competent for Congress to limit liability of government to specified causes of action brought within prescribed periods.

Distinguished in United States v. Utz, 80 Fed. 851, 39 U. S. App. 630, overruling S. C., 75 Fed. 650, and holding right of action against government, on express contract, accrues when money becomes due.

Army and navy.—Officer ordered to headquarters, there to await further orders, is, while so waiting, entitled to fuel and quarters, and, if not furnished therewith, may recover their commuted value. p. 670.

100 U. S. 671-672, 25 L. 738, BURNS v. MEYER.

Patent issued to Grimsley and Shelly for improved saddle-tree having side bars and seat made separately and then united, is not infringed by saddle-tree constructed in one piece, p. 672.

Approved in Smith v. Putnam, 45 Fed. 203, holding use of more or less than whole of ingredients of combination not infringement thereof; Ryan v. Runyon, 93 Fed. 972, an analogous case; Polsdorfer v. St. Louis, etc., Works, 37 Fed. 58, arguendo.

Patents.—Courts should not enlarge, by construction, claim which patent office has admitted and which patentee has acquiesced in, beyond fair interpretation of terms thereof, p. 672.

St. Rep. 390, monographic note on deposit.

Time.—When priority of one legal right over another, depending upon order of events occurring on same day is involved, rule that law regards entire day as an indivisible unit must be departed from, p. 689.

Approved in Maine v. Gilman, 11 Fed. 216, holding reduction of claim, by amendment, prevented removal, where done an hour before filing bond; United States v. Stoddard, etc., Co., 89 Fed. 701, holding act only takes effect from moment of approval by president; Hoyt v. San Francisco, etc., R. R., 87 Cal. 611, 25 Pac. 1066, dismissing appeal when notice of motion is given before filing transcript, although on same day; Lockwood, etc., Co. v. Crawford, 29 Kan. 287, holding exact minute of filing important in determining whether chattel mortgage renewal precedes attachment.

Cited, but application refused, in Harmon v. Comstock, etc., Co., 9 Mont. 250, 23 Pac. 472, holding filing of papers after usual office hours, does not invalidate attachment; Arrowsmith v. Hamering, 39 Ohio St. 577, 578, holding ordinary presumption must prevail in absence of proof that action was pending on day act took effect, but at an earlier hour.

Banks and banking.—Whether a check presented at bank and left with teller was received as a deposit, is a question for jury, p. 690.

Cited in 47 Am. St. Rep. 389, monographic note on deposit.

Customs and usages.— Usage cannot make a contract where there is none, nor prevent effect of settled rules of law, p. 692.

Cited in Grace v. American, etc., Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 283, 27 L. 934, 3 S. Ct. 210, holding parol evidence of insurance custom inadmissible to vary contract; Dillard v. Paton, 19 Fed. 625, holding custom cannot be pleaded where parties have habitually disregarded same.

100 U. S. 693-699, 25 L. 761, MANNING v. INSURANCE CO.

Insurance.— Where company contracts with agent that his commission shall accrue only as premiums are paid to company, in action to recover such commissions he must prove not only that premiums were due, but actual receipt thereof by company, p. 697.

Trial.— It is error to submit to jury a fact of which there is no competent evidence, p. 697.

Evidence.— Only presumptions of fact recognized by law are immediate inferences from facts proved, p. 698.

Approved in Postal Tel., etc., Co. v. Zoppi, 73 Fed. 612, 43 U. S. App. 141, holding one presumption cannot be based on another; Ward v. Life Ins. Co., 66 Conn. 240, 50 Am. St. Rep. 85, 33 Atl. 905, holding presumption of relinquishment of known right cannot be rested on presumption that right was known; Cleveland, etc., Ry. v. Wynant, 114 Ind. 530, 5 Am. St. Rep. 648, 17 N. E. 120, holding evidence of similar accidents on other occasions inadmissible to prove place dangerous; Medsker v. Pogue, 1 Ind. App. 199, 27 N. E. 433, holding open and visible connection required between evidentiary facts and deductions therefrom; The Washington, etc., Co. v. McCormick, 19 Ind. App. 666, 49 N. E. 1085, reaffirming rule; State v. Vaughan, 22 Nev. 299, 39 Pac. 735, holding evidence of one fact as presumptive evidence of another inadmissible in absence of recognized connection.

100 U. S. 699-704, 25 L. 750, NATIONAL BANK v. GRAHAM.

Bailments.— Gross negligence on part of gratuitous bailee is, in legal effect, the same as fraud, p. 702.

Corporations cannot plead ultra vires to relieve themselves from liability for torts; hence, bank receiving bonds for safe-keeping, although unauthorized by charter to do so, is liable for their loss, caused by its negligence, p. 702.

Cited and principle applied in Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 420, 26 L. 188, holding one availing himself of ordinance estopped to deny validity thereof; Manhattan Bank v. Walker, 130 U. S. 276, 32 L. 963, 9 S. Ct. 522, holding bank liable for loss of proceeds of specially-deposited note, but in unsafe investment; Whitney v. First Nat. Bank, 154 U. S. 664, 26 L. 212, 14 S. Ct. 1215, presenting identical questions; Taylor v. South, etc., R. R., 4 Woods, 579, 13 Fed. 155, holding stockholder cannot plead ultra vires to constructively-fraudulent executed contract after ten years' acquiescence; Prather v. Kean, 29 Fed. 501, holding retention of cashier with knowledge that he speculated, gross negligence; Simons v. Fisher, 55 Fed. 909, 17 U. S. App. 1, 20 L. R. A. 557, and Fisher v. Simons, 64 Fed. 314, 28 U. S. App. 95, both holding national bank cannot set up want of legal capacity to escape just responsibility; Nevada Bank v. National Bank, 59 Fed. 341, holding bank liable for fraudulent representations to another bank as to customer's financial responsibility; Arthur v. Israel, 15 Colo. 153, 22 Am. St. Rep. 385, 25 Pac. 83, 10 L. R. A. 695, holding one taking advantage of void divorce decree estopped to repudiate same; Gray v. Merriam, 148 Ill. 189, 39 Am. St. Rep. 178, 35 N. E. 813, 32 L. R. A. 773, and n., a similar case; Commonwealth v. Mechanical Assn., 92 Ky. 201, 17 S. W. 443, holding incorporated fair association liable for permitting gaming on fair grounds; Nims v. Boys' School, 160 Mass. 178, 39 Am. St. Rep. 469, 35 N. E. 777, 22 L. R. A. 366, holding corporation liable for personal injuries caused by negligence in running ferry ultra vires; Hussey v. Railroad, 98 N. C. 42, 2 Am. St. Rep. 315, 3 S. E. 926, holding action for slander maintainable against corporation; Bank v. Zent, 39 Ohio St. 108, a similar case; First Nat. Bank v. Rex, 89 Pa. St. 312, 33 Am. Rep. 768, holding national bank receiving special deposit for safe-keeping, without reward, liable only for gross negligence; Pronger v. National Bank, 20 Wash. 622, 56 Pac. 392, holding national bank cannot plead ultra vires in defense of frauds; Walker v. Manhattan Bank, 25 Fed. 254, collecting cases on bailee's liability, and cited generally in Hazard v. Vermont, etc., R. R., 17 Fed. 756, holding power to rent includes power to change security by issuing bonds; Wilkinson v. Dodd, 42 N. J. Eq. 248, 7 Atl. 334, arguendo; dissenting opinion in Atlantic R. R. v. Mays Landing, etc., R. R., 48 N. J. L. 586, 7 Atl. 537, majority holding plea of ultra vires inadmissible in action for performance of contract performed by plaintiff. See also notes in 34 Am. Rep. 497, 36 Am. Rep. 592, 26 Am. St. Rep. 131, 38 Am. St. Rep. 778, and 70 Am. St. Rep. 159.

Distinguished in Wylie v. Northampton Bank, 119 U. S. 370, 30 L. 458, 7 S. Ct. 272, holding, in absence of negligence, bank not liable for theft of special deposit; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 65 Fed. 934, holding bank not liable to stranger relying on its representations made to comptroller of currency; Merchants' Bank v. Guilmartin, 88 Ga. 801, 15 S. E. 832, 17 L. R. A. 324, holding bank not liable for theft, by cashier, of special deposit for gratuitous custody; Mason v. Union Stock, etc., Co., 60 Mo. App. 98, holding gratuitous bailee liable only for gross negligence; Greeley v. Savings Bank, 63 N. H. 147, holding bank not estopped to plead ultra vires where bonds never came into its possession; Whitney v. National Bank, 55 Vt. 161, 45 Am. Rep. 601, holding national bank not liable in absence of gross negligence, for loss of bonds held as gratuitous bailments.

Corporations are liable for acts of servants while same are engaged in business of principal, in same manner, and to same extent that individuals are liable under like circumstances, p. 702.

Approved in Denver, etc., Ry. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 608, 30 L. 1148, 7 S. Ct. 1289, affirming S. C., 3 N. Mex. 115, 2 Pac. 370, holding corporation liable for bodily injuries committed by employees while forcibly seizing contested land; Times Pub. Co. v. Carlisle, 94 Fed. 774, holding newspaper corporation liable for exemplary damages for libel circulated by employees; Machine Co. v. McCaffrey, 139 Ind. 551, 47 Am. St. Rep. 295, 38 N. E. 210, holding corporation liable where president fraudulently induced plaintiff to purchase worthless stock; Boogher v. Life Assn., 75 Mo. 324, 42 Am. Rep. 416, holding corporation liable for malicious prosecution; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, etc., Co., 41 Neb. 416, 59 N. W. 846, holding corporation civilly liable for damages from torts of officers. See 38 Am. St. Rep. 786, monographic note.

Distinguished in Lake Shore, etc., Ry. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 109, 37 L. 102, 13 S. Ct. 263, holding railroad not liable to exemplary damages for unauthorized violence by conductor.

Banks and banking.—Revised Statutes, section 5228, authorizing national banks, after failure, "to deliver special deposits," etc., clearly implies that national banks, as part of their legitimate business, may receive such special deposits, and bank is liable for loss thereof, caused by its negligence, p. 703.

Approved in Whitney v. First Nat. Bank, 154 U. S. 664, 26 L. 212, 14 S. Ct. 1215, presenting identical question; Eastern, etc., Bank v. Vermont Nat. Bank, 22 Blatchf. 501, 22 Fed. 188, holding powers impliedly given national banks as valid as those expressly given; First Nat. Bank v. Strange, 138 Ill. 356, 27 N. E. 905, and Bank v. Zent, 39 Ohio St. 108, both holding bank liable for negligent loss of special deposit. Cited generally in Leo v. Union Pac. Ry., 22 Blatchf. 26, 19 Fed. 286, as to existence of implied corporate powers.

Banks and banking.—Phrase "special deposits," in section 5228, revised statutes, embraces deposits of United States bonds, p. 703.

100 U. S. 704-718, 25 L. 739, COX v. NATIONAL BANK.

Bills and notes.—Foreign bills of exchange must be protested for non-acceptance at place where presentation therefor is to be made, p. 710.

Approved in Brown v. Jones, 113 Ind. 50, 3 Am. St. Rep. 625, 13 N. E. 859, holding drawer not liable where presentment was not made at place designated by acceptor; Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 39, 26 L. 651, arguendo. See 43 Am. Dec. 221, note.

Bills and notes.—No place of payment being expressed in a bill or note, place of presentment is where acceptor or maker resides, or at his usual place of business, p. 713.

Approved in Skinner v. Butler Co., 112 Mo. 338, 20 S. W. 614. holding failure to demand does not stop interest where no funds are at place of payment at maturity; Clough v. Holden, 115 Mo. 344, 37 Am. St. Rep. 397, 21 S. W. 1073, holding evidence that presentment was made after maker's business hours, erroneously excluded; Rose v. McCracken, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 50 S. W. 153, holding no place of payment being designated in note, maker may designate one and leave deposit there.

Distinguished in Strawberry, etc., Bank v. Lee, 117 Mich. 124, 75 N. W. 444, holding addition of payee's place of residence in another State, to name in note made and delivered in Michigan, insufficient to render note contract of other State.

Bills and notes.— When a bill or note is made payable at particular place or on demand, proof of presentment there is sufficient to charge acceptor or indorser; hence demand at place frequented by acceptors, after diligent effort to locate them, held sufficient, p. 716.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

AT OCTOBER TERM, 1879.

Ex Parte LEWIS W. PHILLIPS.

Power of admiralty court to sequester property—remedy in another court—judgment against sureties.

1. There is no statute or rule which confers on a court of admiralty those powers of sequestering property which appertain to a court of equity.

2. Libelants, who have recovered judgment, in an admiralty suit, against stipulators for value and on an appeal bond, can, after execution returned "Unsatisfied" thereon, resort to some other proper court to reach any property which the debtors may have.

3. Such libelants are general creditors by judgment in personam of the sureties. The judgments are money judgments, upon which stipulators for value cannot be required to bring the property into court.

[No. 11 Orig.]

Submitted Nov. 3, 1879. Decided Nov. 10, 1879.

PETITION for a rule to show cause.

The following is the portion of the opinion of the Judge of the Circuit Court referred to by this court:

Blatchford, J.

(1) As to so much of the motion as asks that the sureties be ordered to appear before this court for examination concerning their property according to the laws and practice of the State of New York: there is no statute of the United States which authorizes or requires such an examination in a suit in admiralty. Sections 914, 915 and 916 of the Revised Statutes apply solely to common law suits. Section 941 provides for such stipulations for value as were given in these cases, and enacts that judgment thereon, against both the principal and sureties may be recorded at the time of rendering the decree in the original cause (Rule 21, in Admiralty), provides that, "In all cases of a final decree for the payment of money, the libellant shall have a writ of execution, in the nature of a fieri facias commanding the Marshal or his deputy to levy and collect the amount thereof out of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, or other real estate of the defendant or stipulators." There is no other rule as to the enforcing a decree in a suit in rem. That rule is one of a series of rules made by the Supreme Court, under section 6 of the Act of August 23, 1842, 5 Stat. at L., 518, now section 917 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that the Supreme Court shall have the power to prescribe the forms of process, the modes of proceeding to obtain relief, and generally to regulate the whole practice in suits in admiralty, by the circuit and district courts. Nothing is found which authorizes what is asked for under the first branch of the motion.

(2) As to so much of the motion as asks that the sureties be ordered to disclose all information concerning their property, with a view to the sequestration thereof, and that they be directed to convey all of their property to a sequestrator to be appointed by this court: there is no statute which confers on a Court of Admiralty of the United States those powers of sequestering property which appertain to a court of equity, nor is there any rule which does so. The libelants have judgments, and after executions have been issued and returned "Unsatisfied," they can resort to the proper court to reach any property which the debtors may have. But this court sitting in admiralty is not such court. The fact that the libelants could not recover judgments on the stipulations or bonds in any other court than the Admiralty Court, does not prevent their resorting to other courts, when they have obtained judgments in the Admiralty Court, to enforce such judgments. The judgments have then become like any other judgments in personam in any court. In a suit in rem, where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the res, and has not voluntarily yielded possession of it, and has a right to recall it to its custody, it may proceed to do so, as against those who have it or have taken it; but that is not the present case. Rule 38. The libelants are general creditors, by judgment in personam of the sureties. The stipulations and bonds are merely to pay money and the judgments are money judgments. The stipulators for value could not now perform the condition of their stipulation by bringing the vessel into court. * * *

Messrs. H. J. Scudder and F. W. Hackett, for petitioner.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner shows that, having recovered a summary judgment in an admiralty suit against the stipulators for value and the sureties on an appeal bond, he moved the circuit court for an order on such stipulators and sureties to appear "For examination concerning their property according to the laws and practice of the State of New York;" and also for an order that they "Disclose all information concerning their property, with a view to the sequestration thereof, and that they be directed to convey all their said property to a sequestrator to be appointed by the court," and also that they "Be punished for their contempt in not performing their stipulations and failing to comply with the provisions of the decrees." These motions were overruled by the court, and we are now asked for an order on that court to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding it to exercise the power and grant the remedy sought.

Even if we have the power to grant a mandamus in a case like this, the reasons assigned by the Circuit Judge in his opinion for refusing the motion are so satisfactory and show so clearly that he was right in what he did, that we think it quite unnecessary to hear an argument and, therefore, deny the application for the rule.

NIXON M. CRANE, EXR., of ELLEN HALLETT, Deceased, ET AL., Appts.,

v.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY ET AL.

Bill to enforce contract—who may bring—heirs—personal representative.

1. A bill cannot be brought by heirs of a deceased person to enforce a contract made by him in his lifetime with a railroad company, for the construction of its railway and telegraph.

2. The contract formed part of his personal estate and belonged to his personal representative and not to his heirs; as also the profits, even if partly in lands.

3. These do not pass to the heirs by inheritance, but go to the personal representative as part of the personal estate, and through him to the heirs, only on distribution after all debts are paid.

[No. 2.]

Argued Nov. 11, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

This was an equity action, commenced in the court below by the appellants against the Kansas Pacific Ry. Co., John P. Usher and others. The bill set up a trust, and charged conspiracy and fraud, and prayed for an accounting, etc. The two defendants just named demurred, and the bill was dismissed. The facts are sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. Matt. H. Carpenter and Jas. B. Stewart, for appellants.

Messrs. J. P. Usher and C. E. Bretherton, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This decree is affirmed. The suit was in equity by the children and heirs of Samuel Hallett, deceased, to enforce a contract he made in his lifetime with the Railroad Company, defendant, then known by another name, for the construction of its line of railway and telegraph. By the terms of the contract, he was to be paid for his work in money, United States subsidy bonds, construction bonds, land-grant bonds, capital stock of the Company, and city and county bonds. He was not to become interested in any lands except indirectly, as a stockholder in a corporation owning lands, and a holder of bonds secured by mortgage. When he died, the contract formed part of his personal estate, and belonged to his personal representative and not to his heirs, except upon distribution after all debts were paid. Had the personal representative performed the contract, he, like the intestate, would be entitled to money, stocks and bonds for what he did. In this way he might have added to the assets of the estate for distribution, but he would get nothing which would pass directly to the heirs by inheritance. It matters not that, since the death of Hallett, others may have taken possession of the contract, and made themselves, in law, trustees of the profits they have realized by its performance. As such trustees they must account to the personal representative of the estate and not to the heirs. If the profits for which they account are partly in lands, these lands do not pass to the heirs of Hallett by inheritance. They go to the personal representative as part of the personal estate, and through him on distribution to the heirs.

It follows that the heirs could not bring this suit and that the demurrer to their bill was properly sustained.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY,

Appt.,

v.

JAMES A. HOFFMAN.

Jurisdiction as to amount—construction of statute—Washington market.

1. Where there are two hundred and six complainants suing jointly and the decree is a single one in favor of them all, and in denial of the right claimed by defendant, which is of greater value than the sum which is the limit below which an appeal to this court is not allowable, this court has jurisdiction as to amount.

2. It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction, that significance and effect shall, if possible, be accorded to every word, and that every part of a statute must be construed in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonize, if possible, and give meaning to each.

3. Under the Act of May 20, 1870, chartering the Washington Market Co., one who has acquired by bid made at auction, the right to two years' occupancy of a stall, has no right to continue in possession after such time, and so long as he chooses to pay the rent therefor.

[No. 38].

Argued Oct. 31 and Nov. 3, 4, 1879. Decided Nov. 17, 1879.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. William Birney, B. F. Butler and W. E. Chandler, for appellant.

Messrs. R. T. Merrick and M. F. Morris, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill originally brought by James A. Hoffman against the Washington Market Company, seeking an injunction against the Company's proceeding to sell a stall in their market, occupied by him, and seeking also a decree establishing his right to retain possession of said stall so long as he chose to occupy it for his business as a butcher. Subsequently the bill was amended by consent, and two hundred and five other occupants of other stalls in the market were made complainants with Hoffman. The relief then asked was an injunction in favor of each of the complainants together with a decree establishing the right of each to the continued occupancy of his stall so long as he might choose to occupy it for his business. After hearing, the court by a final decree enjoined the Market Company from selling or offering for sale the stands and stalls of the several complainants, or any of them, and also adjudged that the rights of the complainants in their several stalls and stands did not expire, by any valid limitations of the time for the continuance of such rights and interest, in two years from July 1, 1872. From this decree the Market Company has appealed.

The first question to be determined is, whether the amount in controversy is sufficient to give us jurisdiction of the appeal. Upon this we have no doubt. While it may be true, that if Hoffman was the sole complainant, the amount in controversy would be insufficient to justify an appeal either by him or by the Market Company, the case is one of two hundred and six complainants suing jointly, the decree is a single one in favor of them all, and in denial of the right claimed by the Company, which is of far greater value than the sum which, by the Act of Congress, is the limit below which an appeal is not allowable. It is averred under oath in the pleadings, that the sale which the Company proposed to make, and the court below enjoined, would have realized to the Market Company more than $60,000. Of this benefit the decree deprives them. It is very plain, therefore, that the appeal is one within our jurisdiction.

Dismissing this, we come directly to the merits of the case. The Market Company was chartered by an Act of Congress approved May 20, 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 124, and authorized to erect upon a lot belonging to the United States, a market-house with stalls. By the 2d section of the Act it was enacted as follows:

"And the said Company shall, whenever any part or parts of said buildings, stalls, stands and so forth, for market purposes, are ready for use or occupancy, offer the same for sale at public auction, for one or more years, to the highest bidder or bidders, subject to the payment of an annual ground-rent, the amount of which to be fixed by the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Washington and the directors of this Corporation (a prescribed public notice being given), and all subsequent sales and leases thereof shall be made on similar notice and in the same manner. * * *. The stalls, stands and privileges of all kinds, in said market, to be used for market purposes, when offered at public sale, shall be let to the highest bidder, and there shall be no bidding on the part of said Company, directly or indirectly; but said Company, with the consent of the mayor and aldermen of the City of Washington, may fix a minimum rate of bids at such sales; and the person who shall offer the highest price, at or beyond such minimum, for any such stand, stall or privilege, shall be entitled to the occupation thereof, and shall be considered as having the good-will and the right to retain the possession thereof so long as he chooses to occupy the same for his own business and pay the rent therefor. * * * Provided, however, That such right to the possession of such stands or stalls may be sold and transferred by such purchaser under regulations to be fixed by the by-laws of said Company, and, in the case of the death of such purchaser during the existence of his lease, it shall be disposed of as other personal property."

By the 14th section, the Corporation was required to pay to the City of Washington the sum of $25,000 annually, in consideration of the privileges granted; and by section 12 it was provided that, at the expiration of thirty years, the City of Washington might take possession of the property, on paying a sum equal to a fair valuation of the buildings and improvements. The property was made to revert to the United States at the end of ninety-nine years.

Such were the provisions of the Act of Congress that have any bearing on the present case. In pursuance of the authority given by the 2d section, the Company, on the 25th of May, 1872, offered to the highest bidder, at public auction, the stalls or stands in the market, for the term of two years from the 1st day of July, 1872; and Hoffman, with the other complainants, or persons under whose bids they claim, became the highest bidders for the several stalls they occupy. They now insist that they are entitled to hold the stalls thus bid off, so long as they may choose to occupy them for their own business and pay the rent, notwithstanding the said term of two years has expired, claiming that such are the rights given to the highest bidders at the auction by the Act of Congress.

We think this claim is quite unfounded. In our judgment, it has no warrant in any reasonable construction of the charter. The Market Company was authorized and required to sell the privilege of occupying a stall at public auction for a term, or, to use the language of the Act, "for one or more years;" and subsequent sales and leases were required to be made in the same manner. The Company was left at liberty to fix the length of the term. They might sell for two years, or ten, or thirty, at their option, but in all cases sales were required to be made for a definite period. No authority was given to create a tenancy at will—a tenancy to be held either at the will of the Market Company or at the will of the bidder at the sale. The prescription to sell "for one or more years" negatives this. Had it been intended that the sale should confer upon the highest bidder the right to occupy a stall at his will, and so long as he might use it for his business, those words would not have been inserted in the statute. They would be unmeaning; even more, they would have been contradictory of the intent. It would have been sufficient to declare that the stalls should be sold at public auction, and that the highest bidder should have the right to hold so long as he chose to occupy for his business and pay rent. We are not at liberty to construe any statute so as to deny effect to any part of its language. It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that significance and effect shall, if possible, be accorded to every word. As early as in Bacon's Abridgement, section 2, it was said that "A statute ought, upon the whole, to be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant." This rule has been repeated innumerable times. Another rule equally recognized, is, that every part of a statute must be construed in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonize, if possible, and give meaning to each.

Keeping these admitted rules of construction in view, the clause in the charter which defines the rights of purchasers at the sale, the clause upon which the complainants rely, is easily understood. It declares in effect that the highest bidder for a stall shall be considered as having the good-will, and the right to retain possession thereof during his term, so long as he chooses to occupy the same for his own business and pay the rent therefore. The construction contended for by the complainants is obviously inconsistent with the direction that sales of rights of occupancy should be made for a term; that is, for one or more years. That construction, therefore, is not to be admitted, if another reasonable one can be given. That the clause, general as its language is, has some limitation will not be questioned. It will not be claimed that it gives to the highest bidder at a sale for two years, or to his vendee or transferee (for such bidder is authorized to assign), a perpetual right of occupancy so long as he pays the rent. If it does, the right may outlast the time when by the charter the Corporation of Washington is empowered to take possession of the market buildings and grounds, and even the time when the Company's rights and property are to revert to the United States. To understand the true meaning of the clause, it is necessary to observe what the subject was in regard to which Congress attempted to legislate. In Brewer v. Blough-er, 14 Pet., 178, it was said to be the undoubted duty of the court to ascertain the meaning of the Legislature from words used in the statute and the subject-matter to which it relates, and to restrain its operation within narrower limits than its words import, if the court is satisfied that the literal meaning of its language would extend to cases which the Legislature never designed to include in it. Now, the subject upon which Congress attempted by this clause to legislate was the rights of the highest bidder for a stall, under a purchase for a term of years, and not the rights of a purchaser under a bid for an indefinite period, terminable only at his will. Nothing else was in view of the Legislature. No other sale had been spoken of. The enactment, therefore, that he should have the good-will and possession of the stall so long as he might choose to occupy it, paying rent, must have reference to possession during the term, for that was the only subject under consideration. Such a construction of the clause gives effect to it, denies effect to no other words or provisions in the statute, and is in strict harmony with every part. It is the only construction that harmonizes all the provisions of the Act. And it is a construction which, in a very important particular, is beneficial to the highest bidders at the sale. The clause not only declares that the highest bidder above a fixed minimum should by his bid become entitled to the possession, which had not been declared previously in the Act, but it impliedly relieves him from what might, without it, have proved an onerous burden. The stalls in this case were sold for two years. The Market Company might have sold them for twenty, or even thirty. Such authority was given by the statute. Had they done so, the purchaser of a stall would have been bound to pay the stall rent during the whole period, of twenty or thirty years, whether he occupied the stall or not, were it not for this provision, and in case of his death his estate would have been liable. To guard against this, his right under his bid to retain the occupancy is declared to continue so long as he chooses to occupy for his own business, and pay the rent, clearly implying that when, during the period for which he bought, he chooses to give up the occupancy and cease to pay the rent, his liability ceases. In other words: the Company is bound to permit his occupancy during the term which was sold, but the bidder is not bound absolutely to pay rent during the whole term, nor longer than he chooses to occupy the stall for his own business.

To our minds, therefore, it appears clearly that under the true and reasonable construction of the Act of Congress, the complainants below acquired by the bids made at the auction sale in 1872 no right to more than two years' occupancy of their several stalls, and no right to continue in possession thereof after July 1, 1874. Our conclusion is supported by several other considerations. In the 2d section of the Act it is enacted that, in case of the death of any purchaser at the auction sale, "during the continuance of his lease," his right to the possession of his stall should be sold as other personal property. The words, "during the continuance of his lease," indicate strongly that Congress contemplated and intended that what was sold at the auction should be a term of years, with fixed limits of duration. Else why speak of the existence of a lease and its continuance?

We may add that the contemporaneous understanding of the parties was in harmony with the construction of the statute we now give. On the 23d day of May, 1872, the Market Company resolved to commence the sale of rights to occupy the stalls on the 25th day of that month, in pursuance of previous notice given; and resolved also that the sales should be of the right to occupy for two years from July 1, 1872. On the same day, May 23, 1872, the Company adopted market regulations, as they were authorized to do by their charter. Among these regulations were the following: Rent shall be payable quarterly in advance. No person shall be allowed to occupy a stall or stand until he has signed the market regulations, and has received a permit describing the character of his stall or stand, and the conditions of occupancy. At the end of the term of each occupant, he shall quit and deliver up his stand peaceably, in as good order and condition, except ordinary wear, as the same now is, or may be put into by the Company. With such regulations in force, the sales were made and a permit was delivered to each purchaser, declaring him entitled to occupy his stall "For the term of two years from July 1, 1872, paying therefor the quarterly rent in advance, subject to the conditions of the charter and by-laws of the Company and the regulations of the Company; the permit to be of no effect until the holder had signed the regulations." Thus the claimants, or those under whom they claimed, obtained possession, and thus they engaged to surrender possession at the expiration of their term of two years. It does not appear to have entered into the contemplation of the Market Company, or the bidders at the sale, at that time, that by the purchase a bidder obtained a possible right of occupancy for more than two years. The construction now insisted upon by the complainants is an afterthought, a creature of recent birth.

In view of the considerations thus presented we are of opinion that the Supreme Court of the District erred in the construction it gave to the charter of the Market Company, and in sustaining the complainants' bill. Of the cross-bill it is sufficient to say that it must fall with the bill of the complainants. This is conceded by the appellants.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District is reversed, with costs, and the record is remitted, with instructions to dismiss both the bill and the cross-bill.

Mr. Justice Bradley, dissenting;

I dissent from the judgment of the court in this case. I think that it was the intent of the statute to give to the purchasers of stalls the benefit of the "good-will" acquired during the term, so long as they chose to keep them and pay the rents originally fixed, or which might from time to time be imposed by the common council.

Also dissenting Mr. Justice Harlan, who concurred in the foregoing dissent.

v.

CHARLES MORAN, Trustee.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 285-289.)

Ohio law as to lien of judgments—railroad—lien on fund—when lien accrues.

1. By the law of Ohio, a judgment is a lien upon all the lands and tenements of the debtor within the county where the judgment is entered, from the first day of the term at which judgment is rendered.

2. A judgment against a railroad company, whose roadway had been sold under a decree upon a mortgage foreclosure, and the sale confirmed more than a year before the rendition of the judgment, is no lien thereon.

3. There being no lien at law upon the road, there could be none in equity upon the fund arising from the sale.

4. It is only when a claim has ripened into a judgment where there is property to be bound by it, that a lien can subsist.

Bk. of O. v. Hinton, 21 Ohio St., 509.

Mr. M. A. Daugherty, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

A corporation existed in Ohio known as the Cincinnati, Wilmington and Zanesville Railroad Company. It owned and operated a road extending from the City of Zanesville to the Village of Morrow in that State. The company became insolvent, and the road was sold on the 3d of June, 1863, under foreclosure proceedings upon a mortgage which the company had given. Charles Moran became the purchaser in trust for the creditors and stockholders. The original company was reorganized on the 11th of March, 1864, pursuant to a statute of the State of April 11, 1861, under the name of the Cincinnati and Zanesville Railroad Company. On the 12th of March, 1864, Moran conveyed to the new company, which thereupon executed to him and W. Shall a mortgage to secure the payment of the principal and interest of certain bonds therein described. This mortgage bore date on the 1st of April, 1864. Default having been made in the payment of the interest accruing on these bonds, Moran, on the 30th of April, 1869, filed a bill of foreclosure in the court below. On the 4th of May following, the road was put, by the court, into the charge of the officers of the company as receivers. On the 6th of October then next, a final decree was entered, finding the amount due, and ordering the premises to be sold unless it was paid within twenty days.

On the 2d of December following a sale was reported, and on the same day it was confirmed by the court. The proceeds of the sale were largely less than the amount intended to be secured by the mortgage. On the 22d of June, 1866, Zentmeyer, the appellant's intestate, was killed on the road. On the 16th of July, 1867, the appellant, as his administrator, sued the company in the Court of Common Pleas of Clinton County, through which the road passes, and on the 28th of February, 1871, he recovered a judgment for $5,000. On the 5th of November he was made a party to the proceedings in the foreclosure case. He thereupon answered and filed a cross-bill, in the nature of a creditors' bill, claiming to have the judgment paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the road in the hands of Moran. The court decreed against him, and he appealed to this court.

Several objections have been taken to the claim of the cross-bill by the counsel for the respondent, which the view we take of the case renders it unnecessary to consider.

The counsel for the appellant have pressed upon our attention certain provisions of the mortgage under which the road was sold. We think it too clear to require discussion, that they have no application to the point upon which the case must turn. We shall, therefore, pass them by without further remark.

The mortgage was executed under the Act before mentioned, of April 11, 1861, and was subject to its provisions. The 6th section of that Act is as follows:

"The lien of the mortgages and deeds of trust authorized to be made by this Act shall be subject to the lien of judgments recovered against said corporation, after its reorganization, for labor thereafter performed for it, or for materials or supplies thereafter furnished to it, or for damages for losses or injuries thereafter suffered or sustained by the misconduct of its agents, or in any action founded on its contracts, or liability as a common carrier thereafter made or incurred."

By the law of Ohio, a judgment is a lien upon all "The lands and tenements of the debtor within the county where the judgment is entered, from the first day of the Term at which judgment is rendered * * * but judgments by confession, and judgments rendered at the same Term at which the action is commenced, shall bind such lands only from the day on which such judgments are rendered." 2 R. S. of Ohio, Swan & Cr., 1064. If execution shall not be sued out within five years from the date of the judgment, the latter becomes dormant and the lien expires. 2 R. S. of Ohio, Swan & Cr., 1067. Judgment liens are the creatures of positive law, without which they cannot exist. A State may regulate them as it deems proper. Corwin v. Benham, 2 Ohio St., 36. When this judgment was rendered, there was no real estate of any kind in Clinton County belonging to the railroad company. The roadway and all its appurtenances had been sold to Moran under the decree upon the mortgage, and the sale confirmed more than a year before that time. Thereafter the relation of the property to the company was in all respects as if the company had never owned it. A lien by the judgment was, therefore, impossible.

There being no such lien at law upon the road, there could be none in equity touching the fund arising from the sale. Olcott v. By- num, 17 Wall., 44 [84 U. S., XXI., 570], cited by the learned counsel for the appellant, does not, therefore, affect the case.

The counsel would have us give the same construction to the terms "The lien of judgments recovered against the corporation," as if they were "valid claims against the corporation," etc. The language of the statute is clear and explicit. It has a specific meaning in the jurisprudence of Ohio, and seems to have been chosen, ex industria, to express exactly the category it defines. There is as much difference with respect to the property between a claim secured by a judgment lien, and one not so secured, as there is between a demand secured by mortgage, and one not secured at all. In such cases the mortgage and the judgment lien are equivalents. In both the binding effect is the same, and the law prescribes the consequences. Here, if the lien had subsisted, though junior in date, it would have had priority over the mortgage. The latter was subject to the statute, and the statute would have given to the lien that effect. No reasoning can successfully maintain that a claim merely in judgment and a judgment lien are the same thing, in legal effect, any more than in fact. To hold otherwise would be to make the law, and not simply to apply it. The former is beyond the sphere of our authority; the latter is our duty. It is only when a claim has ripened into a judgment where there is property to be bound by it, that a lien can subsist. This element is indispensable under the law to such a result. If the Legislature intended that a judgment—not a lien on the mortgaged premises—should have the same effect as one that was such lien, it would have been easy to say so, and this would, doubtless, have been done. No process of word stretching or bending can make the language employed touch the fund in dispute.

It does not appear that the foreclosure sale, from which Moran derived title, was made in the process of another reorganization under the statute. If this were so, the last clause of the 1st section would control the rights of the parties. It is there declared that "Every such agreement" for reorganization, "shall provide that the unsecured debts of the company incurred for repairs or running expenses shall be paid in money or bonds of the reorganized company, as hereinafter provided; said bonds to be of the highest class issued. A copy of the terms of said agreement shall be filed in said court before the rendition of said decree." But as the mortgages did not avail themselves of the Act, they are not bound by its requirements. This clause, nevertheless, throws light upon the subject we have been considering and, therefore, we refer to it in that connection.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Penalty for failure to make annual report—officers of corporation—liability.

1. A statute imposing a liability for the debts of a corporation upon its officers, for a failure to make an annual report, is penal and should be strictly construed.

2. Individuals elected and serving as such officers may incur the statute liability for the corporate debts of the company, even although irregularities occurred in their election.

3. Under the Connecticut Statute, such officers are, for the neglect or refusal to make such annual report, liable only for debts contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal.

[No. 65.]

Argued Nov. 11, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Charles E. Perkins, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. P. Hyde, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Statutory regulations were enacted by the State, to enable the business public to ascertain the pecuniary standing of joint stock corporations, and for that purpose it was made the duty of the president and secretary of every such corporation annually to make a certificate showing the condition of the affairs of the corporation, as nearly as the same can be ascertained, on the first day of January or of July next preceding the time of making such certificate, stating the amount of paid capital, the cash value of its credits, the amount of its debts, and the name and number of shares of each stockholder, which certificate it is required shall be deposited, on or before the 15th of February or of August, with the town clerk of the town, who shall record the same at full length. Conn. R. S., sec. 404, p. 172.

Such an officer, whether president or secretary, if he intentionally neglects or refuses to comply with that requirement and perform the duty therein specified, is declared to be liable to an action founded on the statute for all debts of such corporation contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal. Conn. R. S., p. 174, sec. 413.

Sufficient appears to show that the Odorless Rubber Company was a joint-stock corporation legally organized in 1870, at Middletown, under the laws of the State. About the time of its organization, to wit: on the 9th of September of that year, C. C. Post was elected president, and it appears that he was twice re-elected at the annual meetings of the stockholders, each held in April of the two succeeding years, and that he continued to hold the office until the 17th of June following his last election, when he resigned. During all the period he was in office there was a secretary.

Neither the president nor the secretary, during that period, deposited with the town clerk any certificate required to be so filed by the law of the State, except as follows: on the 20th of June, 1871, the president and secretary did deposit such a certificate, showing the condition and assets of the Company on the 1st day of April of that year.

Prior to the 10th of June of the next year the defendant was not even a stockholder of the company, but it appears that he on that day signed the subscription paper exhibited in the record for two hundred shares of new stock of See 11 OTTO.

the Company, and that eight days later he paid $1,800 towards his subscription. His promise to pay was conditional, that is, he was to pay $6.25 per share whenever cash subscriptions to the amount of $118,000 should be obtained, and the balance in equal monthly installments of ten per cent each from the date of the subscription, * * * it being understood that none of said subscriptions shall be valid or obligatory until at least said amount of $118,000 shall have been subscribed and thirty per cent deduction is made in the old stock. Subscriptions to the required amount were obtained, but no evidence was offered to show that the thirty per cent deduction in the old stock was ever made.

Evidence to show that the defendant was ever elected a director is entirely wanting, but it is shown that, on the day the old president resigned, the Board of Directors elected him president of the corporation in the place made vacant by the resignation of his predecessor, and that thereafter he acted as president and stockholder, and that he continued to act as such until the 2d of September in that year, when he resigned said office.

Beyond all doubt, he was, during that period, the acting president of the corporation, and the bill of exceptions shows that he never made any statement of the condition and assets of the company until the day he resigned his office. Attempt is made by the plaintiffs to show that he was culpably guilty of neglect in that regard; but the bill of exceptions also shows that on that day he, with the secretary, made out in due form and deposited a certificate of the condition and assets of the company as they existed on the first day of July, two weeks subsequent to the day of his election as president of the corporation.

More than three months before the defendant was elected president, the plaintiffs entered in to a written agreement with the rubber company, by which they contracted to furnish the company a steam-engine for $5,700, and it appears that they constructed the engine and shipped and delivered it to the purchasers; that the manufacturers subsequently placed it in position and put it in good running order, to the satisfaction of the buyers. Due delivery of the same having been made, the buyers made a cash payment and gave a note for a part of the price, which was never paid, leaving more than $5,000 unpaid when the rubber company was adjudged bankrupt. Payment being refused, the plaintiffs brought this suit against the defendant as president of the rubber company, claiming that the debt was contracted during the period that he was guilty of neglect in not making and depositing the before described certificate, and that, in consequence of such neglect, he is liable for all the debts of such corporation contracted during that period.

Service was made, and the defendant appeared and denied the truth of all the matters alleged in the declaration. Subsequently the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the defendant. Exceptions were filed by the plaintiffs, and they sued out a writ of error and removed the cause into this court.

When the plaintiffs rested their case, the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict in his favor; and the bill of exceptions shows that the circuit court, being of the opinion that there were no disputed questions of fact, gave the instruction as requested, and that the verdict was in conformity with the instruction. Opposed to that, the plaintiffs insist that the facts proved entitled them to the verdict, and they assign for error the instruction given by the circuit court to the jury.

Three principal defenses are set up by the defendant, as follows: (1) That he was never legally elected president of the corporation. (2) That the debt was not contracted while he was acting in the capacity of president of the company. (3) That by the proper construction of the state statute he is not liable for the debt due to the plaintiffs, even if the first two points cannot be sustained.

Preliminary to those inquiries, the defendant contends that the statute upon which the action is brought is penal and should be strictly construed; in which proposition the court unhesitatingly concurs. Statutes somewhat similar in character have been passed in several of the States, in all of which States it is held that the statutes are penal, and that for that reason their provisions must receive a strict construction. Take, for example, the Statute of New York, which provides that, on failure of the company within twenty days from the first of January to make, publish and file an annual report, all the trustees of the company shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such report shall be made, it has repeatedly been held that the act was penal, and that it could not be extended by construction to cases not fairly within its language. Hence it was decided that the trustees could not be held liable on account of the failure to publish and file the annual report, unless the debt was contracted during the default or unless it existed at the time of a subsequent default. Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y., 458; Boughton v. Otis, 21 N. Y., 261.

Repeated instances have occurred where suit was brought in one State to enforce the statute liability for the debts of a corporation created by the Legislature of another State, in all which it is held that the statute is penal, and that it can only be enforced in the State where the statute was passed. Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438; Derrickson v. Smith, 3 Dutch., 166; Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St., 215; Bk. v. Price, 33 Md., 487; Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal., 472.

Corresponding decisions have been made in other courts, and to such an extent as to justify the remark that the rule is universal. Bird v. Hayden, 1 Robt. (N. Y.), 383; Moies v. Sprague, 9 R. I., 541.

Suppose that is so; then it is contended by the defendant that the Act cannot be enforced against him unless it appears that he was legally elected president, and that he was under legal obligation to perform the duties of that office.

Persons acting publicly as officers of a corporation are ordinarily presumed to be rightfully in office. Bk. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat., 64; Ang. & A. Corp., 9th ed., sec. 139. Individuals elected and serving as such officers may incur the statute liability for the corporate debts of the company, even though irregularities occurred in their election, if in all other respects the evidence brings them within the category of legal default. Neucomb v. Reed, 12 Allen, 362; Hagnes v. Brown, 36 N. H., 545, 563.

Stockholders elect the directors, and it is claimed by the defendant that he was not legally elected president, because he was not a stockholder, the condition of his subscription having never been fulfilled; but he paid the first installment, and the evidence reported shows that he acted as a stockholder from the time of his election as president until his resignation. His subscription to the new stock was made before he was elected president, and the bill of exceptions shows that on the following day he paid the required amount of his subscription.

Power to elect the president is vested in the directors; and the record shows that he was formally elected to the office, and that he acted in that capacity for a month and a half, when he resigned. Beyond controversy, he was the acting president, and in view of the circumstances the court is not inclined to rest the decision of the case upon the ground that the defendant was not, during the period he performed the duties devolved upon the president of the company, legally responsible for the neglect to comply with the requirement of that statute. He acted as president during that period and, therefore, is liable, if any liability exists, notwithstanding the informality of his election. Thayer v. Lithographic Co., 108 Mass., 523.

Three months before he was elected president the company contracted with the plaintiffs for a steam-engine, but it was not shipped for delivery to the purchasers until four days after he was elected president and commenced to perform the duties of his office.

Certificates of the kind are required to be deposited with the town clerk on or before the 15th of February or of August, and the provision is that the persons neglecting or refusing to comply with such requirements "Shall jointly and severally be liable to an action founded on the statute for all debts of such corporation contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal." Intentional neglect and refusal create the liability, and the liability extends to the debts contracted by the company during the period of such neglect and refusal, and to no others, which of itself is sufficient to disprove the theory of the plaintiffs that the defendant can in any view be held liable for the default of his predecessor.

Officers of the kind are responsible for the consequences of their own neglect or refusal to comply with the statute requirement while they remain in office, and they continue to be liable for those consequences even after they go out of office; but they are not responsible for the consequences of subsequent defaults committed by their successors, nor are the successors in such offices in any way responsible for the consequences of such defaults committed by their predecessors in office, for the plain reason that the language of the statute is that the persons so neglecting or refusing * * * shall be liable in an action founded on the statute for all debts of the corporation contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal. Boughton v. Otis [supra].

Much aid in construing the statute in question is not required, as the language employed by the Legislature speaks its own construction; but if more be needed, it will be found in another decision of the same tribunal as that just cited. Quarry Co. v. Bliss, 27 N. Y., 297.

Statutes of the kind are passed for the benefit of creditors, and their reliance always is upon the officers who are such when they give the credit, and not upon persons who had ceased to be officers, or who might subsequently become such when those in office should go out.

Three things must concur in order that it can be held that the defendant is liable: (1) That he was president of the corporation. (2) That he intentionally neglected or refused to deposit the described certificate, as required by the statute. (3) That the debt was contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal.

Where all these things concur, the president is liable, not for all the debts of the corporation, but for all such as were contracted while he was guilty of such default. If he was not the president at the time of the default, or if the debt was contracted before he was in default, then he is not liable, as the case is not brought within the letter or spirit of the statute. Liability in such a case, as imposed, is in its nature penal, and in order to render such an officer responsible it must appear that he has neglected or refused to do some act which the law made it his duty to perform. Crane v. Easterly, 4 Lans., 513, 521; Bond v. Clark, 6 Allen, 361-363; Andrews v. Murray, 33 Barb., 354, Blk. v. Com., 26 Pa. 451.

Marked differences exist between the provisions of the New York Statute and those of the State of Connecticut, the latter being much less stringent than the former. By the New York law, the duty of making the annual return is required of the corporation itself, and the penalty for neglect is imposed upon the trustees who are intrusted with the management of its affairs. Consequently, it is a corporate duty, and being such each succeeding Board is bound to perform it if it has been neglected by their predecessors. Unlike that, the duty to deposit the certificate under the Connecticut Statute is devolved on the president and secretary in terms which show that a new president does not inherit the consequences of neglect of duty or pecuniary liability from his predecessor in office. He is made liable for his own neglect and not for that of a prior officer, as clearly appears from the closing sentence of the penal section. In New York the trustees, upon default, are made liable for all the outstanding debts of the corporation, whenever contracted, but in Connecticut the president and secretary are liable only for debts contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal.

Prior to his election, the president, as such, had no duty to perform in respect to such a certificate, which is a self-evident proposition, and it is equally clear that his duty in that regard ceased when he ceased to be president of the corporation. Certificates of the kind are required to be made and deposited with the town clerk on or before the 15th of February or of August, as explicitly provided by the statute. On the 15th of February of that year his predecessor was in office, and of course the defendant was under no obligation to deposit any such certificate on that day, nor was he in any manner in default because his predecessor did not perform that duty. Argument to show that he could not make and deposit such a certificate before he was elected is unnecessary, as such a proposition would be absurd; from which it follows that he was not under any legal obligation to perform such a service until the 15th of August of the same year, it appearing that his election as president took place less than two months prior to that time.

Concede that it became his duty as president to make and deposit such a certificate with the town clerk on the 15th of August next after his election, still it by no means follows that the present action can be maintained, as it clearly appears that he was not in default before that time. Proof of default in the defendant, without more, will not maintain the action, as it is also incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prove that the debt alleged was contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal. Apply that test to the case exhibited in the record, and it is clear that the defendant is not liable and that the decision of the court below is correct.

When the agreement for the steam-engine was made, the defendant was not president of the corporation, and of course he was not in default at that time, nor was he in default when the engine was delivered and placed in position, because that took place, in any view of the evidence, one month before the 15th of August, when the default of the defendant commenced. Prior to that time, the defendant was never in default and, inasmuch as the debt of the plaintiffs was not contracted during the period of his default, he was not liable for that debt. Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y., 458, 462.

Revenue tax on gas.

Section 94 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1864, levying taxes on illuminating gas, does not make a municipal corporation liable for the tax in a case where a gas company has, for a valuable consideration, contracted to furnish the corporation with gas "free of charge."

[No. 75.]

Argued Nov. 20, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court Messrs. J. W. Moore, E. A. Newman, Edward Lander and Chas. A. Ray, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Geo. Shiras, Jr., for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 94 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 264, levying taxes on illuminating gas, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, as amended in 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 128, contained the following provision:

"All gas companies whose price is fixed by law are authorized to add the tax herein imposed to the price per thousand feet on gas sold; and all such companies which have heretofore contracted to furnish gas to municipal corporations are in like manner * * * authorized to add such tax to such contract price."

This, we think, does not make a municipal corporation liable for the tax in a case where a gas company has, for a valuable consideration, contracted to furnish the corporation with gas "free of charge."

Judgment affirmed.

NATOMA WATER AND MINING COMPANY.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 274-277.)

Miners' rights—railroad grants—Pacific Railroad.

1. It is the established doctrine of this court, that rights of miners and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches, to be used in mining operations and irrigation, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect, before the passage of the Act of 1866.

2. Congress, in making donation grants to railroad companies, cannot be supposed to have exercised its liberality at the expense of pre-existing rights which, though imperfect, were still meritorious and had just claims to legislative protection.

3. In construing the grant to the Pacific Railroad Companies, this principle is eminently applicable.

[No. 64.]

Submitted Nov. 11, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

This action was commenced by the plaintiff in error, in the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for Sacramento Co. Cal., claiming title to a certain tract of land, and alleging that the defendant had unlawfully entered the same and constructed a ditch across it. Plaintiff prayed that the ditch might be adjudged to be a nuisance; that, at the expense of the defendant, it might be filled up and abated. Plaintiff also asked for damages and other relief.

The defendant answered, denying the allegations of the plaintiff and averring that eighteen years before, while these were public lands, the defendant entered thereon and constructed the ditch complained of, and has ever since continuously held exclusive possession and ownership of the land used for the purposes of the ditch, adversely to the plaintiff and all other persons, for the purpose of supplying water for miners and others; and that this entry, possession and ownership were taken, acquired and held according to the local law of California, and under the license of the United States confirmed by the Act of Congress of July 26, 1866. The answer also relied on the Statute of Limitations.

NOTE.—Title to water by appropriation; common law rule; rule of mining States. See note to Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U. S., XXII., 414.

Judgment was rendered in the State District Court for the defendant, which judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of California. 50 Cal., 621.

The case is further stated by the court,

Mr. John H. McKune, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. S. Shellabarger, J. M. Wilson and A. P. Catlin, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this case has title to several parcels of land derived from the United States through which a canal owned by defendant runs for conducting water and distributing the same for mining, agricultural and other uses. This canal, a very small part of which passes over the lands of the plaintiff, is some fifteen miles long and was completed in the year 1853, and has been in successful operation ever since, under the control and possession of defendant, and it is stated to have cost about $200,000. It is found also as a fact, by the court of the first instance on the trial of this cause, that the canal and branches during all the time since have been uniformly acknowledged and recognized by the local customs, laws and decisions of the courts of the State of California, in which it lies and that the land covered by the canal and its branches is indispensable to its use. At the time the canal was made, and for many years after, in fact up to the passage of the Pacific Railroad Bills of 1862 and 1864, the land through which the canal ran was the public property of the United States. A part of this land is included in the grant made by that Act to what has since, by change of name and consolidation of corporate franchises, become the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the plaintiff by proper conveyance from said Company, has become the owner of it. He brings this action in the proper court of the State of California to have the canal declared a nuisance and abated and to recover $12,000 damages on account of the maintenance of the nuisance on his land.

The case was submitted to the court, without a jury and the facts which we have stated, and others that will be referred to, are found by the court.

The inception of the title of plaintiff to the land described in his petition, other than that derived from the railroad company, was a declaratory statement for preemption, filed August 6, 1866, by himself for one tract, and a similar statement filed September 14, 1866, by his brother, Jacob Broder, for another. But prior to either of these dates, to wit: on the 26th of July of the same year, Congress enacted a law, the purpose of which was to deal with the rights of miners who had theretofore, without objection, and with the tacit encouragement of the United States, discovered, developed and mined the public lands. 14 Stat. at L., 251. The 9th section of that Act contains this declaration: "That, wherever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws and decisions of the courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals, for the purposes aforesaid: is hereby acknowledged."

As to the canal of the defendant: so far as it ran through the land of the United States, at the date of this Act it was an unequivocal grant of the right of way, if it was no more. As the plaintiff's right commenced subsequent to this statute, as to the lands patented to him and his brother, he took the title subject to this right of way and cannot now disturb it.

In reference to the lands of plaintiff held under conveyance from the Pacific Railroad Company, it might be a question of some difficulty whether the right was so far a vested right in that Company before the passage of this Act of 1866, that the latter would be ineffectual as regards these lands. But we do not think that defendants are under the necessity of relying on that statute.

We are of opinion that it is the established doctrine of this court that rights of miners, who had taken possession of mines and worked and developed them, and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect before the passage of the Act of 1866, and that the section of the Act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one. This subject has so recently received our attention, and the grounds on which this construction rests are so well set forth in the following cases, that they will be relied on without further argument: Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall., 507 [87 U. S., XXII., 414]; Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall., 670 [87 U. S., XXII., 452]; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S., 762 [XXIV., 313]; Jennison v. Kirk [ante, 240].

We turn now to the Act of 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 356, which makes the final grant to the Pacific Railroad Companies, and the acceptance of which by the companies bound them to its terms, and we find in section 4, which enlarges the grant of lands made by the Act of 1862, this clause of reservation from the general terms of the grant: "Any lands granted by this Act, or the Act to which this is an amendment, shall not defeat or impair any preemption, homestead, swamp land or other claim, nor include any government reservation or mineral lands, or the improvements of any bona fide settler or any lands returned or denominated as mineral lands, and the timber necessary to support his said improvements as a miner or agriculturist."

We have had occasion to construe a very common clause of reservation in grants to other railroad companies, and in aid of other works of internal improvements, and in all of them we have done so in the light of the general principle that Congress, in the act of making these donations, could not be supposed to exercise its liberality at the expense of pre-existing rights, which, though imperfect, were still meritorious, and had just claims to legislative protection. See, Wolcott v. Des Moines Co., 5 See 11 OTTO.

Wall., 681 [72 U. S., XVIII., 689]; Williams v. Baker, 17 Wall., 144 [84 U. S., XXI., 561]; R. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S., 733 [XXIII., 634].

In construing the grant to the Pacific Railroad Companies this principle is eminently applicable. The grant of land was vastly larger than any previous grant. The land was surrounded by circumstances much more varied than in any previous grant, and the number and varied character of the interests which might be affected by the vast extent of the donation were beyond any with which Congress had previously dealt.

Hence, we have in the clause of reservation a much more liberal and extended protection of pre-existing rights than in reservation clause which had become a formula in previous grants.

Not only are prior reservations made by the government, and rights of preemption excepted, but the improvements of bona fide settlers, land returned or denominated mineral lands, and the timber necessary to support the miner's improvements, and any other claim, are unaffected by the grant. Of course this means any honest claim evidenced by improvements or other acts of possession.

We cannot doubt that the claim of the defendants, of which they had been in possession for twelve years when this Act was passed, on which they had expended $200,000, which was of great utility, nay necessity, to a large agricultural and mining interest, was of the class which this section declared should not be defeated by the grant which Congress was then making.

As the judgment of the Supreme Court of California was based on this principle, it is affirmed.

On a question of fact, the finding of the circuit court cannot be reversed here.

[No. 55.]

Submitted Nov. 7, 1879. Decided Nov. 24, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. E. B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. H. Bradley, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action on the bond of a Collector of Internal Revenue. After the suit was brought, amicable continuances were granted, and then several statements of account were made by the auditing officer of the Government. The last of these stated a balance against the collector of $2,115.25, which was paid by his executors before final trial. The only question raised in the court below and sought to be presented here is the date from which interest should be awarded on that sum.

The counsel for the Government cite section 3624 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that where any person accountable for public money neglects or refuses to pay the sum or balance found due to the United States upon adjustment by the proper officer, he shall forfeit his commissions and pay interest at six per cent per annum from the time of receiving the money.

There is no question here of the construction of the statute, but whether the balance finally found due the Government was for money received by him or for something else. The case was submitted to the court without a jury, and the finding of facts by the court is part of the record.

From this it appears that about the time the collector went out of the office he paid a large sum of money, which he supposed to be all that he owed the Government. But he stood charged on the books of the department with a large sum for uncollected taxes. It was the adjustment of this account which occupied the three years in which the suit was pending.

The court finds that the final balance of $2,115.25 was made up of these uncollected taxes, for which he was still responsible, and was not for any money actually received by the collector.

Counsel for the Government argue against this conclusion. But whether sound or not, it was a question of fact on which the finding of that court cannot be reversed here; and its judgment is, accordingly, affirmed.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

A. ROSS RAY ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 522-528.)

Parol agreement to vary contract.

The terms of a contract under seal may be varied by a subsequent parol agreement. Certainly, whatever may have been the rule at law, such is the rule in equity.

[No. 67.]

Argued Nov. 13, 1879. Decided Dec. 1, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The facts of the case are stated by the court.

The bill was filed in the court below, by the present appellees, against the appellant, for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the appellant from shutting off the water from the mill of the complainants, because the complainants continued to keep their gauge at the wheel, instead of complying with the requirements of the appellant.

The court below, at Special Term, rendered a decree in favor of the complainants, and this decree having been affirmed at General Term, the Canal Company appealed to this court.

Messrs. Richard T. Merrick, W. S. Cox and M. F. Morris, for appellant:

The contract of lease between the defendant and the Canal Company being under seal, it can not be changed by any instrument of a less formal character. Any conditions therein for the benefit of the Company could be waived by it in the most informal manner; but such waiver would amount to a mere license to the lessee, revocable at pleasure by the party granting it, though operating as a full protection for everything done under it while remaining unrevoked.

Prince v. Case, 2 Am. L. Cas., 540; 10 Conn., 375; notes and cases cited.

Mr. W. D. Davidge, for appellees:

It is claimed that the leases being under seal, could not be altered by even a written contract not under seal, although made upon a valuable consideration. This, it is submitted, is a mistake. Parol evidence, whether oral or written, would not be admissible to contradict or vary the words of the leases, or to show that the parties by the leases intended that the gauges should be, not at canal bank, but at the wheels. The case, however, is entirely different when it is shown that, by a subsequent agreement, upon sufficient consideration, the parties have abrogated all or any part of the original leases. In such case there can be no doubt that the subsequent agreement is valid.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

Assuming the facts to be such as are averred in the bill, and not denied in the answer, we have this case: in 1860 the complainants were engaged in enlarging the machinery and capacity of their flouring-mill, situate near the canal of the defendants, between it and the Potomac River, and dependent for its power upon water obtained from the canal. While thus engaged it was agreed between them and the defendants that for a stipulated rent they should have full right, permission and authority to draw from the canal, for the uses of their mill, so much water as would pass through an aperture of specified dimensions, in an iron plate not exceeding a half inch in thickness, on certain conditions. The first of these related to the form of the aperture and its capacity. The second was that the aperture should not be placed nearer the canal bottom proper than two feet. The third prohibited any attachment, contrivance or device to increase the quantity of water that could be drawn through the aperture above what could be drawn if such device were not used. The fourth required that a sliding gate or gates should be placed in front of the aperture, so that the whole water-power granted might, as occasion under the provision of the contract required, be entirely or partially stopped from passing through it. The fifth condition related to the construction of the fore-bay, the aperture, and sliding gates, requiring them, inter alia, to be put down, constructed and thereafter kept in repair at the sole cost of the complainants, under the special direction and superintendence, and subject in every particular to the approval of such officer of the Company as might be charged with that duty. The sixth condition was that, in like manner, at the sole cost of the grantees or complainants, and under the special direction of the officers of the Company charged with that duty, such alterations should be made from time to time in the fore-bay or trunks, cover or bridge aperture, and sliding gate or gates as might be considered necessary by the Company or their officers, to prevent or lessen the inconvenience to the navigation of the canal and the use of its towing-path, which might be found to arise from said use of the water, or that might be thought necessary by the Company for the greater security of the canal or of its works. The seventh condition reserved to the Company the right of full ingress and egress, by their officers, to and from the premises of the grantees, for the purpose of examining, repairing and preserving the fixtures and works connected with drawing off the water, repairing the embankment and other parts of the canal, and also for the purpose of ascertaining whether any defects existed in the fixtures and works for drawing off water, repairing the embankment and other parts of the canal, and also for the purpose of ascertaining whether any defects existed in the fixtures and works for drawing off water, occasioning leakage from the canal, or endangering its security and that of its works, and also for ascertaining whether more water was drawn off than was granted by the contract. The remaining conditions need not be noticed. They have no possible bearing upon the matter now in controversy.

Obviously, this grant of the water privilege contemplated that the aperture, the trunk or fore-bay, and the sliding gate or gates should be constructed after the grant was made. To that extent the contract was executory. It did not expressly require that the aperture and gauge should be located at the bank of the canal, in front of an opening there made, though probably such was the understanding of the parties. But conceding that it was and that the contract in terms required such a location, it was, nevertheless, competent for the parties in the subsequent execution thereof to substitute another location in place of that first contemplated, and if such a change was made by mutual consent it amounted to a compliance with the provisions of the contract. The Company, after having accepted or acquiesced in a location of the aperture and gate at a point nearer the complainants' mill than the canal bank, could not afterwards complain that the condition respecting the location had not been performed, unless a right to require arbitrarily a change was reserved.

The bill avers that after the enlargement of the complainants' mill had been completed, the works for conducting the water from the canal to the mill, and for measuring the quantity of water granted by the contract, were constructed and located under the special direction of the engineer and superintendent of the Canal Company, the officers charged with the duty and with their approval, and that with like approval the aperture or gauge and sliding gate thereat were constructed and located at the wheel of the complainants' mill, where they have since remained, having been repeatedly inspected and approved by the officers of the Company. This averment is, at most, only evasively denied. The answer does, indeed, deny that the gauge and sliding gate were located at the wheel of the complainants' mill with the knowledge and consent of the Company, and denies that such location was made with the approval or the direction of the officers of the Company, "if it is meant by the averment (of the bill) to that effect that such arrangement was intended as permanent, or as other than a temporary indulgence." Such an equivocal denial cannot be considered as breaking the force of the complainants' allegation. Then, what is the effect of that averment? If, in executing the contract between the parties, the gauge and sliding gate were placed at the wheel of the mill with the knowledge of the Company and with their consent, and if the location was thus made under the special direction of their engineer and superintendent, the officers charged with the duty; if for years the location remained unchanged and unchallenged, having been repeatedly inspected and approved by the Company's proper officers, as averred in the bill and not denied, it would be grossly inequitable to hold that the location was not intended by both parties to be an execution of the contract, and accepted as such. Especially is this true when the location was made at the cost of the grantees of the water, and when, at the time when the works were thus constructed and located, there was also placed at the opening of the fore-bay into the canal, as part and in consideration thereof, and at the cost of the grantees, a gate to enable the Company to control the water-power granted, in accordance with the provisions of the grant. And it matters not that the Company may not have intended such location of the gauge to be permanent, unless such was the understanding of both parties, which is not averred. There can be no doubt that a party to a contract imposing mutual obligations may accept, as performance by the opposite party, some other thing than that specifically designated; and if he does, he cannot afterwards insist upon exact performance. Nothing is more common than such fulfillment of contract obligations. In equity it is certainly regarded as sufficient fulfillment. In the present case the location of the aperture and sliding gate at the mill-wheel, instead of at the canal bank, effectuated the leading purpose of the contract, which was to give the complainants a specified quantity of water; and the Company was fully protected by an additional gate at the canal, at the entrance of the fore-bay, by which they were enabled conveniently to control the flow of water to the mill.

This, however, is not all the case. On the 23d of February, 1865, some other millers having preferred requests that they might be allowed to draw, at the wheels of their mills, the quantity of water leased to them by the Canal Company, the Board of Directors of the Company adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the superintendent of the Georgetown division, under the direction of W. E. Smith, C. E., be directed to place the water-gauges for the mills at Georgetown at such points as may be deemed most advisable to effect the objects of the respective water grants, and to limit the flow of water to the quantity to which the lessees are severally entitled: Provided, that said lessees shall severally assent in writing that the officers of the Company may, at all times, have free access to their premises for examination or regulation of such parts as may be constructed upon them; and provided further, that the Board may, at any time during their pleasure, if they shall deem it necessary, alter or change the position of such gauge or gauges, or any of them, as contemplated by the lease, and that this resolution shall not in any manner change or impair the provisions or requirements of the respective leases granted to said parties."

On the 25th of the same month the several millers, together with the complainants in this case, gave their written consent to the resolution, and requested that the water-gauges should be placed upon their respective premises, at or near the water-wheel. This resolution (made a contract by the acceptance of its provisions) certainly cannot be construed so as to deprive the complainants of the right they had previously acquired. It was intended mainly for the benefit of the other millers whose water-gauges were not located at the wheels of their respective mills. And though the complainants assented to it, and thus subjected themselves to the obligations prescribed, they did not thereby agree that the location of the gauge at their water-wheel might be changed at the pleasure of the Company, without cause, or for any reason except such as were specified in the grants of water to them. The proviso declared that the Board of Directors might alter or change the position of the gauge, "as contemplated by the lease." That means that the Company reserved the same power to change the location which they had by the original contract. It stated expressly that the resolution should not in any manner change or impair the provisions or requirements of the respective leases granted to the parties. Now, what were the provisions of the leases, or contemplated by them, respecting changes in the position of the water-gauges? They are to be found in the sixth condition upon which the grants of water were made. They are that such alterations in the fore-bay or trunk cover of bridges, aperture and sliding gate or gates, from time to time shall be made, as the Company or their officer charged with that duty might consider necessary "To prevent or lessen the inconvenience to the navigation of the said canal, and the use of its towing path, which may be found to arise from the use of said water, or that may be thought necessary by the said Company for the greater security of the said canal or of its works." No right was reserved to require such alterations arbitrarily, or for any other cause than one of those thus specified, and none to enforce such a requirement by stopping the flow of the water. It is admitted here by stipulation that the Company has no knowledge of abuses by the complainants of the privileges conceded to them by the resolution of February, 1865, necessitating a change of their gauge to the canal bank for the purpose of navigation, or in respect of the tow-path, or for the security of the canal or of its works. The change required, therefore, is without any cause that justifies a demand that it be made; without the existence of any circumstance that, by the conditions of the grant, authorized the Company to enforce it.

It is said, on behalf of the appellants, that the contract of lease between the Canal Company and the complainants, being a sealed instrument, could not be changed by any instrument of a less formal nature. From this it is inferred that neither the action of the Company's officers in 1860 nor the resolution of 1865 could change the provisions of the grant. It is admitted that the Company could waive any conditions therein for the benefit of the grantors such as the condition that the gauge should be at the canal bank; but is insisted that such a waiver would amount to no more than a license, revocable at will. But were it conceded that the location of the gauge at the water-wheel of the complainants' mill was in pursuance of a mere license, the license, when followed by the expenditure of the licensee's money in the construction of the works, on the faith of it, became a contract irrevocable by the grantor. The case, however, does not rest on that ground. The location of the gauge in 1860, under the direction and with the approval of the officers of the Company charged with the duty of directing and superintending its construction, was, as we have said, an execution of the contract in that regard and not an alteration of it. And if it was not an execution of the contract, the resolution of 1865, accepted by the complainants, was a contract on sufficient consideration, which the parties were competent to make. Notwithstanding what was said in some of the old cases, it is now recognized doctrine that the terms of a contract under seal may be varied by a subsequent parol agreement. Certainly, whatever may have been the rule at law, such is the rule in equity. Dearborn v. Cross, 7 Cow., 48; Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 Serg. & R., 241; Fleming v. Gilbert, 3 Johns., 527. These are cases at law. Numerous others might be cited. The rule in equity is undoubted.

The objections we have thus expressed lead directly to an affirmation of the decree rendered by the court below. In 1873, thirteen years after the gauge had been constructed at the water-wheel, the Canal Company required the complainants to place the gauge and sliding gate at the canal bank, and threatened to shut off the water from the mill if the requirement was not complied with. The Company had no right to make and had none to enforce such a requirement, except in the cases specified in the leases, and those cases have now no existence.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District is, therefore, affirmed.

EMANUEL BAST, Plff. in Err.,

v.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF ASHLAND.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 93-97.)

Judgment assigned as security—parol evidence.

1. Where a judgment was assigned to a bank, as collateral security for the payment of certain notes, with authority, in case said notes were not paid at maturity, to sell the judgment and apply the proceeds to their payment, the Bank was under no obligation to collect the judgment before the maturity of the notes.

2. Evidence of a parol agreement made by the Bank, contemporaneously with the written agreement that the Bank should take measures to collect the judgment assigned previous to the maturity of the notes, was inadmissible.

[No. 86.]

Argued Nov. 26, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Hughes & Farquhar, for plaintiff in error:

There are two positions taken by the plaintiff in error in his affidavit and supplemental affidavit of defense, viz.:

1. That, by the assignment of the judgment against the iron and coal company as a collateral security to the Bank, the latter alone had control over it and, having failed to proceed to collect it until after another execution had swept away property, from which the amount of the notes in suit and of the judgment, could have been realized, if execution had been promptly issued, the Bank must account for the loss to Bast.

2. That the Bank having, when it received the notes in suit and the assignment of the judgment, agreed in terms that it would issue execution upon said judgment, and proceed to collect the same, whenever the money could be made thereon, and having failed and neglected to issue said execution when the money could have been made thereon, whereby said Bast was damaged to the full amount of said notes, he has a right to set off said damages in this suit against said notes.

The first proposition involves the question of the liability of the assignee of a collateral security which has been lost by his neglect.

In Pennsylvania, it is abundantly decided that where a collateral is lost by the insolvency of the debt in the collateral instrument through the supine negligence of the creditor, he must account for the loss to his own debtor.

Miller v. Bk., 8 Watts, 192; Bk. of U. S. v. Peabody, 20 Pa., 454; Ins. Co. v. Smith, 11 Pa., 120; Sellers v. Jones, 22 Pa., 423; Lishy v. O'Brien, 4 Watts, 141; Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 21 Pa., 237; Ins. Co. v. Murr, 46 Pa., 504; Hanna v. Holton, 78 Pa., 334; Lyon v. Bk., 12 S. & R., 68; Beale v. Bk., 5 Watts, 530.

The foregoing cases would seem to decide conclusively the principle that the holder of a collateral security must account to the assignor thereof for its value, if lost by the negligence of such holder, or by his failure to take the necessary steps to prevent it becoming worthless or lost; yet the court below entered judgment for the plaintiff below, and against the defendant, for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, when such affidavit set forth, 1: that the defendant below had assigned to the plaintiff below collateral security sufficient to pay the debt sued for; and 2, that said collateral security had been lost by the neglect of the plaintiff below.

The second proposition is, that, in an action upon a contract, the defendant may recover damages arising out of the same transaction.

The affidavit of defense avers that it was part of the contract, that the plaintiff below would proceed by execution to collect the judgment assigned as collateral, whenever the defendant in the judgment had sufficient property out of which it could be made; that the defendant in the judgment did have such property; that the plaintiff below failed and neglected to issue any execution; that, by reason of such failure and neglect the judgment became worthless and was lost, and that the defendant below was thereby damaged to the full amount claimed by the plaintiff below in this suit.

Eckel v. Murphey, 15 Pa., 488; Hunt v. Gilmore, 59 Pa., 450; Shaw v. Badger, 12 S. & R., 275; Thompson v. Clark, 56 Pa., 34; Leiber-sperger v. Bk., 30 Pa., 531; Twitchell v. McMurtree, 77 Pa., 383.

Messrs. R. M. Schick and G. R. & S. H. Kaercher, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on three notes made by Bast, the plaintiff in error, to the First National Bank of Ashland, defendant in error, dated March 1, 1876, and payable four months after date, two being for $2,000 each, and the other for $3,481.79. Simultaneously with the delivery of the notes the following assignment in writing was made:

"Know all men by these presents, that I, Emanuel Bast, do hereby transfer and assign to William Torrey, Cashier, of Ashland, Pennsylvania, a certain judgment of June Term, 1875, in Court of Common Pleas of Schuylkill County, No. 1292, in which the First National Bank of Ashland is plaintiff, and the Ringgold Iron and Coal Company is defendant, and the three several drafts upon which the said judgment was obtained as collateral security for the payment of two notes of $2,000 each, and one for $3,481.69, made by me to order of William Torrey, cashier, dated March 1, 1876, payable in four months after date, and upon failure on my part to pay said notes at maturity, or at the maturity of time for which the same may be renewed, then the said Torrey, cashier, is hereby authorized and empowered to sell the same at public sale, after ten days' notice, to me, and apply the proceeds thereof to payment of my said notes, and in case the proceeds of same shall not be sufficient to pay said notes, then I promise to pay any balance that may be due.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this first day of March, 1876.

[Seal.]

EMANUEL BAST.

Witness: A. P. SPINNEY,
S. HENRY NORRIS."

Bast was, at the time, the owner of the judgment assigned, on which there was due the exact amount of his notes, and on each of the notes was an indorsement to the effect that the judgment assigned was held as collateral. There was no legal impediment in the way of an immediate issue of execution on the judgment, and until May 19, 1876, the Iron and Coal Company, the judgment defendant, had unincumbered personal property subject to levy and sale on execution sufficient to pay the amount that was due. No execution was issued until June 19, and before that time the property of the company had all been exhausted by the prior levy of executions issued on other judgments. Bast made no demand on the Bank to issue execution on his judgment at any time before June 19.

After the maturity of the notes the judgment was sold pursuant to the authority contained in the assignment and $2,141 realized, which was applied towards the payment of the notes. This suit was brought to recover the balance due after this application was made.

Bast filed an affidavit of merits, which in Pennsylvania has the effect in cases of this class, of a plea, in which he alleges (1) that it was the duty of the Bank under the written assignment to have issued execution on the judgment prior to the time it did; and (2) "that simultaneously with his delivery of said notes to said Bank as aforesaid, as well as said assignment of said judgment as collateral security for the same, it was agreed between deponent (Bast) and said Bank, as part of the transaction, that said Bank would issue execution upon said judgment and proceed to collect the same whenever the money could be made thereon." He then claimed that "By reason of the supine neglect of the plaintiff in not issuing execution as aforesaid, the said judgment assigned to it as aforesaid as collateral security for the payment of the notes sought to be collected in this case was lost and became worthless, whereby deponent suffered damages to an amount equal to the full amount due upon the notes in suit."

The court below held that the defense set up in the affidavit of merits was insufficient in law, and gave judgment for the Bank for $5,440.46, the balance remaining due on the notes.

To reverse this judgment this writ of error has been brought.

Two questions are presented by the defense in this case.

1. Was the Bank bound by the terms of the written assignment to take steps for the collection of the judgment before the maturity of the notes? and

2. Was parol evidence admissible to prove the alleged promise, made simultaneously with the assignment and as part of the transaction, to issue execution and collect the judgment whenever the money could be made thereon.

1. As to the assignment.

No obligation to collect was in terms put on the Bank by the writing. On the contrary, the only power conferred on the Bank in reference to the judgment was to sell if the notes were not paid at maturity, or at the maturity of their renewals. All parties seem to have contemplated delay in the collection, and Bast seems also to have been especially careful to retain in his own hands the power to withhold execution if he saw fit. Until a sale was made under the express power granted for that purpose he continued the actual owner of the judgment, subject only to the lien of the Bank to secure the payment of his notes. So far as anything appears on the face of the written instrument, he retained full control of the collection by legal process; but whether that be so or not, he certainly could call on the Bank at any time before a sale to take the necessary steps, or permit him to do so, to enforce its collection, or to secure and preserve such priority of lien as the judgment was entitled to over other judgments or executions thereon. If the Bank had failed to comply with his demand, and loss had ensued, other questions than such as are now presented might have arisen. But upon the face of the assignment we are clearly of the opinion that the Bank put itself under no obligation to collect except on the demand of Bast. Any attempt to do so before the maturity of the notes, without his consent, would be a direct violation of the terms of the instrument under which it acquired all its rights.

2. As to the parol evidence.

No principle of evidence is better settled at the common law than that, when persons put their contracts in writing, it is, in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, "Conclusively presumed that the whole engagement, and the extent and manner of their undertaking, was reduced to writing." 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 275. In Pennsylvania, the stringency of this rule has been very considerably relaxed, but we have been referred to no case where, in the absence of fraud or mistake, parol evidence has been admitted to alter the plain and unequivocal terms of a written instrument. In Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa., 463, the court say: "Where parties, without any fraud or mistake, have deliberately put their engagements in writing, the law declares the writing to be not only the best, but the only evidence of their agreement, and we are not disposed to relax the rule. It has been found to be a wholesale one, and now that parties are allowed to testify in their own behalf, the necessity of adhering strictly to it is all the more imperative." In this case, the Pennsylvania decisions are extensively reviewed, and the exceptions to the rule of the common law which they recognize carefully stated, but the conclusion is that, "As a general rule, it (parol evidence) is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument." Again; in Barnhart v. Riddle, 29 Pa., 96, this language is used: "Where parties have deliberately put their engagements in writing, and no ambiguity arises out of the terms employed, you shall not add to, contradict, or vary the language mutually chosen as most fit to express the intention of their minds. What if parol evidence prove never so clearly, that they used such and such words in making their bargain; the writing signed, if it contain not those words, is final and conclusive evidence that they were set aside in favor of the other expressions that are found in the written instrument. And hence this rule of law is only a conclusion of reason, that that medium of proof is most trustworthy which is most precise, deliberate and unchangeable." This is the rule, it was said, which prevails in reference "to the terms in which the writing is couched," and that "Evidence to explain the subject-matter of an agreement is essentially different from that which varies the terms in which a contract is conceived." It is not always easy to determine when in Pennsylvania parol evidence is admissible to explain a written instrument, but in Anspach v. Bast, 52 Pa., 356, it is expressly declared that "No case goes the length of ruling that such evidence is admitted to change the promise itself, without proof or even allegation of fraud or mistake. The contrary has been repeatedly decided." To the same effect is the case of Hacker v. Oil Refining Co., 73 Pa., 93, as well as many others that might be cited.

In the present case, as we have seen, the contract which the parties reduced to writing is, in effect, that the Bank should not, before the maturity of the notes, take measures to collect the judgment assigned without the consent of Bast. The offer was to prove a contemporaneous parol agreement that it should do so. This is a clear contradiction of the terms of the written contract, in a matter where there is no pretense of ambiguity and where there has been no fraud or mistake.

We think the court below was right in giving judgment for the Bank, notwithstanding the affidavit of merits, and the judgment is, consequently, affirmed.

of ASA MAY, Deceased, ET AL., Appts.,
v.

LEPINE C. RICE, Assignee of ANDREW M.
SLOAN.

(See S. C., "May v. Sloan," 11 Otto, 231-239.)

Jurisdiction as to amount—specific performance of parol agreement—pleadings—trade.

1. The objection to the jurisdiction of this court, that it does not appear that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $5,000, is untenable, where it appears from the record that the appellee, who raises the objection, purchased the land in dispute for $21,000, and claims it by that purchase, and the petition of appeal to this court, verified by the affidavit of the appellant, avers that the land is worth more than $5,000.

2. A bill to compel the conveyance of land cannot be maintained upon a parol agreement only. The Statute of Frauds would be a complete bar.

3. Where the defendant in his answer denies that any such agreement was made, his denial is as effective for letting in the defense as if the Statute of Frauds had been pleaded.

4. The word "trade," includes not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money, or commerce and traffic generally. A sale of lands, comes within the term "trade," used in the agreement set out in the opinion.

Argued Oct. 30, 31, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court. It appears that the plaintiff below became insolvent and the defendant below died before the argument.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, for appellants.

Mr. Chas. N. West, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises upon a bill in equity filed by A. M. Sloan, the appellee, against Asa May, the appellant (since deceased), in the Circuit Court for the Second Judicial Circuit of Florida, to compel May to convey to the complainant a certain tract of land situated in Jefferson County, Florida, known as the Alvin May place, and containing about 1,100 acres; and for an injunction against May's attempting to obtain possession of the land pending the suit. The case was removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, and the appeal is from the decree of that court.

A preliminary point is made as to the jurisdiction of this court, on the ground that it does not appear that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $5,000. This objection is untenable. It does appear from the record that the appellee, who raises the objection, purchased the land for the price of $21,000; and it is by virtue of that purchase that he claims it in this suit. Then again, the petition of appeal to this court, which is verified by the affidavit of the appellant, distinctly avers that the matter in dispute is a large body of land worth more than $5,000 in value. No attempt is made to controvert this allegation, and we think that it sufficiently appears that the case is within our jurisdiction.

The facts, as set forth in the bill and answer and developed by the proofs, are substantially as follows:

In 1868, Asa May, the appellant, sold and conveyed to his relative and friend, Alvin May, a plantation in Jefferson County, Florida, called the Asa May place, consisting of about 1,200 acres of land, for the sum of $14,848 in gold; and received in payment eight sealed notes, payable at intervals of one year, with interest, seven of which were for $2,000 each, and the eighth for the balance. To secure the payment of these notes, Alvin gave to Asa May a mortgage on the property sold and on two other plantations adjoining, one called the Picolata place, containing 650 acres, and the other called the Alvin May place (being the property in question), containing about 1,100 acres. Various payments were made on this debt, amounting, as Alvin May testified, to from $9,000 to $11,000.

Alvin May, besides the above property, became the ostensible owner of several other plantations in the vicinity, and became indebted to A. M. Sloan & Co., commission merchants in Savannah, for money lent and advanced and supplies furnished, to an amount exceeding $50,000. To secure this indebtedness, in January, 1872, he gave to Sloan & Co. three notes, one for $16,881.28, one for $18,777.14, and one for $20,696.78, payable respectively on the first days of January, 1873, 1874 and 1875; and executed to Sloan & Co. a mortgage on the same property previously mortgaged to Asa May, and on several other tracts of land, namely: one called the Elbow tract, containing 660 acres; one called the Arendell tract, containing over 1,000 acres; one called the McCain place, containing about 1,100 acres; and a small tract of 150 acres, called the S. F. May place. Both mortgages embraced all the personal property on the lands mortgaged, or that might thereafter be thereon.

Alvin May being unable to pay this indebtedness, in May, 1873, Asa May and A. M. Sloan, who succeeded to the rights of A. M. Sloan & Co., severally brought suits against him, and recovered simultaneous judgments, upon which executions were duly issued. Asa May's judgment was for $5,782.15; but the whole balance due to him for principal and interest on his mortgage, including the amount of said judgment, was upwards of $13,000. Sloan's judgment was for $13,811.66, being only upon the note given to his firm which had first matured; the other two notes not being due. Subsequent judgments and executions were obtained by other parties.

To obviate the necessity of an actual levy on his property, and to save the expense of advertising, Alvin May, in October, 1873, agreed with the sheriff that no part of the property should be removed; that the sale might take place on the first Monday of December, 1873; and that the proceeds should be distributed according to the rights of the creditors. The sale was afterwards postponed to the first Monday of January, 1874. It was understood that the property to be sold would be the three plantations included in Asa May's mortgage and all the personal property, including mules, farming utensils and crops. It seems that Sloan had a lien for advances on the crop, independent of his execution and mortgage. The reason why the several tracts, covered by Sloan's mortgage and not covered by Asa May's, were not proposed to be sold at the same time does not clearly appear, except that the title to the McCain place had failed, and the Arendell place, as will be seen, was allowed to be retained by Alvin May free of Sloan's mortgage. The other two tracts, namely: the Elbow tract and the S. F. May place, may have been reserved for the remaining notes held by Sloan which were not yet due.

On the 13th of December, 1873, Alvin May, the debtor, and A. M. Sloan, made the following written agreement:

"State of Florida, County of Jefferson: Memorandum made and entered into this thirteenth day of December, A. D. 1873, by and between Alvin May and Andrew M. Sloan, relative to the sale of the lands and personal property hereinafter specified.

The said May, in consideration of one dollar, in hand paid, of twenty-one thousand dollars to be paid by the said Sloan, bargains and sells to the said Sloan the lands owned by him in said county, known as the Lang place, the Gamble eighth, the Harvey forty, and twenty acres belonging to the Gorman eighth, and the Murray land, comprising eleven hundred acres, more or less; also, six mules, one thousand bushels of corn, one four-horse and one two-horse wagon, the said lands comprising the home settlement, the house formerly occupied by the said Alvin May, and the other tenements and improvements thereon. The said May is to give a good title to the same, and the same is to sell in such way as to make the title perfect at sheriff's sale, if necessary, to satisfy the judgments now upon record, or mortgages now existing, and the payments are to be made upon the claims existing against the said May, and in favor of the said Sloan. The said Sloan is to have possession immediately, and the said May is to vacate the houses by the first day of January, or sooner, if possible.

It is conceded that the lands which form the subject of this agreement constituted the Alvin May place, now the subject of controversy, and were included in Asa May's mortgage.

The evidence establishes, we think, that, in pursuance of this agreement, Sloan did take possession of portions of the property on the first of January, 1874, and has ever since continued to occupy the same.

On the 5th of January, the day before the sale was to take place, Asa May, Alvin May and Sloan had a meeting at the office of Mr. Pasco, an attorney at Waukenah, in the neighborhood of the property, and entered into the following agreement:

"Memorandum of Propositions to Alvin May by Asa May and A. M. Sloan, relative to Settlement of Indebtedness.

The property, subject to the mortgages and execution of the said May and Sloan, is to be sold on the first Monday in January, 1874, under the executions against Alvin May. Unless there are other purchasers ready to bid the amount of Asa May's claim, he is to buy in the property for his own use.

If Asa May buys the property, he agrees that if Alvin May and wife will relinquish all right and title, including her right of dower, to the property sold, that the Arendell plantation shall be given up to Alvin May; that Asa May will pay up or guarantee the payment of the balance due to Arendell's creditors on the Arendell place, the said amount not to exceed $3,000 at the present time; and that the said Asa May and Sloan will make no further claim to the said place, and will permit the title to rest in Alvin May or his wife.

Asa May and Sloan bind themselves to make no further personal claim upon Alvin May on account of the mortgage and judgment debts of theirs against him; Asa May agrees to let Alvin May have mules of those bought in, and bushels of corn, and pounds of fodder, to enable him to work the Arendell place, the value of the mules to be deducted from the $3,000. Alvin May is to give peaceable possession of the property as soon as possible, so as to enable Asa May to proceed at once to make his arrangements for the coming year.

Alvin May is to bring up a memorandum of all the property subject to the mortgage and executions against him, early on the morning of the sale, and is to get in as many as possible of the mules sold by him and not paid for, or paid for only in part. The amount of $3,000 embraces the entire amount to be paid by Asa May, whether it is paid on the land, in mules, or in any other manner. Asa May agrees not to interfere with any bona fide trades made by Alvin May, so far as any of the mortgaged property is concerned, provided the trades have been carried out in good faith, and completed.

Executed in our presence:
A. DENHAM.
S. PASCO."

The last clause of this agreement constitutes.

one of the principal grounds of the present controversy.

On the 6th of January, 1874, sale took place under the executions. Asa May bid off the three tracts of land covered by his mortgage at fifty cents per acre, namely: the Asa May place, the Picolata place, and the Alvin May place; also nine mules, one pony, one mare, three two-horse wagons, one six-horse wagon, one log-cart, a sugar-mill and a buggy and harness. Sloan bid off the fodder, a four-horse wagon, a cotton-gin and two sugar-kettles. One Whitfield bid off fifteen hundred bushels of corn, which he afterwards surrendered to Sloan under the latter's plantation lien.

The proceeds of the sale of the lands, mules, plantation implements, etc., amounting to about $3,000, were applied to Asa May's mortgage; and the proceeds of the sale of the corn and fodder, amounting to about $1,260, were applied to Sloan's plantation lien for advances. It does not appear that any money passed; the application of the proceeds of sale was made by simply crediting the amounts. Sloan received the articles which had been sold to him by Alvin May by the agreement of December 13, 1873, though the mules and one of the wagons were bid off by Asa May, who afterwards purchased the mules and the corn and fodder from Sloan. The sheriff executed a deed to Asa May for the real estate in accordance with the sale.

The object of this suit is to compel Asa May to convey to Sloan, the complainant, the Alvin May place according to what he alleges was the agreement and understanding between the parties, and the intent and meaning of the last clause in the agreement of January 5, 1874.

If the case depended upon the parol agreement set up by the complainant, whereby he claims that Asa May bound himself to convey the land to him, no relief could be granted on this bill. The Statute of Frauds would be a complete bar. The defendant in his answer denies that any such agreement was made. Such a denial is as effective for letting in the defense as if the Statute of Frauds had been pleaded. Sugd., Vendors and Purchasers, 150, ch. IV., sec. 6, par. 5.

This renders it unnecessary to examine minutely the testimony on the question thus put in issue by the parties. Had the complainant succeeded in proving such an agreement, it could not have availed him. But the fact is, that he did not succeed in making such proof. The evidence is conflicting on the subject. The fact being denied in the answer, it would have required evidence tantamount to the testimony of two witnesses to establish it; whilst we have only that of the complainant himself, in which he is contradicted by the defendant and by Alvin May and Pasco, the attorney.

The question must stand, then, on the construction to be given to the written agreement of January 5, 1874, in view of the surrounding circumstances and the acts of the parties. Does the last clause of that agreement by its terms embrace the transaction contained in the contract made by Alvin May and Sloan on the 13th of December, 1873? Was that transaction a "trade" made by Alvin May relating to the mortgaged property, within the meaning of the terms? Was it a "trade" carried out in good faith and completed?

See 11 OTTO.

The word "trade," in its broadest significance, includes not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money, or commerce and traffic generally. There is nothing in the manner in which it is used in the clause in question to limit its meaning. Asa May was to buy in the property for his own use. This was the general purport of the agreement. But it was added that "Asa May agrees not to interfere with any bona fide trades made by Alvin May, so far as any of the mortgaged property is concerned, provided the trades have been carried out in good faith and completed." Now, certainly the agreement of December 13, between Alvin May and Sloan, was a trade, within the broad meaning of the term. It was a trade relating to a portion of the mortgaged property. It appears to have been made for full consideration and in good faith. Asa May, when put on the stand, although he denied that, by the clause in question, he intended to confirm or to agree to carry out the agreement of December 13, yet he could not deny that he knew of its existence; and Pasco, the common attorney of the parties, knew all about it, and had it in his possession when the agreement of January 5 was made in his office. It cannot be said, therefore, that it was a secret agreement, withheld from the knowledge of Asa May, or that any fraud or bad faith was practiced upon him in relation to it. It was also a completed agreement, so far as it could be completed without the execution sale itself, which was contemplated as part of the means of carrying it out. The title was to be made good in that way if necessary, and it cannot be disputed that it was necessary. The weight of evidence also is, that the sale had been carried into effect by delivery of possession by Alvin May to Sloan. It is true that as to a portion of the place there is conflicting testimony on this point. Asa May, after the sale, worked a portion of it; though it is not disputed that Sloan was in possession of the residue. In this connection the conduct of the parties, in relation to the mules and other personal property included in the agreement of December 13, cannot be overlooked. Although bid off by Asa May, by whose mortgage it was covered, yet Sloan's claim to it was respected, and Asa May soon afterwards actually purchased the mules from Sloan.

If we look to the surrounding circumstances existing at the time, it will be difficult to resist the conclusion that the sale by Alvin May to Sloan, of the property in question, was one of the trades to be respected by Asa May. At the time of the sheriff's sale he had already received some $10,000 from Alvin May on the principal and interest of the purchase money for the place he had sold him, and there was about $14,000 still due. By the sheriff's sale and the agreement of January 5, 1874, he not only got back the original Asa May place, which was all the property he had ever parted with, but the Picolata place adjoining, containing over 650 acres, which is stated in the bill and is not denied to be a valuable tract of land. It is true that he agreed to give Alvin May an additional $3,000; but it must be recollected that he also got a considerable personal property, the full amount of which does not appear, and a release of dower from Alvin's wife. This was Asa May's situation, and the result of the agreement as it affected him, if construed as we have suggested.

Now, what were the circumstances of Sloan's case? His debt was between $50,000 and $60,000. Besides the lands covered by Asa May's mortgage, he had a mortgage on the McCain place of eleven hundred acres; on the Arendell place of a thousand acres; on the Elbow tract containing 660 acres; and on the S. F. May place containing 150 acres. He also had a lien on the crop. The McCain place failed in the matter of the title; and in the agreement of January 5, 1874, he agreed to give up to Alvin May all claim on the Arendell tract, to release him from all personal obligation, and to allow $21,000 (its full value) for the Alvin May place; leaving still due to him between $30,000 and $40,000, with only the Elbow tract and S. F. May place as security. Now, why should he have given up the Arendell tract, and all personal claim against Alvin May? And why should this be stipulated for in an agreement between him and Alvin May and Asa May? an agreement which is entitled "Memorandum of propositions to Alvin May by Asa May and A. M. Sloan, relative to settlement of indebtedness." What did he get? What came to him in the transaction? Nothing; absolutely nothing, unless the clause in question, at the end of the paper, is to be construed as embracing the agreement of December 13, by which he was to have the Alvin May place at $21,000, on account of his claim.

In the light of all these circumstances, it is hard to resist the conclusion that the word "trade" in the agreement of January 5, 1874, was used by the parties in its broadest signification, so as to include any bargain or sale. As such a meaning of the term is admissible, we think that the circumstances and acts of the parties show that it must have been intended. This being conceded, it plainly became the duty of Asa May, after having purchased the property, to convey the land in question to the appellee.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Strong.

[No. 78.]

Argued Nov. 20, 21, 1879. Decided Dec. 8, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. W. Julian, Richard T. Merrick, M. F. Morris and W. W. Morrow, for plaintiff in error.

(No counsel appeared for defendant in error.)

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of California.

The original suit was begun by a petition of the plaintiff in error in the proper court of the State, setting forth several reasons why the decision of the Department of the Interior against his claim as a preemptor, and in favor of Frisbie and others, to a certain quarter-section of land, was erroneous, and praying a decree of the court declaring him to be its true owner and his right to the legal title paramount. The case was heard in the inferior state court on a demurrer to this petition, which was sustained, and the judgment there rendered against plaintiff was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

The two grounds, principally, if not exclusively relied on by the counsel of plaintiff in this court, who so faithfully and earnestly presented his case, are: 1. That the Land Department mistook the law of the case and thereby deprived plaintiff of a vested right in the land. 2. That their decision was obtained by fraud.

The petition of the plaintiff, however, is so badly drawn and has so many defects that, sitting here to revise the judgment of two courts of the State of California, we are not able to discover in the petition that the questions argued here are so presented as to enable the court to decide them.

There are also objections besides this, fatal to the complaint and the relief asked under it.

One of them is that the principal relief sought, that without which any other would be imperfect, is, that defendants may be declared to hold the land in trust for plaintiff, and compelled to convey the same accordingly. This, undoubtedly, means the legal title to the land, for the plaintiff alleges himself to have been in actual possession when he brought the suit and that he had been so for a great many years before. But the bill does not show that defendants, or either of them, ever had the legal title. On the contrary, it is a necessary conclusion from the allegations of the bill that the legal title is in the United States. After referring to the decision of the Secretary of the Interior against his claim, the petition says that, "In pursuance of this decision, an order was issued authorizing the defendants and other purchasers of the Valjejo title to enter the lands claimed by them; and the said defendants have entered and will be enabled to receive a patent for the said quarter-section." It plainly appears from this: first, that defendants had not the legal title; second, that it was in the United States; and third, that the matter was still in fieri, and under the control of the land officers.

Nothing in the record of the case before us gives evidence that any further steps in that department have been taken in the case.

We have repeatedly held that the courts will not interfere with the officers of the Government, while in the discharge of their duties in disposing of the public lands, either by injunction or mandamus. Litchfield v. Register, 9 Wall., 575 [76 U. S., XIX., 681]; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347 [74 U. S., XIX., 62]; Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall., 298 [76 U. S., XIX., 579].

And we think it would be quite as objectionable to permit a state court, while such a question was under the consideration and within the control of the Executive Departments, to take jurisdiction of the case by reason of their control of the parties concerned, and render decrees in advance of the action of the Government, which would render its patent a nullity when issued.

After the United States has parted with its title and the individual has become vested with it, the equities on which he holds it may be enforced, but not before. Johnson v. Townsley, 13 Wall., 72 [80 U. S., XX., 485]; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330 [XXIII., 424].

We did not deny the right of the courts to deal with the possession of the land, prior to the issue of the patent, or to enforce contracts between the parties concerning the land. But it is impossible thus to transfer a title which is yet in the United States.

If, however, we could suppose that defendants had obtained the patent which the Secretary has decided that they are entitled to, that patent and the order on which it issued has in its favor all the presumptions which such an instrument necessarily carries, to which is to be added in this case the plaintiff's allegation that it was founded on a decision made after full contest and repeated hearings, by appeal and otherwise, by the officers to whom the law has specially confided the adjudication of that class of cases.

The rule which governs the courts in the effort to correct any error in such decision has been so repeatedly stated here as to leave no room for doubt or misconstruction.

That principle is that "The decisions of the officers of the Land Department, made within the scope of their authority, on questions of this kind, are in general conclusive everywhere, except when considered by way of appeal within that department; and that, as to the facts on which their decision is based, in the absence of fraud or mistake, that decision is conclusive even in courts of justice, when the title afterwards comes in question. But that in this class of cases, as in all others, there exists in the courts of equity the jurisdiction to correct mistakes, to relieve against frauds and impositions, and in cases where it is clear that these officers have, by a mistake of the law, given to one man the land which, on the undisputed facts, belonged to another, to give appropriate relief." Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S., 530, 535 [XXIV., 848, 850]; Shepley v. Cowan [supra]; Johnson v. Townsley [supra].

As we have already said, the argument of counsel is that the bill which was demurred to makes a case of mistake and of fraud and imposition within the meaning of these decisions.

1. Let us inquire first into the alleged mistake of law by the Land Department.

The language of this court in Moore v. Robbins, cited above, is that equity will interfere "When it is clear that these officers have, by a mistake of the law, given to one man the land which, on the undisputed facts, belonged to another."

The meaning of this, and the sound principle, is, that where it is a mixed question of law and of fact, and when the court cannot so separate them as to see clearly where the mistake of law is, the decision of the tribunal to which the law has confided the matter is conclusive.

But if it can be made entirely plain to a court of equity that on facts about which there is no dispute, or no reasonable doubt, those officers have, by a mistake of the law, deprived a man of his right, it will give relief.

Looking to the complaint in this case, no such clear statement of a mistake of law is to be found. The counsel in his argument says that the Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. at L., 808, under which defendants as vendees of Vallejo entered the land, only protected such vendees to the extent of their actual possession, and that the Secretary of the Interior decided otherwise to the prejudice of plaintiff. But no such allegation is made in the complaint.

That part of the complaint which relates to this subject is, after detailing his efforts before the register and receiver, as follows:

"But the said register and receiver refused to receive said money and issue a certificate of purchase for said land, as they had previously refused to award the same to him, and had returned the proofs with their said opinion to the General Land-Office at Washington.

The plaintiff's claim, among others, was thus rejected. But the Commissioner of the General Land-Office took a different view of the law, and in certain cases, adjudicated by him, declared that the said lands were subject to preemption under the general laws, and sustained the rights of preemption settlers.

An appeal was taken in one case to the Secretary of the Interior, who, upon the opinion of Mr. Attorney-General Speed, reversed the decision of the commissioner, and declared that the Act of March 3, 1863, above cited, has the effect to deprive the preemption settler of all rights under the general laws of the land. In pursuance of this decision an order was issued authorizing the said defendants and other purchasers of the Vallejo title to enter the lands claimed by them; and the said defendants have entered and will be enabled to receive a patent for the said quarter section, although the plaintiff first reduced it to possession, and has resided continuously upon and been in the occupation of it for the last fourteen years, and justly claimed by the plaintiff under the laws of the United States."

No copy of the opinion of the Attorney-General or of the Secretary of the Interior is given, nor is any other statement than this of what principle of law was then decided to be found. That the decision had any reference whatever to the nature, character or extent of the possession of the claimants under Vallejo, is a very forced inference from facts not found in the record, for there is no allegation in the bill, whatever, of the proofs of defendants, or what they did or did not prove in regard to possession, except that they had not resided on the land.

To reverse the decision of the Land Department, declare its action to be a violation of the law, and to reverse also the judgments of the two courts of California on that ground demands some stronger evidence than such a decision was made by these officers than is to be found in this petition.

So, also, as regards the allegations of fraud and imposition.

It is alleged in the vaguest terms that the Act of Congress for the benefit of Vallejo and his vendees was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of defendants, but as no attempt is made to invalidate this law, and the court is not asked to disregard it, nothing more need be said of this charge.

The next is, that, before the passage of that bill the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at the instigation of defendant, fraudulently and unjustly ordered that the surveys of this land should be withheld by the Surveyor-General. Unless the mere use of the word "fraudulent" makes his order a fraud, it is impossible to see any wrong in withholding these surveys while Congress was considering how far and in what manner it would relieve Vallejo and his grantees from the effect of a very hard, if technically legal, judgment in favor of the government.

It is also alleged that "Defendants will, on receiving the patent, be at liberty to sell said land to innocent purchasers, and thus wholly defeat the just claim and right of plaintiff, who will thus be fraudulently deprived of the land which he has settled and improved under the guarantee of the laws of the land, and which is evidently the intent and purpose of said defendants in prosecuting their unjust and fraudulent claim to the land aforesaid."

It is too obvious for comment that in all this the only use of the words "fraud" and "fraudulent" is to stigmatize acts which are adverse to the plaintiff's view of his own rights. But there is not a syllable which defines an act fraudulent in nature, or done or performed under the influence of corrupt motives, or by corrupt means, by the defendant or by any of the land officers who have had to deal with his claim. These officers are not even named. It is idle at this day to suppose that the expensive machinery of a court of equity is to be put in operation for the purpose of reviewing and reversing the judgment of the tribunals to whom that question is by law intrusted, on such loose, untraversable allegations of fraud in general. U. S. v. Throckmorton [ante, 93]; Kerr, Fraud, 365.

It is urged in argument that the facts stated by plaintiff in regard to his own settlement, possession and declaratory statement, show his right to receive a patent for the land, and that on demurrer these are to be taken as true.

We are hardly inclined to believe that if everything so stated is to be treated as absolute verity that it makes out his right. But it is sufficient to say that plaintiff also shows that all his proofs, together with those on the other side, which he has not set out in his petition, were submitted to and passed upon by the land officers, from the register and receiver up to the Secretary of the Interior, and they decided against the validity of his claim.

All this appears from his own petition; so that we return to the proposition, that as he has not shown such a mistake of law, or such element of fraud in that decision as will justify a court of equity in setting it aside, the judgment of the Supreme Court of California refusing that relief is without error, and it is, accordingly, affirmed.

Aistrop and Henry H. Dudley, and having been argued by the counsel for the complainant, and the counsel for the defendants, John C. Mulford, Peter Campbell, George Follansbee and Francis H. Morgan, upon consideration thereof, it is, this 4th day of March, 1876, adjudged, ordered and decreed as to the said defendants, John C. Mulford and Peter Campbell, that the bill be dismissed; as to the defendant, George Follansbee, that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from him the highest market value since the 16th day of February, 1875, of three sixty five bonds of the District of Columbia, of the par value of $5,150, with interest coupons all attached, less the sum of $2,000, and interest thereon from the 26th day of January, 1874, to such day of highest market value; as to the defendant, Francis H. Morgan, that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from him the highest market value at any time since the 8th day of December, 1874, of such bonds of the par value of $1,650, with interest coupons all attached, less the sum of $641.58, with interest thereon from the 17th day of January, 1874, to such day of highest value; and as to the defendant, The Middletown National Bank of Middletown, New York, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from it the highest market value of such bonds at any time since the 8th day of December, 1874, of the par value of $1,250, with interest coupons all attached, less the sum of $481.80, and interest thereon from the 26th day of January, 1874, to such day of highest value.

And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that when the respective amounts due the complainants from the three last named defendants shall have been ascertained by the court in Special Term, the complainants shall have execution as at law against them for such respective amounts, with interest thereon from such respective days of highest market value.

And it is further ordered that this case be remanded to the court in Special Term, for further proceedings in conformity to this decree.

Messrs. William A. Cook and J. H. Bradley, for appellant.

Messrs. A. S. Worthington and E. L. Stanton, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion to dismiss this appeal is granted. The decree appealed from is not a final decree. The amount due from the appellant has not been ascertained.

Dismissed.

Argued Nov. 25, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Thomas N. McCarter and Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Barker Gummere and Edward T. Green, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a controversy touching the validity of certain municipal bonds issued by the plaintiffs in error which came into the hands of the defendant in error, and which the latter is seeking to enforce. The judgment of the court below was in favor of the Cooper Union. There is no conflict as to the facts. The questions to be considered all involve the effect of the facts as matter of law upon the rights of the parties.

The Montclair Railway Company was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature of New Jersey, approved March 18, 1867. The 6th section authorized the company to construct a railway from the Village of Montclair, in the Township of Bloomfield, to the Hudson River, at one or the other of certain designated points; and also to attach a branch to the main stem in the township named, and "To extend the said railway into the Townships of Caldwell and Wayne."

By another Act, approved April 9, 1868, section 1, it was provided that on the application in writing of twelve freeholders, residents of any township, town or city "Along the routes of the Montclair Railway Company or at the termini thereof," except the Township of Bloomfield, it should be the duty of the Circuit Judge of the county, within ten days after receiving the application, to appoint three freeholders, residents of such township, town or city, to be commissioners to carry into effect the provisions of the Act. They were to hold their offices five years and until their successors were appointed. The 3d and 4th sections of the Act are also necessary to be considered. Their provisions may be thus summarized and sufficiently presented for the purposes of this opinion. The commissioners were authorized to borrow money, not exceeding in amount twenty per cent of the valuation of the real estate in such township, town or city, according to the assessment rolls, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent per annum, to be paid half yearly, and to execute under their hands and seals bonds therefor, in such sums and payable at such times and places as they might deem proper; but no bonds were to be issued or debt contracted until the written consent of those owning at least two thirds of the real estate of the township, town or city on the assessment roll, according to the valuation on such roll, should have been obtained. The consent was to state the amount of money to be borrowed, and that the fund was to be invested in the bonds of the railway company. The signatures of those consenting were to be proved by the oath of one or more of the commissioners. The valuation of the property owned and represented was to be proved by the affidavit of the assessor. The consent and affidavit were to be filed in the office of the clerk of the proper locality. The commissioners were authorized to sell the bonds as they might think proper, but not for less than par. The proceeds were to be invested in the bonds of the railway company issued for the purpose of building and equipping the road, and not otherwise. The commissioners were to subscribe for the purchase of bonds to the amount they were authorized to borrow. By the 1st section of the supplementary Act of March 16, 1869, the railway company was authorized to extend the road from any point upon it to any point in the Township of West Milford. By the 4th section it was provided that the operation of the last named prior Act should not be extended to any township, town or city through or to which the road was not authorized to be extended before the passage of this Act. On the 6th of July, 1868, the proper previous steps having been taken, the Judge appointed the commissioners for Pompton Township. On the 4th of May, 1870, the commissioners issued bonds to the amount of $100,000, all of which subsequently came into the hands of the defendant in error. When the bonds were disposed of by the commissioners, no route of the road west of Montclair had been surveyed, but it was distinctly proved on the trial that the southeast line of Pompton was then the contemplated and intended southwestern terminus. On the 6th of April, 1870, a survey was filed which commenced at that village and extended to a point between Mead's Basin and the Pequannock River, in the southern part of Wayne Township. On the following 9th of June another survey was filed, which began at the terminus last mentioned, crossed the line between Wayne and Pequannock Townships; then proceeded to the line between Pequannock and Pompton, the latter being a parallelogram, and after traversing Pompton diagonally about two thirds of its length, crossed its west line into West Milford, and thence proceeded in that township to the boundary line between New Jersey and New York. This line was finally adopted, and the road was built accordingly. Thus, though Pompton did not get a terminus on its southeast line, as originally contemplated, it got for the same consideration the length of the road within its territory and the extension beyond its limits. The change was obviously beneficial to the Township. No ground is disclosed for the slightest imputation of bad faith against anyone, touching either the road or the sale of the bonds. It does not appear that the township authorities made the slightest complaint. Doubtless, all believed that what was done was best for all concerned.

According to the record, the defendant in error is clearly a bona fide holder of the bonds. Full value was paid for them, and they were taken underdue without knowledge or notice of any infirmity, if there were any, belonging to them. The learned Judge who tried the case below so instructed the jury, and properly withdrew the subject from their consideration.

It is objected to the validity of the bonds:

1. That they could not be competently issued until the route of the road had been surveyed and the termini thus fixed.

2. That no terminus at Pompton was ever so fixed or designated as to be effectual.

3. That, when the route of the road was changed and fixed, pursuant to the Act amending the charter of the company, the necessary consideration for the bonds became in a vital part impossible or failed, and that the bonds were thereupon void.

These several points may well be grouped and considered together.

The Act under which the bonds were issued must be regarded in the light of the circumstances. At the outset it is material to note that the power of the commissioners was hedged about by checks, limitations and safeguards, with the most careful elaboration. Yet it is nowhere said or intimated when or under what circumstances the bonds should be sold. In these respects, there was no restriction. The discretion of those who were empowered and directed to make the sale was left unfettered. The bonds were to be issued to aid the company to complete the road. Such is the language of the Act. Without such help the road might not be begun, or, if begun, might not be finished. After the work was done, assistance would not be needed. Fraud and abandonment of the enterprise were possible, as well after the survey was definitely made as before. Such results touching a work in the hands of persons of known good character were not to be anticipated and could hardly occur. The commissioners being constituted the sole judges as to the points mentioned with reference to parting with the bonds, their decision was conclusive. There could be no appeal and no review. It was a matter with which a bona fide purchaser had nothing to do. The phrases "along the route" "or at the termini" have a meaning as plain and clear as that of any other terms the law-makers could have employed. It was expressly declared that the road might go "into" the Township of Wayne, which meant to any part of it, and it was intended that it should stop at the line between Wayne and Pompton. There the two territories came in contact. The boundary of one was the boundary of the other, and to stop at that line made Pompton one of the termini of the road. This brought the case within the category expressly defined by the statute, and justified the action of the commissioners. That the terminus was potential and contemplated was sufficient. It was not required to be fixed or unalterable. We hold, therefore, that the bonds were rightfully issued. That under the Act amending the charter, Pompton, instead of being a terminal Township, became thereafter a Township "along the route" of the road, cannot affect the previously vested rights of a bona fide transferee of the securities. It would be a singular result if a larger and better consideration than was contemplated when the bonds were issued should be held to destroy their validity. There was, in effect, an exchange of obligations between the company and the Township, but the motive and object of the latter was the benefit expected to accrue from the road.

There are several things which go strongly to sustain the construction and effect we have given to the Act of 1868.

The coupons for the half-yearly interest upon the township bonds, and those for the half-yearly interest upon the railroad bonds belonging to the Township, were paid to the respective holders to November 1, 1872, inclusive. Up to that time it does not appear that the validity of the township bonds was questioned by anyone. There seems to have been entire acquiescence on the part of all concerned, including the township authorities.

By the 4th section of the Act of 1869 the Legislature declared in effect that the authorized and not the actual routes were those intended by the bonding Act of 1868.

By the 1st section of the Act of 1874 the office of the Commissioners of Pompton Township was abolished, and their duties were devolved upon the township committee. One of those duties was to provide the necessary funds in the ways prescribed, and to pay the interest upon the bonds involved in this controversy.

In cases like this, legislative ratification is the equivalent of original authority, and what is clearly implied in a statute is as effectual as what is expressed. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp., sec. 46: U. S. v. Babbitt, 1 Black, 55 [66 U. S., XVII., 94]. Whether this statute was a ratification of the sale of the bonds as made, if such ratification were needed, is a point which the view we take of the case renders it unnecessary to consider. It was certainly a clear recognition of Pompton as one of the townships authorized to issue bonds in aid of the railroad company; a legislative construction entitled to great respect.

The bonds of the railroad company held by the commissioners are still in the hands of the Township. It does not appear that there has been any offer to return them.

In Scotland Co. v. Thomas, 94 U. S., 682 [XXIV., 219], the county was authorized to issue bonds in aid of the construction of a railroad authorized to be built by the Alexandria and Bloomfield Railroad Company, a Missouri corporation. Pursuant to law that company became consolidated with an Iowa corporation, bearing the name of the Iowa and Southern Railway Company, whereby an important elongation of the road originally authorized was secured. The combined corporations took the name of the Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska Railway Company. The bonds were issued to that company. This court held them to be valid. It was said, in effect, that this conclusion was the result of "a broad and general view" of the facts of the case.

In Callaway Co. v. Foster, 93 U. S., 567 [XXIII., 911], a statute authorized the stock of a railroad company to be subscribed for, and bonds to provide the means of paying for it to be issued and sold "By the county court of any county in which any part of said railroad may be." The stock was subscribed and the bonds were issued and sold before the route of the road was surveyed or located. In construing the phrase "may be," this court said: "May be what? This expression is incomplete, and is to be construed with reference to the subject-matter. If used in a statute where a road already built was the subject-matter, it would refer to the presence or existence there of the road. * * * But when used in reference to a railroad not yet built, not located or surveyed, and, indeed, not yet organized, it must have quite a different meaning." "Upon any reasonable construction it embraces Callaway, which was one of the possible sites, and a site ultimately occupied in fact." The bonds were sustained.

In Ray Co. v. Vansycle, 96 U. S., 675 [XXIV., 800], the facts were as follows:

In 1860, Ray County, in Missouri, under authority conferred by a statute, and the sanction of its legal voters, by its county court, subscribed for the stock of railroad company A, and agreed to issue its bonds in payment. Under an Act passed in 1864, and pursuant to a popular vote of the county, company A transferred all its rights, privileges, property and effects to company B. By an agreement between companies B and C and the county court, the subscription of the county for the stock of A was released and, in consideration of the release, the county court subscribed for the same amount of the stock of C, and issued its bonds in payment. By this arrangement the county secured increased railroad facilities, and it still held the certificates of stock. There had been no offer to return them. The county paid the interest on its bonds continuously for five years. It then repudiated. It was held by this court:

1. That B was entitled to the bonds of the county by reason of the first subscription.

2. That as against a bona fide holder it could not be objected that the qualified voters had not assented to the subscription to C.

3. That the tax payers were concluded by the act of the county court and by their failure to take action, if it could have availed them, to prevent the transfer from one company to the other.

In Schuyler Co. v. Thomas [ante, 88], Callaway Co. v. Foster, and Scotland Co. v. Thomas were cited and strongly approved.

The analogies of all these cases to the one in hand are too obvious to need comment.

If any error or wrong was committed in issuing these bonds, it was the act of the agents of the plaintiffs in error.

Where one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss, and one of them has contributed to produce it, the law throws the burden upon him and not upon the other party. Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk., 289; Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008].

The bonds in question recite on their face that they were issued "In pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of New Jersey, approved April 9, 1868, entitled 'An Act to Authorize Certain Townships, Towns and Cities to Issue Bonds and to Take the Bonds of the Montclair Railway Company.'"

In the case of Orleans v. Platt decided last Term and not yet reported [ante, 404], this court said: "The bonds in question have all the properties of commercial paper, and in the view of the law they belong to that category. Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall., 110 [69 U. S., XVII., 857]. This court has uniformly held, when the question has been presented, that where a corporation has lawful power to issue such securities and does so, the bona fide holder has a right to presume the power was properly exercised, and is not bound to look beyond the question of its existence. Where the bonds on their face recite the circumstances which bring them within the power, the corporation is estopped to deny the truth of the recital. Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 83 [68 U. S., XVII., 548]; San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S., 312 [XXIV., 816]; Moultrie Co. v. Bk., 92 U. S., 631 [XXIII., 631]; Moran v. Miami Co., 2 Black, 722 [67 U. S., XVII., 342]; Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 [62 U. S., XVI., 208]; Bk. v. Turquand, 6 El. & Bl., 327."

These rules are the settled law of this court, and they are decisive of the case in hand. The constitutional objection was not taken in the court below; but aside from this, we are of opinion that it is without validity. It would be supererogatory to discuss the minor points set forth in the assignment of errors to which we have not specifically adverted. They are all covered and concluded by what we have said.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Bradley.

Duty Act—Treaty—additional duty.

countries with which, at that time, the United States ordinarily carried on commercial intercourse by passing around that cape.

2. There is nothing in the Act of Congress which is in conflict with the Treaty with Persia.

[Nos. 97, 98, 99.]

Argued Dec. 10, 1879. Decided Dec. 15, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

These were three cases in which the jury in the court below found special verdicts, the same in all respects except as to amounts.

The material facts are as follows:

The plaintiffs imported into the Port of Philadelphia, in the year 1874, from Liverpool, England, a place west of the Cape of Good Hope, certain opium, the growth or product of Persia, in Asia, a country east of the Cape of Good Hope.

The opium was carried from Persia to England by way of the Isthmus of Suez and the Mediterranean Sea.

The defendant, as Collector of the Port of Philadelphia, declined to deliver the said opium to the plaintiffs without their first paying the additional duty of ten per cent imposed by section 2501 of the Revised Statutes, and section 8, Act, June 6, 1872.

The plaintiffs duly protested against the payment of the said duty of ten per cent, and duly appealed from the decision of the Collector, which appeal was duly referred to the Treasury Department of the United States, by which the decision of the Collector was affirmed.

The said Collector has collected from the plaintiffs, on certain opium imported by them in the manner above mentioned, the said additional duty of ten per cent, amounting to $2,447, to recover which the plaintiffs have brought suit, within the period prescribed by law.

The section of the Act of Congress under which these duties were levied, is as follows:

"That, on and after the first day of October next, there shall be collected and paid on all goods, wares and merchandise of the growth or produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, except wool, raw cotton and raw silk, as reeled from the cocoon, or not further advanced than tram, thrown, or organzine, when imported from places west of the Cape of Good Hope, a duty of ten per centum ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed on any such article when imported directly from the place or places of their growth or production."

The following is a copy of articles 3 and 4 of the Treaty between the United States of America and Persia, ratified by both parties, June 13, 1857, and proclamation made thereof, August 18, 1857, 11 Stat. at L., 709:

Article III. The citizens and subjects of the two contracting parties, travelers, merchants, manufacturers and others, who may reside in the territory of either country, shall be respected and efficiently protected by the authorities of the country and their agents, and treated in all respects as the subjects and citizens of the most favored Nation are treated.

They may reciprocally bring by land or by sea into either country, and export from it, all kinds of merchandise and products, and sell, exchange or buy, and transport them to all places in the territories of either of the high contracting parties. It being, however, understood that the merchants of either Nation who shall engage in the internal commerce of either country, shall be governed, in respect to such commerce, by the laws of the country in which such commerce is carried on, and in case either of the high contracting powers shall hereafter grant other privileges concerning such internal commerce to the citizens or subjects of other governments, the same shall be equally granted to the merchants of either Nation engaged in such internal commerce within the territory of the other.

Article IV. The merchandise imported or exported by the respective citizens or subjects of the two high contracting powers, shall not pay in either country, on their arrival or departure, other duties than those which are charged in either of the countries on the merchandise or products imported or exported by the merchants and subjects of the most favored Nation, and no exceptional tax, under any name or pretext whatever, shall be collected on them in either of the countries.

Messrs. R. J. C. Walker, Wm. Ernst and Henry Flanders, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases are substantially disposed of by Hadden v. Collector, 5 Wall., 107 [72 U. S., XVIII., 518] and Sturges v. Collector, 12 Wall., 19 [79 U. S., XX., 255]. Section 3 of the Act of June 6, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 232, is, in all material respects, like the statutes under consideration in those cases where we held that countries "beyond the Cape of Good Hope" and countries "east of the Cape of Good Hope" meant countries with which, at that time, the United States ordinarily carried on commercial intercourse by passing around the Cape of Good Hope. Although the Act of 1872 was passed after the Suez Canal was in operation, we see no indication of an intention by Congress to give a new meaning to the language employed and which had already received a judicial construction. The words used are words of description, and indicate to the popular mind the same countries now that they did before the course of trade was to some extent changed by cutting through the Isthmus of Suez. The object of Congress was to encourage a direct trade with these Eastern countries. For this purpose, in legal effect, a bounty was offered to those who imported the products of that region directly from the countries themselves, instead of from places west of the Cape.

We see nothing in the Act of Congress which is in conflict with the Treaty with Persia. 11 Stat. at L., 709. If the subjects of Persia export their products directly to the United States, they are required to pay no more duties here than the "merchants and subjects of the most favored Nation." It is only when their products are first exported to some place west of the Cape, and from there exported to the United States, that the additional duty is imposed. Under such circumstances, the importation into the United States is not, commercially speaking, from Persia, but from the last place of exportation.

The judgment in each of these cases is affirmed.

Submitted Dec. 5, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Andrew L. Robinson and Asa Iglehart, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles Denby and J. M. Shackelford, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error. The complaint or declaration makes the following case: Wood recovered judgments in the Vanderburg Circuit Court against Carpenter, upon sundry promissory notes and bills of exchange. The first judgment bore date on the 16th of May, 1860, and the last on the 22d of August in that year. In the aggregate, they amounted to the sum of $8,557.07. At the dates of the notes and bills, the defendant was the owner of real and personal estate of the value of $500,000. For the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff and others by depreciating the value of their claims against him, and of thereby inducing them to sell the claims to him for less than their face, the defendant, in the year 1858, entered into a fraudulent conspiracy with his brother, Alvin B. Carpenter, and others to the plaintiff unknown, to incumber his real estate and hide away the title so that the property should not be sold to pay his debts, but in the end inure to his benefit. In pursuance of this scheme, he confessed sundry fraudulent judgments for large sums, and afterwards made a fraudulent assignment of all his property to William H. Walker and William D. Allis, and thereafter procured the title to all his real and personal estate to be vested in his brother, Alvin, and others, who held the property in secret trust for the defendant. In this way the title was so concealed that the plaintiff was prevented from levying executions issued upon his judgments. On the 14th of January, 1863, the plaintiff, in order to compel the defendant to pay his judgments, caused him to be arrested by the sheriff, in Massachusetts, upon final process. The defendant was taken before a master in chancery, and afterwards, before the master, took the insolvent debtors' oath according to the law of that State, and was thereupon discharged. Upon that occasion he falsely deposed and swore that he was not possessed of pecuniary means to the extent of $20, and that he had, in good faith, assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors. From that time forward the defendant falsely pretended to the plaintiff and his other creditors that he was poor and wholly unable to pay his debts, or any part of them. Having thus put his property beyond the reach of process upon the plaintiff's judgments, and procured his discharge from custody in Massachusetts, and led the plaintiff to believe he had no property out of which the judgments could be collected, the defendant afterwards, on the first of January, 1864, in further pursuance of the conspiracy, pretended and represented that his son-in-law, one D. C. Keller, would purchase the judgments with his own means, and so procured the plaintiff, who acted upon the belief of the truth of the representations and of the perjured statement of the defendant, to assign the judgments to Keller for fifty per cent of their principal and interest, amounting to $5,104.52; whereas, in fact, the judgments were bought by Keller with money furnished by the defendant, and they were held in trust by Keller for the defendant until June 1, 1873, when Keller, at the instance of the defendant, caused satisfaction to be entered. Before and since the rendition of the judgments the defendant owned property worth exceeding $200,000. The title was held in secret trust for him by his brother Alvin and others, and was fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff until long after the assignment of the judgments. Within twelve months past the property was all reconveyed to the defendant, and he holds it by an indefeasible title. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the ownership of the property by the defendant, nor of the secret trust, nor of the falsity of his representations, as alleged, until during the year 1872.

See 11 OTTO.

The defendant filed an answer consisting of three paragraphs:

1. He denied all the allegations of the petition.

2. He alleged that the causes of action set forth in the petition did not accrue within six years.

3. He averred that he was not guilty of any of the grievances set forth in the complaint at any time within six years before the commencement of the action.

The plaintiff's reply to the second and third paragraphs averred as follows:

The defendant concealed the facts: that the judgments confessed in favor of Chapman and others were fraudulent; that Alvin C. Carpenter held the said property, real and personal, in trust for the defendant; that the defendant had committed perjury before the master in Massachusetts; that Keller had bought the judgments with the defendant's money, and for the defendant's use and benefit; that the defendant was, in fact, the owner of the property, and that it was held by his brother and others in secret trust for him; and that his representations as to his insolvency were false and fraudulent.

It was averred further, that the concealment was effected by the defendant by means of fraud, perjury and the other wicked devices set forth and described in the plaintiff's complaint herein; and that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the facts so concealed by the defendant until the year 1872, and a few weeks only before the commencement of this suit.

The defendant demurred to the last two paragraphs of the reply. The demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff not asking leave to amend, the court gave judgment against him, and he thereupon sued out this writ of error.

The only question presented for our consideration is, whether the demurrer was properly sustained. The Statute of Limitations relied upon by the defendant declares:

"The following actions shall be commenced within six years after the cause of action has accrued, and not afterwards." 2 R. S. of 1876, p. 121. " * * * If any person liable to an action shall conceal the fact from the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced at any time within the period of limitation after the discovery of the cause of action." 2 R. S., 128, sec. 219. Both these provisions apply to actions for fraud. Musselman v. Kent, 33 Ind., 453; Cravens v. Duncan, 55 Ind., 347. The statute begins to run when the fraud is perpetrated. Wynne v. Cornelison, 52 Ind., 312.

In the case in hand, the specific wrong complained of, and the gravamen of the action, is the transfer of the judgments against Carpenter for the consideration of fifty cents on the dollar of principal and interest, when it is averred they were good for the entire amount, and which transfer, it is alleged, was brought about by the fraud and misrepresentations of the defendant and Keller. It is averred in the complaint that they were assigned on the first of January, 1864. The cause of action then accrued, and the Statute began to run. The averments of fraud, aside from this transaction, are only matters of inducement. The bar of the statute became complete on the first of January, 1870, unless the reply brings the case within section 219, which declares that, where there is concealment such actions may be brought within the time limited, after the discovery of the cause of action.

Statutes of limitation are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law. They are found and approved in all systems of enlightened jurisprudence. They promote repose by giving security and stability to human affairs. An important public policy lies at their foundation. They stimulate to activity and punish negligence. While time is constantly destroying the evidence of rights, they supply its place by a presumption which renders proof unnecessary. Mere delay, extending to the limit prescribed, is itself a conclusive bar. The bane and antidote go together.

The provision in the Statute of which the plaintiff seeks to avail himself was originally established in equity, and has since been made applicable in trials at law. There is no trace of it in the English Statute of Limitations of the 21st of James I., which was adopted in most of the American Colonies before the Revolution, and has since been the foundation of nearly all of the like legislation in this country.

Having been imported from equity, the adjudications of equitable and legal tribunals upon the subject are alike entitled to consideration.

Upon looking carefully into the reply, we find it sets forth that the concealment touching the cause of action was effected by the defendant by means of the several frauds and falsehoods averred more at length in the complaint. The former is only a brief epitome of the latter. There is the same generality of statement and denunciation, and the same absence of specific details in both. No point in the complaint is omitted in the reply, but no new light is thrown in which tends to show the relation of cause and effect, or, in other words, that the protracted concealment which is admitted necessarily followed from the facts and circumstances which are said to have produced it.

It will be observed, also, that there is no averment that during the long period over which the transactions referred to extended, the plaintiff ever made or caused to be made the slightest inquiry in relation to either of them. The judgments confessed were of record, and he knew it. It could not have been difficult to ascertain, if the facts were so, that they were shams. The conveyances to Alvin and Keller were also on record in the proper offices. If they were in trust for the defendant, as alleged, proper diligence could not have failed to find a clew in every case that would have led to evidence, not to be resisted. With the strongest motives to action, the plaintiff was supine. If underlying frauds existed, as he alleges, he did nothing to unearth them. It was his duty to make the effort. It should be borne in mind that when the judgments were assigned to Keller the country was in the throes of the civil war. Lee had not surrendered. Gold and silver, in the currency of the time, were at a large premium. All real property was largely depreciated. The future was uncertain. A transaction which then seemed wise and fortunate, a year later might be deemed greatly otherwise. It is hard to avoid the conviction that the plaintiff's conduct marks the difference between forethought in one condition of things and afterthought in another.

The discovery of the cause of action, if such it may be termed, is thus set forth: "And the plaintiff further avers that he had no knowledge of the facts so concealed by the defendant until the year A. D. 1872, and a few weeks only before the bringing of this suit." There is nothing further upon the subject.

In this class of cases the plaintiff is held to stringent rules of pleading and evidence, "And especially must there be distinct averments as to the time when the fraud, mistake, concealment or misrepresentation was discovered, and what the discovery is, so that the court may clearly see whether, by ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been before made." Stearns v. Page, 7 How., 819, 829. "This is necessary to enable the defendant to meet the fraud and the time of its discovery." Moore v. Greene, 19 How., 69, 72 [60 U. S., XV., 533, 534]. In Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How., 190 [64 U. S., XVI., 484], and in Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall., 95 [69 U. S., XVII., 838], the same rules were again laid down.

A general allegation of ignorance at one time and of knowledge at another are of no effect. If the plaintiff made any particular discovery, it should be stated when it was made, what it was, how it was made, and why it was not made sooner. Carr v. Hilton, 1 Curt. (C. C.), 390.

The fraud, intended by the section, which shall arrest the running of the Statute must be one that is secret and concealed, and not one that is patent or known. Martin v. Smith, 1 Dill., 85, and the authorities cited.

"Whatever is notice enough to excite attention and put the party on his guard and call for inquiry, is notice of everything to which such inquiry might have led. When a person has sufficient information to lead him to a fact, he shall be deemed conversant of it." Kennedy v. Green, 3 Myl. & K., 722. "The presumption is that if the party affected by any fraudulent transaction or management might, with ordinary care and attention, have seasonably detected it, he seasonably had actual knowledge of it." Ang. Lim., sec. 187 and n.

A party seeking to avoid the bar of the Statute on account of fraud must aver and show that he used due diligence to detect it, and if he had the means of discovery in his power, he will be held to have known it. Buckner v. Calcoete, 38 Miss., 432. See, also, Nudd v. Hamilton, 8 Allen, 130.

In Cole v. McGlathery, 9 Me., 131, the plaintiff had given the defendant money to pay certain debts. The defendant falsely affirmed he had paid them and fraudulently kept the money. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover, because he had at all times the means of discovering the truth by making inquiry of those who should have received the money.

In McKown v. Whitmore, 31 Me., 448, the plaintiff handed the defendant money to be deposited for the plaintiff in bank. The defendant told the plaintiff that he had made the deposit. It was held that, if the statement were false and fraudulent, the plaintiff could not recover, because he might at all times have inquired at the bank. In Rouse v. Southard, 39 Me., 404, the defendant was sued as part owner of a vessel, for repairs, and pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The plaintiff offered evidence that the defendant, when called on for payment, had denied that he was such owner. It was held that, as the ownership might have been ascertained from other sources, the denial was not such a fraudulent concealment as would take the case out of the bar of the Statute.

Numerous other cases to the same effect might be cited. They all show the light in which courts regard the qualification here in question, of the limitation which would otherwise apply.

The subject has been several times considered in the State of Indiana, whence this case came. In Boyd v. Boyd, 27 Ind., 429, it was ruled that the concealment under section 219, which will avoid the Statute, must go beyond mere silence. It must be something done to prevent discovery.

Stanley v. Stanton, 36 Ind., 445, is instructive with reference to the case before us. In 1870, A sued B. The complaint alleged that in 1848 B falsely represented himself to A to be the agent of C, to whom A was indebted on a promissory note, and that A paid the money to B as such agent; and that B promised to pay it over to C, which he had not done. B pleaded the Statute of Limitations. A replied that he paid the money to B on his claim that he was the agent of C; that B was not such agent, but concealed the fact from A, and promised A to pay the money to C, which he had not done; and that, by reason of the concealment, A did not discover the cause of action until the fall of the year 1869. It was held that, the concealment being all previous to the accruing of the cause of action, something more than the silence of B was necessary to prevent the running of the Statute, and that the action was barred. The concealment, it was said, must be the result of positive acts.

Wynne v. Cornelison [supra], was a case growing out of an alleged fraudulent conveyance. There, as here, there was a demurrer to a paragraph of the reply setting up concealment to countervail the defense of the Statute of Limitations. The allegations were not unlike those in the case before us. The judgment of the court below sustaining the demurrer was affirmed. The court said: "The Statute of Limitations is a statute of repose, and where its operation is sought to be avoided by the party liable to the action, the allegation and proof should bring the case clearly within the section. The allegation, that the defendants pretended and professed to the world that the transactions were bona fide transactions, is too general to amount to anything." A wide and careful survey of the authorities leads to these results:

The fraud and deceit which enable the offender to do the wrong may precede its perpetration. The length of time is not material, provided there is the relation of design and its consummation.

Concealment by mere silence is not enough. There must be some trick or contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry.

There must be reasonable diligence; and the means of knowledge are the same thing in effect as knowledge itself.

The circumstances of the discovery must be fully stated and proved, and the delay which has occurred must be shown to be consistent with the requisite diligence.

The reply is clearly bad. It contains some vigorous declamation, but is wanting in the averment of facts, which are indispensable to give it sufficiency as a pleading, for the purpose intended. The complaint to which it refers does not help it. Further remarks are unnecessary. The demurrer was properly sustained by the Circuit Court, and the judgment is affirmed.

Amendments after removal of cause—parol evidence.

1. Where a cause is removed from a state court to the U. S. Circuit Court, the latter court may allow such amendments to be made to the declaration as would be allowable by the state practice.

2. Where it was doubtful what the precise intent of the writer of a letter was, the question of intention is open to explanation, and parol evidence may be given of it.

[No. 101.]

Argued Dec. 10, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Charles E. Perkins, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Waldo Hubbard and A. P. Hyde, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Due removal of the suit before the court was made from the state court where it was commenced, into the circuit court, in which case it is no longer usual to file new pleadings, the Act of Congress providing that the practice, pleadings and forms and modes of proceeding in common law actions shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings and forms and modes of proceeding existing at the time, in like causes, in the courts of record of the State within which such circuit court is held, any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding. 17 Stat. at L., 197; R. S., sec. 914.

Sufficient appears, to show that the writ in the practice of the state courts contains the declaration, the command of the same to the sheriff being that he shall summon the defendant to appear and answer to the plaintiff in a certain plea, wherein is set forth the cause of action. Pursuant to that practice, the defendants in this case were summoned to appear in a plea of the case, the declaration containing two counts in assumpsit, the first being a count for goods sold and delivered, in the sum of $8,000, in two forms; the second being a count for work and labor done and performed, in the sum of $8,000, at the special instance and request of the defendants. Both counts are in the usual form, and the declaration concludes with the usual breach alleging non-payment, to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $10,000. Personal service was made; and the defendants having appeared and removed the cause into the circuit court, pleaded the general issue that they never did assume and promise in manner and form as the plaintiffs in their declaration have alleged, and tendered an issue to the country.

Special matter may be given in evidence under the general issue, according to the state practice, if previous notice be given by the defendant or defendants. Such notice was given by the defendants in this case, that they would give in evidence a written agreement, and the extension of the same for one year, which is fully set forth in the transcript. Profract of the instrument was made, and the defendants averred that the supposed promises were made, if ever, in consideration of work and labor done by the plaintiffs, in the pretended performance of the stipulations and agreements in said written contract contained, in respect to which the defendants allege that the plaintiffs did not keep and perform their said agreements and obligations, to the damage of the defendants in the sum of $20,000, and greatly exceeding the amount that would be due to the plaintiffs for the alleged labor and work they had performed.

What they claim is to set off so much of said damages as may be sufficient to extinguish their indebtedness to the plaintiffs, and to recoup and recover the excess of the $20,000 by a judgment in their favor.

In addition to the notice of such special matter, they also pleaded the Statute of Limitations, which, it seems, would not be admissible under the general issue and notice of special matter.

Leave was asked by the plaintiffs to file two additional special counts; and the court allowed them to file the one cailed in the transcript the second special count, subject to the objection of the defendants. Preliminary matters being closed, the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were for the plaintiffs in the sum of $7,978.84. Exceptions were filed by the defendants, and they sued out the present writ of error, and removed the cause into this court.

Two errors are assigned in this court as follows: (I) That the circuit court erred in allowing the new count to be filed. (II) That the court erred in admitting parol evidence of the plaintiffs' intention in writing the letter set forth and described in the transcript.

1. Amendments to the declaration under the state statute may be made by the plaintiff to correct any defect, mistake or informality in the same, not changing the form or ground of the action; and he may insert new counts in his declaration for the same cause of action as that alleged in the original counts. State Stats., Revision 1875, 426.

Authority is also given by the same statute to insert counts in any form of action which might have been originally inserted in the declaration. As quoted, the word "in" before "which," as found in the published statute, is left out, it being regarded as a misprint, or, if not, that the word "declaration" should follow it, which would give the provision the same meaning as if the word "in" was omitted. Nor is it necessary in this case to construe that provision, as it is clear that the question before the court is controlled by the preceding part of the section, which authorizes the plaintiff to insert new counts in the declaration for the same cause of action as that alleged in the original counts, as well as to correct any defect, mistake or informality in the declaration, not changing the form or ground of action.

Such amendments to the declaration are allowed in the state courts with great liberality, and it appears that the practice is carried to such an extent as to justify the remark of the court in a case cited for the plaintiffs, that the decisions of other States furnish but little guidance in expounding the meaning of their statute upon the subject. Nash v. Adams, 24 Conn., 33-38.

Their original Statute was passed at a very early period, and has been several times amended so as to enlarge and extend the power of the court, and the course of the decisions in the courts has been in the same direction, so as to further the beneficial purpose intended by it, which was to prevent the plaintiff from being put to a new action when by accident, mistake or inadvertence he had in his declaration failed to describe his claim with legal accuracy. In a great proportion of the cases, say the court, where amendments are allowed, the ground of action is in one sense changed, as where, for instance, the note in suit is incorrectly described; but amendments in such cases are very frequent where the court is satisfied that the error arose merely from mistake or inadvertence, and that the action was intended to be brought for the cause of action described in the amendment.

Other examples of like import are given in the opinion, and the court remarks that the phrase, "ground of action," is not used in the Statute in any technical or narrow sense, but was intended to refer rather to the real object of the plaintiff in bringing the suit than to the technical meaning of the words; and added, that such a construction had always been given to the phrase as would further that object. Bulkeley v. Andrews, 39 Conn., 523, 535.

Where power is given to the court to allow the amendment, the ruling of the court in that regard is a matter of discretion, and is not the subject of error. Stuart v. Corning, 32 Conn., 105, 108; Merriam v. Langdon, 10 Conn., 460, 472.

New counts setting forth more specifically the cause of action mentioned in the prior counts are not objectionable, as it cannot be held in such a case that the new counts describe a new cause of action. Baldwin v. Walker, 21 Conn., 168, 180; Hollister v. Hollister, 35 Conn., 241.

Whenever the declaration misdescribes a writing which constitutes the cause of action, the state courts will allow the plaintiff to amend and make the description accurate, and it is even held that in an action for a breach of covenant the plaintiff may add a new count setting forth a new and distinct incumbrance not previously mentioned in the declaration. Spencer v. Howe, 26 Conn., 200.

Cases appealed, it is held in that State, may be amended in the appellate courts; and the rule is well settled, that if the new counts are founded upon the same transaction as the old ones, they do not change the ground of action, within the meaning of the Act allowing amendments. Howland v. Couch, 43 Conn., 47-50.

Writs of summons or attachment in that State may be sued out in civil actions, and the defendant, as matter of argument, to show that the amendment was improperly allowed in this case, insists that its effect would be to discharge an attachment, as it would otherwise enlarge the lien which the attachment created. Two answers may be made to that suggestion in the case: (1) It is not shown that any of the property of the defendant was attached by the sheriff. (2) But if it was, the defendant will not be injured if the plaintiff sees fit to discharge his attachment.

Without more, these authorities are sufficient to show that the ruling of the circuit court in allowing the amendment was fully justified by the state decisions, and that it is correct.

2. Suppose that is so; still it is insisted by the defendants that the ruling of the court embraced in the second assignment of error was erroneous, and that the judgment for that cause must be reversed.

Articles of agreement were executed between the parties, to the effect that the defendants agreed to furnish for the plaintiffs cotton of a certain description, to keep the mill of the plaintiffs supplied for a certain time; the cotton to be manufactured by the plaintiffs into yarn, See 11 Otto.

two-threaded and of a certain described fineness, for thirty cents per pound, allowing sixteen per cent for waste. Cash payments the first day of each month were to be made by the defendants for manufacturing the yarn. Under that contract, as set forth at large in the transcript, the defendants delivered to the plaintiffs a large amount of cotton which was manufactured into yarn by the plaintiffs, and the yarn sent back and delivered to the defendants. Invoices of cotton purchased by the defendants were shipped to the plaintiffs, and when the same was manufactured into yarn by the plaintiffs, the yarn was sent back in bags, accompanied with invoices, to the defendants.

Accounts between the parties were rendered monthly and, when adjusted, the plaintiffs drew upon the defendants for the money due for manufacturing the yarn; and it appears that the drafts were uniformly paid until the last month of the contract. Payment of the last draft being refused, the plaintiffs brought assumpsit, and furnished the defendants with the bill of particulars exhibited in the record.

It appears that the defendants were tape manufacturers, and that they procured the yarn for the purpose of manufacturing tape; and they offered evidence tending to show that when the contract terminated they had on hand a large quantity of yarn not woven into tape, which they then tested, and for the first time discovered that it was of a coarser quality than that specified in the contract, and they alleged that if the whole was of that quality they had been seriously damaged.

Opposed to that, the plaintiffs offered evidence tending to disprove that charge, and to show that during the early part of the contract they, at the request of the defendants, manufactured a certain quantity of yarn for them of a lower grade, and that if the defendants had on hand any of a lower grade than the contract required, it must be part of that so manufactured by the plaintiffs at the request of the defendants, who accepted the same with full knowledge of its defects.

Four letters upon the subject were written by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and in the course of the trial the defendants gave those letters in evidence, together with one written to them by the plaintiffs in reply to the last of their series. In that letter the plaintiffs refer to the fact that the defendants claim a deduction of five cents per lb. on a specified quantity of the yarn, and state that they deduct that amount from the bill; adding, to the effect that it leaves a balance due of $2,680.24, etc.

For the purpose of rebutting any alleged admission contained in that letter, the plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants to produce the letters written by the plaintiffs in reply to the other letters to them given in evidence by the defendants. Said letters not having been produced, and it appearing that no copies had been kept and that the originals were mislaid or lost, parol evidence of their contents was admitted, which showed that the plaintiffs denied the assertion of the defendants that the yarn was of a lower grade than the contract required; and they called the surviving partner of the firm, who was the writer of the letter of the plaintiffs given in evidence, and he was asked by the counsel of the plaintiffs whether he intended in and by that letter to admit that the defendants' claim for damages was valid and that the yarn was below the contract grade, to which question the counsel of the defendants objected, and the court sustained the objection and excluded the testimony.

Failing in that, the plaintiffs then asked the witness whether his acceptance of the defendants' proposition, to deduct five cents per pound from the quantity of yarn named, was because he admitted that the yarn was not according to contract or to settle a controversy. Seasonable objection was made to the question by the defendants; but the court overruled the objection, and the witness answered that he accepted the proposition because he did not wish to be obliged to commence a lawsuit in the City of New York, and to incur the expenses of a trial in the courts of that State; and the defendants excepted to the ruling of the court, which is the foundation of the second assignment of error.

Evidence was then introduced by the plaintiffs showing that the defendants refused to pay the draft for the balance, making that deduction, and that they demanded the same reduction in price upon all the yarn previously manufactured and delivered. Certain exceptions were also taken to the charge of the court, but they are not embraced in the assignment of errors, and for that reason will not be re-examined.

Doubtless, the general rule is that it is the province of the court to construe written instruments; but it is equally well settled that where the effect of the instrument depends not merely on its construction and meaning, but upon collateral facts and extrinsic circumstances, the inferences of fact to be drawn from the paper must be left to the jury; or, in other words, where the effect of a written instrument, collaterally introduced in evidence, depends not merely on its construction and meaning, but also upon extrinsic facts and circumstances, the inferences to be drawn from it are inferences of fact and not of law, and of course are open to explanation. Etting v. Bk., 11 Wheat., 59; Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How., 146, 167 [62 U. S., XVI., 86, 93].

Other cases have been decided by this court, in which the same principle was applied and in which the doctrine is more fully explained and illustrated. Iasigi v. Brown, 17 How., 183, 196 [58 U. S., XV., 208].

Damages were claimed by the plaintiff in that case for a false representation respecting the pecuniary standing of a third person, whereby he, the plaintiff, had been induced to sell goods and had incurred loss. Letters were introduced and facts and circumstances connected with the letters proved; and this court held that it was for the jury to say, after examining the letters in connection with the facts and circumstances, whether they were calculated to inspire and did inspire a false confidence in the pecuniary responsibility of the party, to which the defendant knew he was not entitled.

Admissions by a party or by an authorized agent, either in court or out, may, in general, be given in evidence; but the circumstances surrounding the admission, the purposes for which it was made, and the conditions attached to it, may be fully shown. It may not infrequently happen that the party making the admission is not bound by it, and will not be estopped from denying its truth, and in view of the showing on both sides, allowing each to prove the whole truth, it will be for the jury to determine how the proof stands on the facts in controversy on which the admission is claimed to bear. Perry v. Waterproof Mfg. Co., 40 Conn., 313, 317.

What the defendants charged at the trial was, that the act of the plaintiffs in making the deduction proposed by the defendants was presumptive evidence that the plaintiffs admitted that they had not fulfilled their contract, which was expressly denied by the plaintiffs. On the other hand, the plaintiffs claimed that their act in making the deduction, taken in connection with the fact that they explicitly denied that they had broken their contract, was presumptive evidence, not that they admitted a breach of the contract, but that they made the deduction to avoid the expense of litigation. Neither of the presumptions was contrary to the language of the letter and, inasmuch as it was doubtful what the precise intent of the writer was, it is clear that the question of intention was open to explanation.

Parol evidence is admissible to contradict or vary the language of a valid written instrument, by which is meant that the language employed by the parties in making it, and no other, must be used in ascertaining its meaning. Argument to support that proposition is unnecessary, and yet it is universally admitted that it may be read in view of the subject-matter and the attendant circumstances, in order more perfectly to understand the meaning and intent of the parties. 1 Greenl. Ev., 12th ed., sec. 277.

Written instruments as used in the rule, says Taylor, include not only records, deeds, wills and other instruments required by statute or by the common law to be in writing, but every document which contains the terms of a contract between different parties. Text writers everywhere support that rule; but Taylor admits that the rule will not strictly apply to certain less formal documents, of which he gives several examples. 2 Taylor, Ev., 6th ed., 988.

Extrinsic evidence, it may be admitted, is not admissible in expounding written contracts to prove that other terms were agreed to, which are not expressed in the writing, or that the parties had other intentions than those to be inferred from it; still it is competent, said Shaw, Ch. J., to offer parol evidence to prove facts and circumstances respecting the relations of the parties, the nature, quality and condition of the property which constitutes the subject-matter respecting which it was made. Knight v. Worsted Co., 2 Cush., 271-283.

Where a party was about to publish an advertising chart, and the defendant promised in writing to pay him $50 for inserting his business card in two hundred copies of the chart, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held, in an action to recover the amount, that parol testimony was admissible for the interpretation of the contract and its application to the subject-matter; that at the time of the making of the agreement the plaintiff represented and promised that his chart should be composed of a certain material and be published in a certain manner. In disposing of the case, the court advert to the rule that the obligation of a written contract cannot be abridged or modified by parol evidence, but add that it is equally well settled that, for the purpose of applying the terms to the subject matter and removing or explaining any uncertainty or ambiguity which arises from such application, parol testimony is legitimately admissible, and for that purpose all the facts and circumstances of the transaction out of which the contract arose, including the situation and relation of the parties, may be shown. Authorities in great numbers are cited in support of the proposition; and the court further say, that the purpose of all such evidence is to ascertain in what sense the parties themselves used the ambiguous terms in the writing which sets forth their contract. Stoops v. Smith, 100 Mass., 63-66.

Apply the strictest rule to the question, and it is clear that the ruling of the circuit court is correct, as the answer of the witness, which was admitted, did not tend in any view to contradict anything stated in the letter; but the ruling of the court may also be sustained upon the ground that the letter was a mere offer of compromise, which could not prejudice the rights of the plaintiffs, especially as the record shows that the defendants subsequently refused to pay the draft drawn for the balance.

Offers of compromise to pay a sum of money by the way of compromise, as a general rule are not admissible against the party making the offer; but if admitted, it is clear that the offer is open to explanation, no matter whether it was by letter or by oral communication. Gerish v. Sweetser, 4 Pick., 374; Bridge Co. v. Granger, 4 Conn., 142, 148; Stranahan v. El. Haddam, 11 Conn., 507, 513.

By all or nearly all the cases, the rule as established is not that an admission made during or in consequence of an effort to compromise is inadmissible, but that an offer to do something by the way of compromise, as to pay sums of money, allow certain prices, deliver certain property, or make certain deductions, and the like, shall be excluded. These cannot be called admissions, as they were made to avoid controversy and to save the expenses of vexatious litigation.

Decided cases may be found, where it is said that the evidence is admissible unless the offer made was stated to be without prejudice; but the rule, in general, both in England and the United States, is, that the offer will be presumed to have been made without prejudice if it was plainly an offer of compromise. Lofts v. Hudson, 2 Man. & R., 481-484; Phil. Ev., 5th Am. ed., 427, n. 124; 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 192.

Suffice it to say, that such evidence having been admitted, it was clearly competent to give evidence to explain it, especially as the evidence given did not contradict any of the terms of the letter introduced by the defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

Charitable bequests—when invalid.

1. The English Statute of Charitable Uses having been repealed in Virginia, the courts of chancery of that State have no power to enforce charities where the objects are indefinite and uncertain, and charitable bequests stand on the same footing as other bequests.

2. A bequest to the Bishop of Wheeling, or his successor in said dignity, for the benefit of an unincorporated religious community, but not declared to be for religious uses, held invalid in that State.

[No. 89.]

Submitted Dec. 1, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia.

This action was brought in the court below by Richard V. Wheelan, Bishop of Wheeling, for the purposes stated in the opinion. The plaintiff having died pending the suit, it was revived in the name of the present plaintiff in error, his successor, the case to proceed with the same effect as if it had been commenced by said Kain, saving to the defendants the benefit of any question in regard to the transmissibility of the right of action to the plaintiff in error. The complainant's bill having been dismissed upon demurrer, the present appeal was taken.

Mr. John W. Johnston, for appellant.

Messrs. John A. Campbell and J. W. Caldwell, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The bequest which the plaintiff seeks to enforce by this bill was made in terms, "To Richard V. Wheelan, Bishop of Wheeling, Ohio, or his successor in said dignity," the testatrix adding "who is hereby constituted a trustee for the benefit of the community (previously described as a religious community attached to the Roman Catholic Church) of which I may die a member, the said property or money to be expended by the said trustee for the use and benefit of said community." It was an attempted testamentary disposition under the law of Virginia, and the matter now to be determined is, whether, by that law, it can be sustained. It may be conceded that, notwithstanding its uncertainty, a legacy given in the words of this will, if for a charity, would be held valid in England, and in most of the States of the Union. But we have now to inquire: What is the law of Virginia? The gift was made to "Richard V. Wheelan, Bishop of Wheeling, or to his successor in said dignity." It was, therefore, in effect, a gift to the office of the Bishop of Wheeling. Neither Bishop Wheelan, nor any Bishop succeeding him, was intended to derive any private advantage from it. Nothing was intended to vest in him but the trust, and that was required to be executed by whomsoever should fill the office of Bishop, only so long as he should fill it, and executed in his character of Bishop, not as an individual. The bequest was practically to a bishopric, and as a Bishop is not a corporation sole, it may be doubted whether, at the decease of the testatrix, there was any person capable of taking it. True it is that, generally, a trust will not be allowed to fail for want of a trustee: courts of equity will supply one. But if it could be conceded that Wheelan was, in his lifetime, capable of taking the bequest, and that Bishop Kain is capable of taking and holding after the death of his predecessor, a greater difficulty is found in the uncertainty of the beneficiaries for whose use the trust was created. In the words of the will, they are a religious community, of which the testatrix contemplated she might die a member. She died a member of a religious community attached to the Roman Catholic Church, known as the "Sisters of St. Joseph." That is an unincorporated association, and it is the association as such, and not the individual members who composed it when the testatrix died, which is declared to be the beneficiary. Nor is it the community attached to any local church which is designated, but a community attached to the Roman Catholic Church, wherever that Church may exist. Its members must be constantly changing, and it must always be uncertain who may be its members at any given time. No member can ever claim any individual benefit from the bequest, or assert that she is a cestui que trust; and the community having no legal existence, can never have a standing in court to call the trustees to account. This bequest is, therefore, plainly invalid, unless it can be supported as a charity. And it is far from evident that it is a gift for charitable uses. It looks more like private bounty. Charity is generally defined as a gift for a public use. Such is its legal meaning. Here the beneficial interest is given to a religious community, but not declared to be for religious uses. There is nothing in the will to show that aid to the poor, or aid to learning, or aid to religion or to any humane object was intended.

Conceding, however, that it is a charitable bequest, it is a Virginia gift, by a Virginia will, and in that State charities, in general, are not upheld to any greater extent than ordinary trusts are. This will be very manifest when the decisions of the courts of the State and of this court are reviewed. The subject was fully considered in Baptist Asso. v. Hart, 4 Wheat., 1, decided in 1819. There it appeared that the testator, a citizen of Virginia, had bequeathed certain military certificates to "The Baptist Association that for ordinary meets at Philadelphia annually," to be a perpetual fund for the education of youths of the Baptist denomination, who shall appear promising for the ministry, always giving a preference to the descendants of his father's family. Before the death of the testator, the Legislature of the State had repealed all English statutes, including, of course, the 43d Elizabeth, at that time generally regarded as the origin of the jurisdiction of equity over charities. This court held: that the Baptist Association, not having been incorporated at the testator's decease, could not take the trust as a society. 2. That the individuals composing it could not take. 3. That there were no persons who could take, if it were not a charity. 4. That the bequest could not be sustained as a charity. 5. That charitable bequests, where no legal interest is vested, and which are too vague to be claimed by those for whom the beneficial interest was intended, cannot, independently of the 43d Elizabeth, be sustained by a court of equity, either in the exercise of the ordinary jurisdiction of the court, or in enforcing the prerogative of the King as parens patriæ.

It is true, that the 5th Rule thus announced, as a general proposition, is now known to have been erroneously stated. Trusts for charitable uses are not dependent for their support upon the Statute of 43d Elizabeth. They had been sustained by the English Chancellors in virtue of their general equity powers before the enactment of that statute in numerous cases. Vidal v. Girard, 2 How., 127. And generally, in this country, it has been settled that courts of equity have an original and inherent jurisdiction over charities, though the English Statute is not in force, and independently of it. It is believed that such is the accepted doctrine in all the States of the Union, except Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina. But as we have said, the rule in Virginia is different, and it has been different ever since the case of Vidal v. Girard was decided.

In 1832, the case of Gallego v. Atty-Gen., 3 Leigh, 450, came before the Court of Appeals of that State. A testator had directed his executors to lay by $2,000, "to be distributed among needy poor and respectable widows;" and in case the Roman Catholic chapel should be continued at the time of his death, he directed the executors to pay $1,000 towards its support, and if the Roman Catholic congregation should come to a determination to build a chapel at Richmond, to pay $3,000 towards its accomplishment. He further devised a lot to four trustees, in trust, to permit all and every person belonging to the Roman Catholic Church as members thereof, or professing that religion and residing in Richmond, to build a church on the lot for the use of themselves, and of all others of their religion who might thereafter reside in Richmond. These were, undoubtedly, gifts to charitable uses. Upon an information and bill in chancery, to enforce the bequest and devise as charities, it was held that they were all uncertain as to the beneficiaries and, therefore, void. The court ruled that the English Statute of Charitable Uses having been repealed in Virginia, the courts of chancery of that State had no power to enforce charities where the objects are indefinite and uncertain, and that charitable bequests stand on the same footing as other bequests. The opinion of President Tucker is very elaborate, and fully sustains that view, approving the doctrine announced in Baptist Asso. v. Hart [supra].

This case was followed by Wheeler v. Smith, 9 How., 55, decided in 1850, after Vidal's Case. It re-asserted the doctrine of Gallego v. Atty-Gen., as the law of Virginia, and declared that the courts of chancery had no jurisdiction to uphold charities when the objects are indefinite and uncertain. Therefore, a bequest for a public purpose, namely: one given to trustees "For such purposes as they might consider to be most beneficial to the town and trade of Alexandria," was declared void.

In Seaburn v. Seaburn, 15 Gratt., 423, the case of Gallego v. Atty-Gen. was again recognized as the law of the State, except so far as it had been modified by the statutes, and it was ruled that the statute did not authorize a devise of land for the use of a religious congregation, but a conveyance only. A fortiori, that it did not authorize a bequest of money, to be expended in building a church at a specified place, or for the support of the pastor of such church.

So in a case not reported, a devise in these words: "I give to the Rev. W. J. Plummer, D. D., the residue of my estate, real and personal, in trust for the Board of Publication of the Presbyterian Church of the United States," was held to be void.

We do not overlook the fact that there are cases in which trusts for charitable uses have been sustained, though the description of the beneficiaries was uncertain, but in them all the decisions have been rested upon statutes of the State enacted to provide for special cases. In 1841-2, an Act was passed by which it was declared that every conveyance should be valid which should thereafter be made of land for the use or benefit of any religious congregation, as a place for public worship, or as a burial place, or a residence for a minister. This was amended in 1866-7 by adding "Or for the use or benefit of any religious society; or a residence for a Bishop, or other minister or clergyman, who, though not in special charge of a congregation, is yet an officer of such church or society, and employed under its authority and about its business." Civil Code of 1860, ch. 78, tit. 22, sec. 8; Civil Code of 1873, ch. 76, tit. 22, sec. 8. It will be observed these statutes validate only conveyances. They controlled the decision made in Brooke v. Shacklett, 13 Gratt., 301, decided in 1856, and Seaburn v. Seaburn, decided in 1859 [15 Gratt., 423]. The first of these cases—a deed conveying property in trust for the erection of a local Methodist church and the use of its members—was sustained. But Gallego's Case was expressly recognized as the law of the State, except so far as the statute had changed it.

On the 2d of April, 1839, the Legislature passed an Act declaring that devises and bequests for the establishment or endowment of unincorporated schools, academies or colleges should be valid, requiring, however, that reports of the devises or bequests should be made to the Legislature, and that in case it should fail to incorporate the schools, academies, etc., within a certain time, the gifts should fail. Acts of 1839, ch. 12, 11, 13.

So, also, at an early date, the State created a corporation to manage what was called the literary fund (Civil Code of 1860, chapters 78, 79, 80), and by the sections of chapter 80 it was enacted that every gift, grant, devise or bequest made since April 2, 1839, or which might be made thereafter, for literary purposes, or for the education of white persons within the State, other than for the use of a theological seminary, whether made to a body corporate or unincorporated, or to a natural person, should be as valid as if made to or for the benefit of a certain natural person, with some exceptions. Under these and similar statutes charitable gifts in favor of the literary fund or of schools, have been sustained, which, without the statutes, would have been held invalid. Such were Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh, 147, and 1 Rob., 402; Kinnaird v. Miller, 25 Gratt., 107, and Kelly v. Love, 20 Gratt., 124. But in all these cases the general law of the State is recognized to be as asserted in Gallego v. Atty-Gen. The bequest now under consideration, therefore, cannot be sustained as a charity.

See 11 OTTO.

Equally certain is it that the complainant cannot stand upon the consent decree made by the Circuit Court of Wythe County upon the issue of devisavit vel non, ordered to try whether the instrument purporting to be the will of the testatrix was her will. That issue, framed to try only the validity of the instrument, not the validity of the disposition made by it, was never tried. It was dismissed. No decree was made that the will was valid. To the agreement recited in the decree, the defendant was not a party, and the arrangement made by the counsel of the parties to the record did not bind her. Moreover, if she had been bound by it, it conferred no right upon the present complainant.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Statute of Limitations—demurrer—equity rule.

1. Where it appears on the face of plaintiff's bill, that the case which it makes is barred by the Statute of Limitations, the defect can be taken advantage of by demurrer.

2. Rule 29 of equity practice established by this court, applies only where leave to amend is asked before a demurrer is allowed.

3. Where it does not appear what amendment or amendments the appellant desired to make, nor that the court below, in anywise abused the discretion by refusing leave to amend, its judgment will not be set aside for such refusal.

[No. 409.]

Submitted Dec. 5, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana.

The case is stated in the opinion, and in the case there referred to.

Messrs. Andrew L. Robinson, Asa Iglehart and John E. Iglehart, for appellant.

Messrs. Charles Denby, D. B. Kumler, James M. Shackelford and R. D. Richardson, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The chief difference between this case and the case of the same Bank [Wood] v. Carpenter (at law, No. 628), in which our opinion has just been delivered [ante, 807] is, that this is a suit in equity, while that was an action at law. The bill sets out the same facts in the same way as the declaration, except that the latter alleges a fraudulent purchase by Keller of a judgment in favor of the Bank v. Willard Carpenter, while the bill alleges such a purchase of a judgment in favor of the Bank against Willard Carpenter and John Love. The defendants severally demurred. The demurrers were sustained, and the complainant asked leave to amend. Leave was refused and the bill was dismissed. The complainant thereupon appealed to this court.

Our reasoning in the case at law and the authorities there cited are applicable here. It appears on the face of the bill that the case which it makes is barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that the excuse of concealment of "the cause of action" by the defendants is not so alleged as to avail the complainant. This defect can be taken advantage of by demurrer. R. I. v. Mass., 15 Pet., 233; Marvrell v. Kennedy, 8 How., 210. The objection of laches is also fatally apparent. Brown v. Buena Vista Co., 95 U. S., 157 [XXIV., 422]; Duncan v. Lyon, 3 Johns. Ch., 351. The demurrers of the defendants were, therefore, rightly sustained, and the bill was properly dismissed.

It is insisted that the complainant was entitled of right to amend under the 29th of the Rules of equity practice established by this court, and that the learned Judge below erred in refusing the leave asked for. That Rule has no application, and does not affect the case. It applies only where leave is asked before a demurrer is allowed. Formerly, upon the allowance of a demurrer to a whole bill, the bill was out of court, and no subsequent proceeding could be taken in the cause. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 597; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 111. The rigor of this principle was subsequently relaxed. It is unnecessary to pursue the subject further, because the practice in such a state of things in the courts of the United States is regulated by the 35th Rule of equity practice, which is as follows:

"If, upon the hearing, any demurrer or plea shall be allowed, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs. But the court may, in its discretion, upon motion of the plaintiff, allow him to amend his bill upon such terms as it shall deem reasonable."

In this case it does not appear what amendment or amendments the appellant desired to make, nor that the court below in anywise abused the discretion with which it was clothed. Error must be shown affirmatively. It cannot be presumed.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

v.

JOHN H. PLATT, Assignee in Bankruptcy of SIMEON LELAND ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 731-744.)

Chattel mortgage by firm, filing of—when valid—assignee in bankruptcy—gift to wife—exchange of securities.

1. A chattel mortgage, executed by a firm upon firm property is void, under the New York Statute, as against creditors, subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, unless filed in the city or town where the individual members of the firm severally reside.

2. The actual residence, and not the residence as recited in the mortgage, controls.

3. Although chattel mortgages, by reason of the failure to file them in the proper place, are void as against judgment creditors, they are valid and effective as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee.

4. An assignee in bankruptcy takes property subject to such liens or incumbrances as would have affected it, had no adjudication in bankruptcy been made.

5. A gift from the husband to the wife, at a time when his right to make it cannot be disputed, is not assailable by the assignee in bankruptcy.

6. A mere exchange of securities is not forbidden by the letter or the spirit of the Bankrupt Law.

Argued Nov. 21, 24, 1879. Decided Dec. 22, 1879.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. H. E. Davies and Roscoe Conkling, for appellants.

Messrs. R. H. Dana, D. McMahon, John J. Thomson and Redfield & Hill, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York in a suit instituted by the assignee in bankruptcy of Simeon Leland, Warren Leland and Charles Leland, late partners under the name of Simeon Leland & Co. The latter were adjudged bankrupts upon the petition of one of their creditors filed on the 4th March, 1871.

The objects of the suit, so far as they concern the appellants, were:

1. To obtain the distribution of a fund arising from the sale of furniture and other personal property in use in the Metropolitan Hotel, in the City of New York, at the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy. The Lelands were lessees of that hotel under a written lease from A. T. Stewart, dated April 30, 1867, for a term of four years thereafter, at an annual rent of $79,186, payable in equal monthly installments. Upon the property thus sold Stewart held, as security for rent reserved by the lease, several chattel mortgages executed by the Lelands, the validity of which was questioned in this suit by the assignee in bankruptcy.

2. To have a decree declaring sundry judgments against the bankrupts within four months prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, as well as certain conveyances of real estate to Stewart, to be invalid under the provisions of the Bankrupt Law and as against the assignee.

The first question to which we will direct our attention relates to those several chattel mortgages.

The district and circuit courts concurred in opinion that they were not filed in the office designated by the statutes of New York and, upon that ground, were ineffectual to give the security and lien contemplated by the parties, and void as against the assignee.

By the laws of New York, it is provided that every mortgage or conveyance, intended to operate as a mortgage of goods and chattels, which should not be accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued

NOTE.—Chattel mortgage allowing possession and sale of goods, whether void or not. See note to Robinson v. Elliott, 89 U. S. XXII., 796.

Settlement or conveyance, for benefit of wife and child; when good or void as to creditors. See note to Sexton v. Wheaton, 42 U. S. (1 How.), 219.

change of possession of the things mortgaged, should be absolutely void, as against the creditors of the mortgagor, and as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, unless the mortgage, or a true copy thereof, shall be filed as directed in the Act. The statute requires such mortgages to be filed in the town or city where the mortgagor, "If a resident of that State, shall reside at the time of the execution thereof; and if not a resident, then in the city or town where the property so mortgaged shall be at the time of the execution of such instrument." In the City of New York, the mortgage is directed to be filed in the office of the register of said city; in other cities of the State, and in the several towns thereof in which a county clerk's office is kept, in such office; and, in each of the other towns of the State, in the office of the town clerk thereof. Registers and clerks are required to file such instruments, presented to them for that purpose, and indorse thereon the time of receiving the same, and keep them deposited in their offices for the inspection of the persons interested.

It is further provided that every mortgage filed in pursuance of the statute should cease to be valid against the creditors of the mortgagor, or against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith, after the expiration of one year from the filing thereof, unless within thirty days next preceding the expiration of each and every term of one year after the filing of the mortgage, a true copy thereof, together with a statement exhibiting the interest of the mortgagee in the property thereby claimed by him in virtue thereof, shall be again filed in the office of the clerk or register aforesaid of the town or city where the mortgagor shall then reside.

The bankrupts resided, with their families, in the County of Westchester, at the respective dates of the several chattel mortgages, but the business of the firm of Simeon Leland & Co., as lessees of the Metropolitan Hotel, was carried on in the City of New York, and all the property covered by the mortgages was in use in that hotel. The mortgages were filed in the office of the register of deeds for the City and County of New York, and were not filed in the towns where the lessees respectively resided with their families. The contention of learned counsel for the appellants is that the firm was the mortgagor, that its residence or domicile was in the City of New York, and that the manifest object of the statute was met by filing the several mortgages in the city where the firm carried on its business. The question thus presented is within a very narrow compass, and is not free from difficulty. Its solution depends upon the meaning of the word "reside" employed in the statute. It is to be regretted that we are not guided by some direct controlling adjudication in the courts of New York construing the statute under examination. But no such decision has been brought to our attention. With some hesitation we have reached the conclusion that a chattel mortgage, executed by a firm upon firm property, is void, under the New York statute, as against creditors, subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, unless filed in the city or town where the individual members of the firm severally reside. The statute, upon its face, furnishes persuasive evidence that its framers intended to make a sharp distinction between the place where the property might be at the time of the execution of the mortgage and the place of the mortgagor's residence. If he be a non-resident of the State of New York, the mortgage may be filed in the town or city where the property shall be at the time of the execution of the mortgage. If he be a resident, then his residence, not the actual situs of the property, governs. If these instruments be executed by several resident mortgagors, the statute would seem to require that the mortgage be filed in the towns or cities where the mortgagors at the time respectively reside.

Some stress is laid upon the fact that in each of the mortgages the mortgagors are described as "of the City of New York." If that is to be regarded as a representation by them that their fixed abode was in that city, it is obvious that the statute, designed for the protection of creditors, subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, cannot be thus defeated. Their rights depend not upon recitals or representations of the mortgagors as to their residence, but upon the fact of such residence. The actual residence controls the place of filing, otherwise the object of the statute would be frustrated by the mere act of the parties to the injury of those whose rights were intended to be protected. The recital of the residence in the mortgage "seems to be of no importance, and might for the matter of security be omitted altogether." Nelson, Ch. J., in Chandler v. Bunn, Hill. & D. Supp. (N. Y.), 167.

A good deal was said in oral argument as to the serious inconveniences which may result from any construction of the statute that requires chattel mortgages executed by a firm upon its property to be filed elsewhere than in the town or city where the property is used, and where the firm business is conducted. On the other hand, it is quite easy to suggest reasons of a cogent character why, in view of the manifest purpose of such legislation, the actual residence of the mortgagors should determine the place of filing. But these are considerations to be addressed more properly to the Legislature of New York, with whom rests the power to make such alterations as experience may suggest to be necessary. The statute expressly declares that a chattel mortgage not filed as required by its provisions, is void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith; and the Circuit Justice well said that the statute had "Imposed a rigid and unbending condition, to wit: a filing in the place where the mortgagors actually reside, as a preliminary to the validity of the mortgage. Whether this condition is wise or not, whether convenient or difficult of performance, is not for the courts to say. The statute exacts it, and the courts must see that it is performed." Upon this branch of the case, therefore, we concur in opinion with the circuit court.

It follows, necessarily, from what has been said, that the circuit court rightly adjudged that creditors who obtained judgments and sued out executions against the Lelands, previous to the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, had prior claims and liens upon the proceeds arising from the sale of the property covered by the chattel mortgages.

But the final decree in the circuit court is erroneous in directing the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgage property, after satisfying execution creditors, "To be paid to the assignee (in bankruptcy) for the purposes of the trust," and in charging that balance with the payment of the fees due counsel of the assignee.

In Yeatman v. Sav. Inst., 95 U. S., 764 [XXIV., 589], we held it to be an established rule that, "Except in cases of attachments against the property of the bankrupt within a prescribed time preceding the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, and except in cases where the disposition of property by the bankrupt is declared by law to be fraudulent and void, the assignee takes the title subject to all equities, liens or incumbrances, whether created by operation of law or by act of the bankrupt, which existed against the property in the hands of the bankrupt." Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk., 160; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, 630; Gibson v. Warden, 14 Wall., 244 [81 U. S., XX., 797]; Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall., 332 [85 U. S., XXI., 933]; Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S., 631 [XXIII., 993]; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S., 784 [XXIV., 136]. He takes the property in the same 'plight and condition' that the bankrupt held it. Winsor v. McLellan, 2 Story, 492."

The decree below is plainly in contravention of this rule. Although the chattel mortgages, by reason of the failure to file them in the proper place, were void as against judgment creditors, they were valid and effective as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee. Lane v. Lutz, 1 Keyes, 213; Wescott v. Gunn, 4 Duer, 107; Smith v. Acker, 23 Wend., 653. Suppose the mortgagors had not been adjudged bankrupts, and there had been no creditors, subsequent purchasers, or mortgagees in good faith to complain, as they alone might, of the failure to file the mortgages in the towns where the mortgagors respectively resided. It could not be doubted that Stewart, in that event, could have enforced a lien upon the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his claim for rent. The assignee took the property subject to such equities, liens or incumbrances as would have effected it, had no adjudication in bankruptcy been made. While the rights of creditors, whose executions preceded the bankruptcy were properly adjudged to be superior to any which passed to the assignee by operation of law, the balance of the fund, after satisfying those executions, belonged to the mortgagee, and not to the assignee for the purposes of his trust. The latter representing general creditors, cannot dispute such claim, since, had there been no adjudication, it could not have been disputed by the mortgagors. The assignee can assert, in behalf of the general creditors, no claim to the proceeds of the sale of that property which the bankrupts themselves could not have asserted in a contest exclusively between them and their mortgagee. As between the mortgagors and the mortgagees, the chattel mortgages were and are unimpeachable for fraud, or upon any other ground recognized in the Bankrupt Law.

It results that the court below erred in directing the fees of the assignee's counsel to be paid out of the residue of the fund in court remaining after the claims of execution creditors were satisfied. To that balance the appellants are entitled without diminution, to be applied in payment of the rent remaining unpaid, after crediting thereon $43,500, the agreed valuation of the real estate conveyed to Stewart, and to which we will presently refer in another connection. It was error to charge that balance with the payment of costs of fees of counsel, or any expense incurred by the assignee in bankruptcy in the administration of his trust.

We come now to the questions relating to the several conveyances of real estate made to Stewart in January and February, 1871; all of which were adjudged by the circuit court to be void as against the assignee in bankruptcy.

It is important to consider the circumstances under which those conveyances were made. Early in the month of January, 1871, commenced a series of interviews between the lessees and Stewart, brought about, perhaps, by the demand of the latter, through his agent, for the settlement of rent in arrear, which then amounted to about $50,000. The lessees desired a new lease at a reduced rent, while Stewart insisted upon the payment or a satisfactory arrangement of the rent due him. The former confessed present inability to discharge the indebtedness in any other mode than by conveyances of real estate, which they urged the latter to take at fair valuation and give a new lease at reduced rent. The lessees, in those interviews, expressed the utmost confidence that such an arrangement would relieve them from all immediate financial burdens, growing out of the hotel business, and enable them to meet promptly thereafter not only installments of rent, but all other engagements. Stewart, finally, agreed, for the accommodation of his lessees, to accept certain real estate, offered to him at the aggregate price of $43,500, in satisfaction of a like amount of back rent and, necessarily, in extinguishment, to that extent, of his mortgages upon the furniture and other property in the hotel building. He also signified his willingness to renew the lease to the same parties, at the reduced rent of $65,000. In pursuance of this arrangement the lessees, or some of them, caused conveyances to be made to Stewart of the real estate in question, consisting of a farm in Westchester County, and several houses and lots on Crosby, Jersey and Prince Streets, in New York City.

We are all of opinion that the conveyance, dated February 1, 1871, by Mrs. Warren Leland and her husband, of the farm in Westchester County, was unassailable by the assignee upon any ground whatever. That property was a gift from the husband to the wife, at a time when his right to make it cannot be disputed. As early as 1868 it was distinctly separated from the mass of his property, and the title made to her for her benefit. There is no proof that the conveyance was with any intention to defraud his then existing or future creditors. Of those whose interests the assignee in bankruptcy here represents, or assumes to represent, none, except perhaps one, were creditors of Warren Leland at the date of that conveyance. The bill alleges that the bankrupts, or some of them, intended to give Stewart a preference over other creditors, and to that end, it is charged, Warren Leland caused the conveyance to be made to his wife of the farm in question, "Owned by the said Warren Leland, but standing in the name of his wife." But clearly it was not owned by the husband after the execution of the absolute conveyance of 1868. Her rights, by reason of anything appearing in this record, could not be disturbed by the husband's creditors who became such after the execution of the conveyance to her. She chose, in order to aid her husband, or for other reasons satisfactory to herself, to unite with him in the conveyance to Stewart, thereby surrendering her estate for the benefit of the husband's creditor. Suppose she had not so done, and that the title had remained in her name up to the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, would it be contended, for a moment, that the assignee in bankruptcy, or that the creditors of the bankrupts, becoming such after the execution of the conveyance, could have subjected that farm to the debts of Warren Leland against the consent of his wife? This question must, in view of the evidence, receive a negative answer, which shows, conclusively, that the appropriation of the wife's property, by the joint act of herself and husband, to the payment of the debt of a particular creditor of the latter, is not a matter of which the assignee in bankruptcy, or any subsequent creditor of the husband, can rightfully complain. The decree of the circuit court declaring the conveyance of that farm to Stewart to be void, and requiring Mrs. Stewart to convey to the assignee in bankruptcy, was, for the reasons stated, clearly erroneous.

It remains to consider that part of the decree which declared the conveyances to Stewart of the houses and lots on Crosby, Jersey and Prince Streets, in New York City, to be void.

When these conveyances were agreed to be made, Stewart, as already stated, had an undisputed claim for rent in arrear amounting to over $50,000. Under the provisions of the mortgages, a default in the payment of rent having taken place, Stewart, at the time the exchange was determined upon, could have taken actual possession of the mortgaged property and sold it for the best price he could obtain in satisfaction of his claim for rent. His right to possession for such a purpose could not have been questioned by any creditor of the lessees who had not, by previous judgment and execution, acquired a lien upon the mortgage property. [Burdick v. McVanner], 2 Den., 170; [Stewart v. Slater], 6 Duer, 83; [Hall v. Sampson], 35 N. Y., 274; [Ackley v. Finch], 7 Cow., 290; [Langdon v. Buel], 9 Wend., 80; [Patchin v. Pierce], 12 Wend., 61. Instead of exercising that right—a course which would have seriously endangered, if it had not utterly destroyed, the business and credit of the lessees—Stewart, at their earnest solicitation, and for their accommodation, accepted real estate at a fair valuation in satisfaction of rent due and unpaid, thereby surrendering and extinguishing his lien to that extent upon the property described in the chattel mortgages. Of the $43,500 at which the real estate received by Stewart was valued, $19,500 represented the farm in Westchester County, which, we have shown, could not have been subjected to the claim of any creditors who became such after the conveyance to Mrs. Leland. In point of fact, therefore, only $24,000 in value of real estate, belonging to the bankrupts, was received by Stewart, while he surrendered his claim and lien for rent to the extent of $43,500. This was, in its substance and effect, a mere exchange of securities, not forbidden by the letter or the spirit of the Bankrupt Law. In Cook v. Tullis, [supra], we said that "A fair exchange of values may be made at any time, even if one of the parties to the transaction be insolvent. There is nothing in the Bankrupt Act, either in its language or object, which prevents an insolvent from dealing with his property, selling it or exchanging it for other property, at any time before proceedings in bankruptcy are taken by or against him, provided such dealing be conducted without any purpose to defraud or delay his creditors or give preference to anyone, and does not impair the value of his estate. An insolvent is not bound in the misfortune of his insolvency to abandon all dealing with his property; his creditors can only complain if he waste his estate or give preference in its disposition to one over another. His dealing will stand if it leave his estate in as good plight and condition as previously." Substantially, the same doctrine was announced in Clark v. Iselin, 21 Wall., 360 [88 U. S., XXII., 568]; Sawyer v. Turpen, 91 U. S., 114 [XXIII., 235].

These principles would seem to be decisive of the case under consideration. While there is some conflict in the testimony as to certain matters, we have a strong conviction, from all the facts and circumstances established by the proof, that the transaction by which the real estate, at a fair valuation, was substituted for the lien, of like amount, upon personal property, was without any fraudulent purpose. The substitution was not made to give a preference to Stewart. The belief and hope of the bankrupts, expressed in decided terms to him, were that the substitution or exchange would enable them to remove all financial obstacles of a serious nature. They induced him, by earnest representations, to share these hopes. He delayed or forebore to exercise the right, which, at the commencement of negotiations, he undoubtedly had, of taking the mortgaged property into his custody, and disposing of it in satisfaction of his claim for rent. That the arrangement in question did not substantially impair the value of the bankrupts' estate is abundantly clear. His lien, which was extinguished by the exchange, exceeded, in value, that portion of the real estate embraced in the conveyances to him, which the creditors of the bankrupts could have reached under their executions. Reference is made to the fact that the mortgaged property brought only $43,469.31, and that circumstance is relied upon to show that the exchange did impair the estate of the bankrupts. This argument proceeds upon the assumption either that when the exchange was determined upon, he had not a lien upon the mortgaged property, as between him and the mortgagors, or that if he had one, he would not have enforced it by taking the property into his custody, upon a refusal of the lessees to make some satisfactory arrangement. But such assumption is without support in the law or in the proof. Besides, the evidence leads to the conclusion that the mortgaged property sold, at public auction, for less than its fair value. While the witness, who made the inventory and appraisal, testifies that it sold for its full value, the auctioneer, who conducted the sale, testified that with proper appliances it would have brought fifty per cent more. It is certain that it sold for much less than either the lessees or Stewart at the time of their negotiations supposed it to be worth.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the court below erred in adjudging the conveyances to Stewart, of the houses and lots on Crosby, Jersey and Prince Streets, in New York, to be void, requiring Mrs. Stewart to convey the same to the assignee in bankruptcy, and declaring his estate liable for the rents and profits of the same.

The decree below is reversed, with directions to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the following opinion:

I concur in the decree of reversal in this case, but I go further than the majority of the court. I think that the chattel mortgages were properly filed with the register in the City of New York. The mortgagors were partners doing business there. They are described in the mortgages as of that city. The property mortgaged was furniture in a hotel situated there, and it is to the records of the city that one would naturally resort to ascertain whether there were any liens upon it. The domicile of a firm, under the law requiring chattel mortgages to be filed in the county where the mortgagors reside, is, in my judgment, the place where it is located and carries on its business. I am of opinion, therefore, that the chattel mortgages in this case held the property against the judgments of the creditors, and I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Bradley agree with me in this view.

v.

JOHN SHIELDS AND JOHN FINN.

(See S. C., "Babbitt v. Finn," 11 Otto, 7-15).

Sureties in appeal bond—liability of—new appeal.

1. It is not necessary, in order to charge the sureties in an appeal bond, that an execution on the judgment recovered in the appellate court should be issued against the principal.

2. The sureties in a bond, given in the district court to indemnify the opposite party on an appeal to the circuit court, are not liable for the costs incurred by a subsequent removal of the cause from the circuit court to the Supreme Court.

3. Such new appeal will not diminish or discharge the liability of the sureties on the bond given in the district court, unless the judgment rendered in the district court is wholly reversed.

[No. 106.]

Submitted Dec. 16, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Nathaniel Myers, for plaintiff in error:

I. The answer admitted the bond and breach. This entitled plaintiff to judgment on the pleadings, unless the special matter pleaded constituted a defense in law.

II. The omission of the names of the sureties in the body of the bond was immaterial.

Martin v. Dortch, 1 Stew., 479; Keeton v. Spradling, 13 Mo., 321; Johnson v. Steamboat, 13 Mo., 539; Cunningham v. State, 14 Mo., 402; Cooke v. Crawford, 1 Tex., 9; Brandt, Sur., sec. 15, and authorities there cited.

III. The liability of the sureties was fixed by the affirmance of the judgment of the district court by the circuit court. That was a breach of the condition to prosecute the writ of error with effect.

Karthauss v. Owings, 6 Har. & J., 134.

IV. It was not necessary to sue out execution against the original judgment debtor.

V. The second writ of error did not annul the original judgment of affirmance, nor discharge the sureties on the original superseas bond.

Nathans*, 1 Watts & S., 155; Patterson v. Pope, 5 Dana, 241.

Mr. Given Campbell, for defendants in error:

It is insisted on behalf of defendants that the judgment was proper; that the new bond from the circuit court, the writ of error and superseas operated as a discharge of the sureties on the bond sued on, i. e., the bond given in the district court.

First. An appeal bond is intended as a bond of indemnity to secure the payment of the debt, as evidence by the judgment of the court, if the defendant fails in the appellate court.

See Rule 29 of Supreme Court of United States; Evans v. Hardwick, 1 J. J. Marsh., 435; Moore v. Gorin, 2 Litt. (Ky.), 186; Morriss v. Barclay, 2 J. J. Marsh., 376; Sumrall v. Reid, 2 Dana, 65; Shannon v. Spencer, 1 Blackf., 120; Norwood v. Martin, 3 Har. & J., 199; Parker v. R. R. Co., 44 Mo., 415.

The appeal from the circuit court to the Supreme Court, so far as the judgment of the former affected these defendants, sureties on the bond from the district to the circuit court, vacated said judgment.

See, Paine v. Coudin, 17 Pick., 142.

It has been held that a judgment will be vacated when an appeal therefrom has been allowed, and an action of debt cannot be maintained upon it.

Atkins v. Wyman, 45 Me., 399; Campbell v. Howard, 5 Mass., 376; Keen v. Turner, 13 Mass., 266; Ohio v. Bk., 7 Ohio, 129; Gale v. Butler, 35 Vt., 449.

If the bond from the district to the circuit court still remained, why was it necessary to have a bond from the judgment of the circuit court? If this judgment were already secured, no new bond, except for costs, should be required or would be necessary to carry the case up to the Supreme Court. Such is the course in admiralty in many of the circuits, in admiralty appeals, where stipulations have been taken under Rules 4 and 10.

After the bond in the circuit court is approved and supersedeas is allowed, the circuit court has not the judgment in its power; no further step can be taken in that court; hence the judgment cannot be enforced against the principal on the appeal bond from the district to the circuit court. The new bond, operating as a supersedeas, stayed all proceedings and rendered the first bondsmen powerless to fulfill the condition of the bond.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Notice to the opposite party is required in every case when a writ of error is sued out or an appeal is taken to remove a cause into an appellate court, except when the appeal is allowed in open court; and the provision is that every justice or judge signing the citation, except in certain cases not material to mention, shall take good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error or appellant shall prosecute his writ or appeal to effect; and if he fail to make his plea good, that he shall answer all damages and costs where the writ is a supersedeas, or all costs only where it does not supersede the execution. R. S., sec. 1000.

It appears that the plaintiff, as such assignee, recovered judgment in the district court against Edward Burgess in the sum of $4,236.28 debt, and costs of suit. Exceptions were filed by the defendant, and he sued out a writ of error and removed the cause into the circuit court for the same district to reverse the judgment. Sureties to the bond were required to perfect the removal of the cause, and the defendants in the present suit signed the bond as sureties of the principal, who is the party that sued out the writ of error.

Sufficient appears, to show that the bond was duly approved and the writ allowed, and that the cause was removed into the circuit court for trial. Due notice was given to the plaintiff, and it appears that the parties were there heard and that the circuit court affirmed the judgment of the district court, with costs. Payment of the judgment having been refused, and it appearing that the debtor had no property wherewith to satisfy the execution, the judgment creditor, as plaintiff, instituted the present suit against the defendants as the sureties of the principal, counting on the said bond as the cause of action.

None of these facts are controverted, and it appears that the plaintiff, in his declaration, assigned as a breach of the bond that the principal in the same did not prosecute his writ of error to effect nor answer all or any damages or costs on failing to make his plea good. Service was made; and certain proceedings followed that it is not important to notice, subsequent to which the defendants filed an answer, in which they set up the defense that the defendant in that suit by writ of error removed the judgment of the circuit court into the supreme court, and gave a new supersedeas bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to prosecute the appeal to the last named court to effect; and the defendants here aver that, by force and effect of said last named writ of error and bond, the judgment of the circuit court was superseded, rendered inoperative and vacated, and that the defendants in that bond thereby became released and discharged from any and all liability on the bond which they signed as sureties for their principal, it appearing that the sureties on the last named bond are solvent, and that the bond is sufficient in amount to answer all damages and costs.

Responsive to those affirmative defenses, the plaintiff filed a demurrer to the affirmative defenses set up in the answer, which was overruled by the court. Failing in that, the plaintiff filed a replication denying the new matters set up in the answer, and the court, on motion of the defendants, rendered judgment in their favor. Exceptions were filed by the plaintiff, and he sued out the present writ of error.

Three errors are assigned in this court: (1) That the circuit court erred in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the affirmative defenses set up in the answer. (2) That the court erred in rendering judgment for the defendants. (3) That the court erred in not rendering judgment for the plaintiff.

Argument to show that the bond, given in the district court to prosecute the appeal to effect and answer all damages and costs, was sufficient in form, is unnecessary, as nothing is suggested to the contrary; nor is it necessary to enter into any discussion to prove that the omission of the names of the sureties in the introductory part of the bond does not affect its validity, inasmuch as it appears that each signed and sealed the instrument. Pequankett Bridge v. Mathes, 7 N. H., 230; Martin v. Dorch, 1 Stew., 479; Johnson v. The Lehigh, 13 Mo., 539; Brandt, Sur., sec. 15; Cooke v. Crawford, 1 Tex., 9.

2. Judgment was affirmed in the circuit court, and the rule is universal that the affirmation of the judgment in the appellate court fixes the liability of the sureties, as it shows conclusively that the principal obligor did not prosecute his appeal to effect. Karthaus v. Owings, 6 Har. & J., 134, 139.

Where the bond is given in a subordinate court to prosecute an appeal to effect in a superior court, the sureties become liable if the judgment is affirmed in the superior court; nor are they discharged in case the judgment of the superior court is removed into a higher court for re-examination and a new bond is given to prosecute the second appeal, if the judgment is affirmed in the court of last resort. Nothing will discharge the sureties given to prosecute the appeal from the court of original jurisdiction, but the reversal of the judgment in some court having jurisdiction to correct the alleged error. Doby v. Jones, 2 Dev. (N. C.), 109; Ashby v. Sharp, 1 Litt. (Ky.), 156; Robinson v. Plimpton, 25 N. Y., 484; Smith v. Falconer, 11 Hun, 481; Gardner v. Barney, 24 How. Pr., 467-469; Smith v. Crouse, 24 Barb., 433.

Sureties in a bond on an appeal from the Special Term to the General Term are fixed in their liability when the judgment rendered in the Special Term is affirmed at the General Term, but such sureties are not liable for costs in the appeal from the General Term to the Court of Appeals, as the costs of such an appeal are not within the undertaking of the sureties in a bond given to prosecute the appeal from the Special Term to the General Term, from which it follows that the sureties in the bond to prosecute the appeal from the General Term to the Court of Appeals are alone responsible for such costs, without any claim for contribution from the sureties in the bond given to prosecute the appeal from the court of original jurisdiction to the General Term. Hinckley v. Kreitz, 58 N. Y., 583, 587.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is clear that the sureties in the bond given to prosecute the removal of the cause in this case from the district court to the circuit court, became fixed when the judgment rendered in the district court was affirmed; nor did the removal of the judgment of affirmance rendered in the circuit court into the Supreme Court have any effect whatever to diminish the liability of those sureties. Certainly not, as the judgment rendered in the circuit court was affirmed in the Supreme Court.

Judgment having been rendered against the principal in the bond in the district court, and the condition of the bond being that he, the principal, shall prosecute his appeal to effect and answer all damages and costs if he fail to make his plea good, it is difficult to see how it can be held that the sureties are discharged when it is held both in the circuit court and the Supreme Court that the judgment of the district court is correct and that the judgment should be affirmed. Neither principle nor authority will support that theory, nor do they afford it any countenance whatever. Jordan v. Woolen Co., 106 Mass., 571.

Suppose that is so; still it is contended by the defendants that they are not liable in a suit on the bond because the plaintiff did not as a preliminary proceeding sue out an execution on the judgment and take proper steps to make the money. Without more, the condition of the bond is a sufficient answer to that defense, as it stipulates that if he, the principal, fails to make his plea good, the obligors, principal and sureties, shall answer all damages and costs, which is quite enough to show that it was not necessary that an execution should be sued out on the judgment before a right of action would accrue to the judgment creditors to enforce their remedy on the bond. As between the obligors and obligees, all the obligors are principal debtors, though as between each other they may have the rights and remedies resulting from the relation of principal and surety. Anderson v. Sloan, 1 Col., 33, 484.

It was the affirmance of the judgment that fixed the liability; and, inasmuch as the defendants bound themselves that the principal should pay the judgment if he failed to make his plea good, no such preliminary step is required. Gillette v. Bullard, 20 Wall., 571, 575 [87 U. S., XXII., 387, 388]; Tissot v. Darling, 9 Cal., 278, 281; Smith v. Ramsay, 6 Serg. & R., 573; Brandt, Sur., 404.

It is not necessary, in order to charge the sureties in an appeal bond, that an execution on the judgment recovered in the appellate court should be issued against the principal. When they execute the bond, they assume the obligation that they will answer all damages and costs if the principal fails to prosecute his appeal to effect and make his plea good, from which it follows that if the judgment is affirmed by the appellate court, either directly or by a mandate sent down to the subordinate court, the sureties, proprio vigore become liable to the same extent as the principal obligor. Unless the bond contains some special provisions to that effect, the sureties in such a bond given in a common law action do not become liable for the costs incurred in consequence of a new appeal to a still higher court; or, in other words, the sureties in a bond given in the district court to indemnify the opposite party on an appeal to the circuit court are not liable for the costs incurred by a subsequent removal of the cause from the circuit court to the Supreme Court, the rule being that in that court the plaintiff in error or appellant must give a new bond; but it is equally well settled that such new appeal will not diminish or discharge the liability of his sureties on the bond given in the district court, unless the judgment rendered in the district court is wholly reversed.

Apply these suggestions to the case before the court, and it is clear that the circuit court gave judgment for the wrong party.

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer of the plaintiff to the affirmative defenses set up in the answer, and to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff, in conformity with the opinion of the court.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF QUINCY, ILLINOIS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

S. FRANK HALL ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 43-51.)

Agreement to accept drafts—misunderstanding—rejection of offer—contract of firm.

1. Where a firm in Chicago notified a bank in Quincy that thereafter they would accept drafts drawn on them only on actual consignments, and the cashier wrote the firm in effect that the bank would protect itself; held, that there was no contract between them, and that the firm was not liable for a draft on them, not drawn on actual consignment.

2. Where there is a misunderstanding as to the terms of a contract, neither party is liable in law or equity.

3. A proposal to accept, or acceptance upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer.

4. Where new members are added to a firm, the new firm will not be bound by a contract previously made with the old firm.

[No. 768.]

Submitted Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. William McFadon, for plaintiff in error:

As settling the case upon its intrinsic merits in favor of the plaintiff in error, we cite the following as settled legal principles:

NOTE.—Contracts by letter or telegram; offer and acceptance, when valid. See note to Eliason v. Henshaw, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.), 225.

First. That the Bank having done all that it did do entirely innocently, and the party practicing the deception being the agent of the defendants in error, they should bear the loss rather than the Bank.

Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk., 289; Stoner v. Millikin, 85 Ill., 221; Storer v. Logan, 9 Mass., 59, 60.

Second. On the supposition that Hall, Patterson & Co. were as innocent as the Bank, and they were also deceived, the Bank in possession of the money should be allowed to retain it, for the equities of the parties are equal.

Leather v. Simpson, L. R., 11 Eq. Cas., 407; Bk. v. Burkham, 32 Mich., 330.

Third. Because the drafts having been paid by the drawee on presentation and, as the law presumes, in obedience to a legal obligation, without proof of fraud on the part of the payee, there can be no recovery.

Hoffman v. Bk. 12 Wall., 181 (79 U. S., XX., 366).

And the knowledge of the payee that the drawer had authority to draw only against actual consignment, does not constitute fraud. Craig v. Sibbett, 15 Pa., 240.

Messrs. Sleeper & Whiton, for defendants in error:

The letter written by the defendants in error, to Penfield, Cashier, dated Jan. 15, 1876, was a full revocation of any previous authority which Melson may have had to make drafts upon them, either from letters of credit or other authority from them, except upon the conditions named in such letter of Jan. 15, that is to say, upon actual consignments of stock to them, and when the stock was in transit and would, in the regular course of business, reach them the same day or the day after the draft was presented to them.

The letter of Penfield, Cashier, of Jan. 17, 1876, was an acceptance of the notice to the Bank, of the revocation of Melson's authority, and an undertaking on behalf of the Bank that it would not cash or discount or forward for collection, any drafts of Melson which were not drawn on actual consignments, and as evidence of such consignments, and that the stock was in transit; that the Bank would thereafter require the production of shipping bills in all cases; and there being no evidence that Hall, Patterson & Co. ever waived their right to have all drafts on them drawn against actual consignments in transit, as stated in the letter of Jan. 15, it became and was the duty of the cashier and officers of the Bank to know that consignments of stock were actually on hand or in transit, to meet any draft it might cash or discount, before forwarding the same for collection.

It appearing from the evidence that the drafts in controversy were prepared for the signature of Melson by the cashier, and purported on their face to be drawn in connection with consignments of stock to cover them, it was the duty of the cashier before forwarding these drafts to be paid by Hall, Patterson & Co., in ignorance of the falsity of the recitals therein, to see that Melson had shipping bills for the stock referred to in such drafts; and if, relying upon Melson's word, he omitted this duty and a loss resulted therefrom to the defendants in error, then the Bank is liable for such loss.

In this cause it appears that the fraud of Melson will compel one of two innocent parties to suffer the loss of the money paid on the drafts in controversy.

It is a maxim of the law that "When one of two innocent parties must suffer a loss, that one must bear it whose acts or omissions occasioned the loss;" and because it appears from the evidence that, with proper care and observance of instructions, the Bank might have prevented any loss to either of the parties to this suit from Melson's fraud, and that the defendants in error did not have an equal opportunity, therefore this maxim applies, and the Bank should bear the loss.

Shear & Redf. Neg., secs. 156, 234, 261; Whart. Neg. sec. 435; 1 Hill, Torts, 37, 121, 123, 3d ed.; Morse, Bkg., 331, 2d ed; Mattheus v. Bk., 1 Holmes 412; Allen v. Bk., 22 Wend. 233.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action of tort growing out of a contract. The bill of exceptions is well drawn, and reflects clearly the points in issue between the parties. A brief statement of the case, as it appears in the record, will be sufficient for the purposes of this opinion.

During the years 1874, 1875, and up to April 1, 1876, a firm under the name of Hall, Patterson & Co. had existed at Chicago. It consisted of S. Frank Hall, Frank D. Patterson and Augustus L. Patterson, three of the five defendants in error. Their business was selling live stock on commission at the Chicago stock-yards. William G. Melson was their agent at Quincy. To secure consignments at that point to his principals it was frequently necessary to make advances there. Hall, Patterson & Co. arranged with the plaintiff in error to cash Melson's drafts on them for this purpose. The drafts were numerous, and were all payable at sight. Penfield was the cashier of the Bank. A draft for $125 was returned to the Bank unpaid. This gave rise to some controversy between the Bank and the drawees, but the matter was satisfactorily adjusted. Thereafter Hall, Patterson & Co. addressed a letter to the cashier, which was as follows:

"CHICAGO, January 15, 1876.

U. S. PENFIELD, Cashier, Quincy, Ill.:

DEAR SIR: Hereafter we will pay drafts only on actual consignments. We cannot advance money a week in advance of shipment. The stock must be in transit so as to meet dr't same day or the day after presented to us. This letter will cancel all previous arrangement of letters of credit in reference to G. W. Melson. Please acknowledge receipt of this, and oblige,

Yours respectfully,

HALL, PATTERSON & Co."

Penfield replied as follows:

"QUINCY, ILL., Jan. 17, 1876.

MESSRS. HALL, PATTERSON & Co., Chicago:

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 15th received. I note what you say. We have never knowingly advanced any money to Melson on stock to come in. Have always supposed it was in transit. Have always taken his word. After this we shall require ship's bill.

Very truly yours,

U. S. PENFIELD, Cashr."

This letter closed the correspondence.

On the first of April, 1876, two of the defendants in error, Frazee and Greer, were added as partners to the firm of Hall, Patterson & Co., as it had before existed. They had previously been employed as clerks, and knew of the writing of the letter to Penfield of the 17th of January, 1876. The new firm continued to do business under the name of Hall, Patterson & Co., until after this suit was commenced. Melson acted as the agent of the new firm as he had acted for the old one. Between the first of April, 1876, and the happening of the loss out of which this controversy has arisen, he, as such agent, drew thirty-one drafts on his principals, amounting in the aggregate to $50,000. They were all at sight, were cashed by the Bank, and were duly accepted and paid by Hall, Patterson & Co. There was no communication personally or by letter between any officer of the Bank and any member of the firm, from the date of the cashier's letter of the 17th of January, 1876, until after the loss before mentioned. In the meantime, the Bank was wholly ignorant of the change which had been made in the firm, and the drafts were cashed without such knowledge.

On the 7th of December, 1876, Melson drew drafts as follows:

"$2,505. QUINCY, ILL., Dec. 7, 1876.

Pay to the order of U. S. Penfield, Cas., twenty-five hundred and five dollars on account Jos. Hunnele 5 l'ds stock.

W. G. MELSON.

To HALL, PATTERSON & Co., Stock-Yards, Chicago, Ills."

"$2,004.00. QUINCY, ILLS., Dec. 7, 1876.

Pay to the order of U. S. Penfield, Cas., two thousand and four dollars on account S. C. Fooley 4 l'ds hogs and cattle.

W. G. MELSON.

To HALL, PATTERSON & Co., Stock-Yards, Chicago, Ills."

Both these drafts were cashed by the Bank on the day of their date, and the proceeds were paid to Melson. They were taken in the usual course of business and in entire good faith. The cashier testified that by "ship'g bill," in his letter of the 17th of January, 1876, he meant bill of lading, but that no bill of lading was taken by the Bank after the date of that letter, and that all Melson's drafts—being thirty-one after the first of April, and ten or twelve between January 17 and April 1 of that year—were paid by Hall, Patterson & Co. without bills of lading being attached, and without inquiry by the Bank or its cashier concerning such securities. When the two drafts last mentioned were cashed, the cashier had no knowledge whether they were drawn against stock or not. It was a rule of the Bank, understood by all the stock agents doing business there, that no draft should be drawn unless the stock was in transit. Agents, when drawing, were, therefore, not usually questioned upon the subject. Their compliance with the rule was assumed by the Bank. The two drafts last mentioned were indorsed and transmitted by the cashier to his correspondent in Chicago for collection. They were accepted and paid by Hall, Patterson & Co., and the plaintiff in error received the money. No stock was forwarded by Melson. The transaction was a fraud on his part. Upon receiving the proceeds of the drafts he fled the country. He was diligently sought for, but could not be found. The defendants in error brought this suit against the Bank to recover the amount they had paid. A verdict and judgment were rendered in their favor in the court below, and the Bank has brought the case here for review.

The bill of exceptions contains all the evidence given upon the trial. It discloses nothing which affords the slightest ground for any imputation against the Bank or its officers with respect to their good faith and fair dealing in the transaction out of which this controversy has arisen. The defendants in error claimed nothing in that respect in the court below, and they have made no such claim here.

The counsel for the Bank has assigned twenty-seven errors. Some of them are repetitions of the same objections in different forms. None of them are frivolous, and many of them, if the exigencies of the case required it, would be entitled to grave consideration by this court.

The two letters between the parties, of the 15th and 17th of January, 1876, are the heart of the controversy. The stress of the case is upon their construction and effect. Passing by the other points raised in the record, we shall first give our attention to this subject, and our remarks will be confined to that and one other of the errors assigned.

By this letter, Hall, Patterson & Co. advised the Bank: (1) That thereafter they would pay drafts only on actual consignments of stock; (2) That they would not pay money a week in advance of shipments; (3) That the stock must be in transit, so as to meet the draft the same day or the day after it was presented to them; (4) That this letter was to cancel all previous letters of credit as to W. G. Melson; (5) They asked an acknowledgment of the receipt of the letter.

These terms were clear and explicit. What was the reply of the Bank?

The cashier answered: (1) That the letter of the other party was received; (2) That its contents were noted; (3) That the Bank had never knowingly advanced money to Melson on stock to come in; (4) That the cashier had always taken Melson's word; (5) That thereafter the Bank would require a "ship'g bill," meaning a bill of lading. This letter, Hall, Patterson & Co. never answered.

What was its effect as to them? It certainly did not accept their proposition, nor accede to their terms, that "The stock must be in transit to meet the draft on the same day or the day after presented." They made this expressly the condition of their accepting. The letter made no allusion to the requirement, and was wholly silent on the subject. Upon this point the parties were as wide asunder as if the letters had not been written.

For whose benefit was the shipping bill mentioned by the cashier to be taken? Prima facie the point is left in uncertainty. Here, again, the cashier is silent. But the interpretation is reasonable that Hall, Patterson & Co., having in advance refused to accept, except upon the condition mentioned, the Bank notified them in reply that it would thereafter take a bill of lading, not for their protection, but for its own. This view is strengthened by the conduct of the defendants in error, and the practical construction which they seem to have thus given to the clause. They did not say in reply that they understood the shipping bill was to be for their benefit, and that they should expect it to accompany the draft. No such bill was ever required by them or sent by the Bank. They went on accepting and paying in silence exactly as before. The large number of drafts so accepted and paid by them has been already stated. If they relied on the shipping bills their conduct is inexplicable. If the understanding of the cashier had been different from what we have suggested, it is hardly to be supposed he would, from the date of his letter, have constantly disregarded his promise. Such conduct would have been worse than negligence. It would have been a gross breach of good faith to the other party. If, on the other hand, he meant by the clause that the bill of lading, if taken, was to be solely for the security of the Bank, then it was for the Bank to determine whether it should be required or not. If the cashier had confidence in Melson, and chose to exercise it, he exposed the Bank to the hazard of the consequences; but there was certainly no responsibility to Hall, Patterson & Co.

It is a remarkable feature of the case that, when the loss occurred, the defendants in error attached no importance to their own letter, but fell back upon the letter of the cashier which they had not answered, and which they had not before in any manner recognized as concerning them, much less as constituting a contract by the Bank for their protection and benefit. To give it that effect, early and explicit notice to the Bank was necessary. The afterthought of Hall, Patterson & Co., when the loss occurred, came too late, and cannot avail them. Adams v. Jones, 12 Pet., 207; McCollum v. Cushing, 22 Ark., 540; White v. Corlies, 46 N. Y., 467; Story, Cont., sec. 1130.

The minds of the parties, as shown by these letters, moved on parallel not on concentric lines. There was not the meeting of minds and the mutuality of assent to the same thing, which are necessary to create a contract. It is not pretended that the Bank ever agreed to the proposition—if it may be considered such, and not the mere announcement of a purpose—contained in the letter of Hall, Patterson & Co., and there is no evidence that the proposition of the Bank, if the letter of the cashier can be regarded in that light, was ever accepted and acted upon by the parties to whom it was addressed. We are satisfied, however, that no proposition or promise was intended to be made by the Bank, and that this was the understanding of the defendants in error. Their letter revoked the letter of credit they had before given to Melson. The Bank announced, in reply, the manner in which it should thereafter do business with him. Thereafter, each occupied a position independent of the other. If the Bank discounted drafts for Melson, the defendants in error, like any other drawees, had the option to accept or not, and in the latter event the Bank could have had no redress against them, whether it had or had not taken a bill of lading. The destruction of the stock, after the Bank took such a bill, would not have changed the relations of the parties. In our view, it was a thing with which the defendants in error had nothing to do.

If it be said they were obliged to accept if the Bank took a shipping bill, it may be asked in reply: where is the evidence of such an understanding on their part? There is nothing in the record that gives the slightest support to such an assumption. If they were not bound, where is the consideration for the alleged promise of the Bank? The true view of the subject is that neither was in anywise bound or liable to the other.

The defendants in error notified the Bank that thereafter they would accept only on the condition specified. The cashier answered, that the Bank would protect itself. This is the sole effect of the letters. Thereupon the correspondence of the parties ceased, because there was nothing left for either to add.

Where there is a misunderstanding as to the terms of a contract, neither party is liable in law or equity. Baldwin v. Mildeberger, 2 Hall, 176; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 526; Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S., 29 [XXIV., 54].

Where a contract is a unit, and left uncertain in one particular, the whole will be regarded as only inchoate, because the parties have not been ad idem, and, therefore, neither is bound. Appleby v. Johnson, L. R., 9 C. P., 158.

A proposal to accept, or acceptance upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer. Baker v. Johnson Co., 37 Iowa, 186; see, also, Jenness v. Iron Co., 53 Me., 20; R. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y., 240; and Suydam v. Clark, 2 Sandf., 133.

The learned Judge who tried the case below instructed the jury that the letters constituted a binding contract, and that if the Bank cashed any bills not based on actual consignments to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs sustained any injury by such failure, the Bank is responsible. This instruction was erroneous.

In making a contract, parties are as important an element as the terms with reference to the subject-matter. Mutual assent as to both is alike necessary. If, in fact, there were here, as claimed, a contract with reference to the latter, it was made on the 17th of January, 1876, with Hall and the two Pattersons, then constituting the firm known as Hall, Patterson & Co. The change of the firm on the first of April following, by taking in Frazee and Greer as new members, without the knowledge or consent of the Bank, put an end to the contract as to the latter. The proof is conclusive that the Bank had no knowledge of the change until after commencement of this suit. The alleged cause of action arose more than eight months after the new partnership was formed, and nearly a year after the date of the letters by which the contract is claimed to have been made. There was no privity between the Bank and the new firm. There was no binding acquiescence by the Bank. There could be none without knowledge, and it is not claimed or pretended that such knowledge existed. A new party could no more be imported into the contract and imposed upon the Bank without its consent, than a change could be made in like manner in the other pre-existing stipulations. The Bank might have been willing to contract with the firm as it was originally but not as it was subsequently. At any rate, it had the right to know and to decide for itself.

Without its assent, a thing was wanting which was indispensable to the continuity of the contract. Barns v. Barrow, 61 N. Y., 39; Grant v. Naylor, 4 Cranch, 224; Bleeker v. Hyde, 3

McLean, 279; Taylor v. Wetmore, 10 Ohio, 490, Taylor v. McClung, 2 Houst. (Del.), 24; Hunt v. Smith, 17 Wend., 179; Cremer v. Higginson, 1 Mas., 323; Russell v. Perkins, 1 Mas., 368.

The court refused an instruction asked for in accordance with this view of the subject. This, also, was an error.

The judgment is reversed and the cause will be remanded to the court below, with directions to proceed in conformity to this opinion.

v.

PATRICK HENRY STARKE.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 247-256.)

Trial of feigned issues—new trial—verdict of jury—review of case—instructions.

1. A bill of exceptions cannot be taken on the trial of a feigned issue directed by a court of equity, or, if taken, can only be used on a motion for a new trial. On such motion, the evidence or the substance of it should be stated and made part of the record. The court cannot decide the case upon exceptions without the evidence.

2. If the court is satisfied that if, on the trial of an issue, evidence improperly received had been rejected, or the evidence improperly rejected had been received, the verdict ought not to have been different, it will not grant a new trial merely upon such grounds.

3. The verdict of a jury, upon an issue out of chancery, is only advisory, and never conclusive upon the court. It may be disregarded, and a decree rendered contrary to it.

4. The verdict can only be set aside on a motion for a new trial, based, not on mere errors of the judge, but upon review of the whole case as submitted to the jury.

5. Misdirection of the judge is a circumstance to be taken into consideration, but the evidence may be so preponderating as to sustain the verdict, notwithstanding the instructions.

Argued Dec. 16, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. M. Meredith, for appellant.

Mr. Robert Ould, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises on a bill in equity filed in the court below, setting forth three certain letters patent granted to the complainant, the appellant here, for improvements in the construction of plows. The principal controversy in the case arose upon the ninth claim of the third patent set out in the bill, which was dated November 26, 1867, and re-issued on the 17th day of August, 1869. The defendant filed an answer, in which, among other things, he denied that he had infringed the claim in question, and set up certain patents granted to himself in 1860 and 1868, under which he alleged his manufacture of plows had been carried on.

Afterwards, by leave of the court, he filed an amended and supplemental answer, in which, among other things, he alleged that the complainant was not the original and first inventor of the improvements specified in the claim relied on; that it was for a particular kind of mold-board, which he alleged had been in public use and on sale in the United States for more than two years before Watt's application for his patent, specifying the names and residence of persons who had so made and used the same; and that others had known and used it before Watt's pretended invention thereof, naming various persons, and stating their residences. The defendant also, in due time, served a notice upon the complainant that he would introduce several witnesses, whose names and residences were stated, for the purpose of proving prior knowledge and use of the improvements named in the patents more than two years before the complainant's application therefor, and of proving that he was not the original and first inventor or discoverer of said improvements. The defendant also filed in the clerk's office of the circuit court, long anterior to the trial, several notices, naming other persons whom he intended to examine as witnesses, and specifying certain letters patent which he intended to introduce in evidence to show that the complainant was not the original and first inventor of the improvement claimed by him, but that the same had been patented or described in a printed publication prior to his supposed invention or discovery thereof.

After the taking of some depositions on the part of the complainant, the court, on the 7th of April, 1876, made an order for the trial of the following issues before a jury at the bar of the court (other issues being also framed, but subsequently abandoned by the complainant):

First. Whether the complainant, Watt, was the original and first inventor or discoverer of the improvement claimed in said specification nine, or of any material and substantial part thereof.

Second. Whether the improvement therein claimed had been in public use or on sale in the United States for more than two years before the said Watt's application for his patent.

Third. Whether said improvement had been patented or described in some printed publication prior to said Watt's supposed invention or discovery thereof.

The trial of these issues came on in October, 1876, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant on each issue. The complainant thereupon moved for a new trial, but the motion was overruled. Thereupon the court, upon the pleadings, proofs and verdict of the jury, rendered a decree dismissing the bill. From this decree the complainant has appealed; and in support of his appeal produces two bills of exceptions taken by him at the trial before the jury:

First. To the admission in evidence, on the part of the defendant, of certain patents, without any notice having been served on the complainant or his attorney of an intention to produce the same; such notice only having been filed with the clerk.

Second. To certain instructions given to the jury by the court at the request of the defendant.

Although it appears by these bills, that the defendant introduced proof tending to show that plows and mold-boards, substantially the same in principle and mode of operation with the mold-board of the plaintiff, had been in common use more than two years before the date of the application of the plaintiff for his original patent, and that the complainant introduced rebutting testimony on the subject, none of this evidence is contained in the record. The only evidence which the record discloses is the depositions taken by the complainant before the trial of the issues.

We lately held, in the case of Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S., 371 [XXIV., 271], that a bill of exceptions cannot be taken on the trial of a feigned issue directed by a court of equity, or, if taken, can only be used on a motion for a new trial. We are still of that opinion, for the reasons then stated. The court below may have been abundantly satisfied, from the evidence taken at the trial, that the complainant had no case. The complainant, on his motion for a new trial, might have had the evidence, or the substance of it, stated and made part of the record, and then we could have seen whether the court below had before it sufficient grounds for being satisfied with the conclusions of the jury. This is the proper course in such cases. See, 2 Smith, Ch. Pr., ch. IX., and especially pp. 84-88. The fact that by virtue of the recent statute, passed Feb. 16, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 316, sec. 2, the trial of a feigned issue may be had, in patent cases, at the bar of the court, makes no difference; for it is expressly declared that the verdict of the jury in such cases "Shall be treated and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of issues sent from chancery to a court of law and returned with such findings." Where a court of chancery suspends proceedings in a cause, in order to allow the parties to bring an action at law to try the legal right, it does not assume to interfere with the course of proceedings in the court of law, and a motion for new trial must be made to that court; but when it directs an issue to be tried at law, a motion for a new trial must be made to the Court of Chancery; and for that purpose the party applying for a new trial must procure notes of the proceedings and of the evidence given at the trial for the use of the Chancellor. This is done either by having the proceedings and evidence reported with the verdict, or by moving the Chancellor to send to the Judge who tried the issue, for his notes of trial; or procuring a statement of the same in some other proper way. The Chancellor then has before him the evidence given to the jury, and the proceedings at the trial, and may be satisfied, by an examination thereof, that the verdict ought not to be disturbed. The evidence and proceedings then become a part of the record, and go up to the court of appeal if an appeal is taken. See, Graham, N. Tr., by Waterman, Vol. III., p. 1551. In Boote v. Blundell, 19 Ves., 500, Lord Eldon said: "If this court thinks proper to consider the case upon the record as fit to be governed by the result of a trial, the review or propriety of which belongs to a court of law, the opinion of the court of law is sought in such a form, that it is regarded as conclusive, whether the judgment is obtained upon a verdict or in any other shape; but, upon an issue directed, this court reserves to itself the review of all that passes at law; and one principle, on which the motion for a new trial is made here and not to the court of law, is, that this court regards the judge's report with a view to determine whether the information collected before the jury, together with that which appears upon the record of this court, is sufficient to enable it to proceed satisfactorily, to which it did not consider itself competent previously." And in another case before the same Judge, Baker v. Ray, 2 Russ., 75, he said: "In considering whether, in such a case as this, the verdict ought to be disturbed by a new trial, allow me to say that this court, in granting or refusing new trials, proceeds upon very different principles from those of a court of law. Issues are directed, to satisfy the judge, which judge is supposed, after he is in possession of all that passed upon the trial, to know all that passed there, and looking at the depositions in the cause, and the proceedings both here and at law, he is to see whether, on the whole, they do or do not satisfy him. It has been ruled over and over again, that if, on the trial of an issue, a judge reject evidence which ought to have been received, or receive evidence which ought to have been refused, though in that case a court of law would grant a new trial, yet if this court is satisfied, that if the evidence improperly received had been rejected, or the evidence improperly rejected had been received, the verdict ought not to have been different, it will not grant a new trial merely upon such grounds."

It is difficult to see how the matter could be made more clear than it is here put by Lord Eldon, whose familiarity with equity practice and pleadings has probably never been surpassed. The remarks above quoted have a direct application to this case. The evidence before the jury, on the question of prior use, may have been so overwhelming as to satisfy the court below that no new trial ought to be granted, but that the verdict should stand, whatever might be said as to the technical points raised by the bills of exceptions. That evidence is not before us. It was before the court below, because the trial was had at the bar of that court. It might have been here so as to be considered by us also, had the party who was dissatisfied with the verdict (in this case, the complainant) seen fit to have procured a statement of the evidence from the Judge's notes, or in some other proper way. This was for him to do, if he desired to question the verdict or the decree rendered by the court.

The reason of the practice is obvious: the verdict of a jury upon an issue out of chancery is only advisory, and never conclusive upon the court. It is intended to inform the conscience of the Chancellor. It may be disregarded, and a decree rendered contrary to it. See, in addition to the cases cited, Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall., 670 [87 U. S., XXII., 452]. If the verdict were conclusive, erroneous rulings at the time, if material, would vitiate it, of course, and render a new trial necessary. But not being conclusive, the Chancellor may be satisfied with the verdict, notwithstanding such rulings; or he may think a new trial desirable even if no erroneous rulings be made. But in all cases where the verdict is brought in question, it is necessary that he be made acquainted with what passed at the trial, including as well the evidence given as the rulings of the court, in order that he may exercise his own judgment in the matter. Exceptions to rulings are proper to be taken and noted; for upon a view of the whole case, the mind of the Chancellor may be affected by them; just as it is proper to take and note objections to evidence taken by deposition; but a bill of exceptions, as such, has no proper place in the proceeding. The verdict can only be set aside on a motion for a new trial, based, not on mere errors of the judge, but upon review of the whole case as submitted to the jury.

What took place on the motion for new trial in this case we are not informed by the record. But as the trial was had at the bar of the court, even though no statement of the proceeding was made up, the court had the benefit of its own notes of the trial, and therefore was cognizant of all that occurred. Had we the same means of knowledge before us, we could then judge whether the court decided properly or not. But we have not these means. We have only bills of exceptions, which are taken not for use before the court that tries the cause, but for the use of a court of error or appeal; and are generally taken, as they were here, upon the specific rulings of the court of trial, and not upon the entire proceeding. To decide the case upon these bills, therefore, would be to decide it upon a different case from that upon which it was decided by the court below.

Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How., 691, was an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia. There had been an issue directed, which was tried on the law side of that court. Exceptions were taken at that trial; and it was sought to procure a reversal of the decree upon these exceptions. But this court decided that this could not be done. The court, speaking by Justice McLean, say: "The bills of exceptions are copied into the record, but they do not properly constitute a part of it, as they were not brought to the notice and decision of the court in chancery." This case is directly to the point, that a bill of exceptions is not the proper mode of reviewing the trial of an issue out of chancery.

Had the case been fully presented to us, as the court below had it before it on the motion for a new trial, we do not mean to say that the objections relied on by the appellant might not have been good ground of reversal of the decree. But without that, we cannot say that they are; for, even though they had been well taken, they would not necessarily have been good ground for a new trial. The usual grounds for directing a new trial of an issue, as stated in Smith's Chancery Practice, Phila. ed., Vol. II, p. 84, citing Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & M., 1, are: "1st, the alleged improper summing up of the Judge; 2dly, because the weight of evidence is against the verdict; and, 3dly, because of an informality in the evidence." But, as we have before shown, notwithstanding erroneous rulings may have been made, the whole case as presented at the trial may have been such as to show to the Chancellor's satisfaction that no new trial was necessary. In the case cited by Smith, Tatham v. Wright, the Master of the Rolls, on the motion for new trial, said: "I have carefully read every word of the report of the learned Judge, but have purposely abstained from reading the shorthand writer's notes of the summing up, in order that my judgment might be formed upon the evidence alone. * * *

conclusion on the subject. As this opinion is formed without any reference to the summing up of the learned Judge, and as I should have considered it my duty to direct a new trial upon the evidence alone, whatever the summing up had been, if the jury had come to a different conclusion, it is not necessary to take any notice of the observations which have been made in that respect." On appeal to the Lord Chancellor, Chief Justice Tindall and Chief Baron Lyndhurst, sitting for the Chancellor (who had been counsel in the cause), took no notice of the instructions given by the judge to the jury; but carefully examined the evidence which had been laid before the jury at the trial, and sustained the verdict, as the Master of the Rolls had done.

We have examined the authorities referred to by the learned counsel of the appellant, but find nothing therein which militates against the views which we have expressed.

The case of Salter v. Hite, 7 Bro. P. C., 189, which is most relied on, only confirms these views. There, notes of the evidence were had, on a motion for a new trial, and the decision, both of the Lord Chancellor and the House of Lords, was based upon a consideration of the whole matter. The case in Ambler, Cleeve v. Gascoigne, 1 Amb., 323, came before the Chancellor on a motion for a new trial, no bill of exceptions having been taken. A new trial was granted on two grounds; first, because postponement had been refused by the judge, notwithstanding the absence of a material witness for the defendant by means of sudden illness. The materiality of the witness' testimony was shown by a statement of what it had been on a previous trial, in which a contrary verdict had been given. The other ground was a clear misdirection of the judge to the jury. Under these circumstances, the Lord Chancellor deemed the verdict unsatisfactory, and directed a new trial to be had. Misdirection of the judge is, undoubtedly, a strong circumstance to be taken into consideration, when the Chancellor has the whole case before him, and the evidence is not so preponderating as to sustain the verdict notwithstanding the instructions. Here the Chancellor had before him sufficient to show that the verdict was taken, not only under a misdirection, but in the absence of very important evidence which ought to have been before the jury. We see nothing here in conflict with what we have said above. The exclusion of material testimony which might have changed the verdict is quite as important to a just conclusion to be formed by the Chancellor, as the preponderance of testimony actually given can be to sustain a verdict open to technical objections. In both cases the question is, whether, in view of all the evidence given, as well as of what has been improperly excluded, the conscience of the Chancellor ought to be satisfied.

In the case of Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh, 560, the Court of Appeals of Virginia held, as we do, that the whole proceedings in the court of law, upon an issue directed out of chancery for the purpose of ascertaining a particular fact, are part and parcel of the chancery cause; and that the court, if required, must certify any instructions given to the jury; inasmuch as the Chancellor has a right to see the whole proceedings. In that case a bill of exceptions was taken, it is true; but the case was considered as upon a motion for a new trial. One of the issues, whether or not the defendant was a mulatto, had, under the instructions of the Judge, been ignored or evaded, and evidence upon it had been excluded. All this was made to appear to the Court of Appeals; and that court very properly reversed the decree. As intimated by us in Johnson v. Harmon, though a bill of exceptions cannot properly be taken on the trial of a feigned issue out of chancery, yet, if taken, it may be employed as one of the means of bringing before the court, on a motion for a new trial, the proceedings which took place at the trial. This is all that was done in Watkins v. Carlton.

The case of Brockenbrough v. Spindle, in 17 Gratt., 22, was a bill filed to set aside a deed of trust on account of usury in the loan intended to be secured thereby, and the proceedings were regulated by statute, which required that the question of usury should be tried by jury at the bar of the court. Apparently, the verdict of the jury was to be conclusive. In this case a bill of exceptions was taken, in which all the evidence given on the trial was set forth; and the Court of Appeals went into a full consideration both of the evidence and of the rulings of the court, and reversed the decree and ordered a new trial, with instructions that if the evidence on the new trial should be substantially the same as on the former trial, the court should instruct the jury, if they believed the evidence, that they ought to find the transaction not to be usurious. In view of the effect given to the verdict by statute in this case, we see nothing in the action of the Court of Appeals in conflict with what has been laid down in this opinion; and we find nothing material to the question in the other cases that have been cited.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Oregon Donation Act—interest of settler.

1. Under section 4, of the Oregon Donation Act, there was no grant of the land to a settler until he had qualified himself to take as grantee, by completing his four years of residence and cultivation and performing such other acts in the meantime as the statute required, in order to protect his claim and keep it alive.

2. Under such Act of Congress, a settler cannot devise his interest in the land, unless the fee passed to him before his death.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Oregon.

The case is stated by the court.

See 11 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

Messrs. William W. Chapman and Timothy D. Lincoln, for appellants:

1. The estate granted by the Donation Act is a present grant from the passage of the Act, made certain and definite upon the specific land by the settlement thereon.

2. The fact that the land is not ascertained or defined by the statute, does not prevent the statute from operating as a present grant.

Rutherford v. Greene, 2 Wheat., 196; U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet., 745; Lessieur v. Price, 12 How., 77; Frémont v. U. S., 17 How., 558 (58 U. S., XV., 246).

3. It is the Donation Act that passes the title, and not the patent. The latter is but the evidence of the title and of the facts entitling the party to the specific land.

Adams v. Burke, 3 Sawy., 418; Wythe v. Haskell, 3 Sawy., 578; Landeau v. Hanes, 21 Wall., 530 (88 U. S., XXII., 609); Barney v. Dolph, 97 U. S., 656 (XXIV., 1064).

4. The cases show that the title conveyed by the Act is a present fee simple, subject to be defeated by the non-performance on a condition subsequent.

5. In the government of Oregon, the people and the courts have regarded the settler's right to the land as giving him a fee simple estate.

7. The estate was a fee simple in Loring, subject to a condition subsequent that might defeat or cut it off, if the occupancy was abandoned before the four years had run out, or if the other conditions of the statute were not complied with for the four years, or up to the time of the death of Loring.

8. Loring having fulfilled all the conditions of the statute, up to his death, and the further performance becoming impossible by the Act of God, the condition subsequent, by the 8th section of the Act and by the common law becomes fulfilled, and the estate is released from its operation and thereby becomes absolute.

9. Loring, having an estate of inheritance, which descended to his heirs, he had a devisable estate.

Mr. Geo. H. Williams, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity, filed by the heirs of the devisee of James L. Loring, deceased, and the administrator of Loring with the will annexed, to obtain the legal title to a tract of 303 acres of land near Portland, Oregon, which, as the complainants claim, the defendants hold in trust for them. The facts material to the view we take of the case are as follows:

In the month of April, 1852, Loring, a single man, settled on the land in dispute with a view to becoming its owner under the operation of the Oregon Donation Act. 9 Stat. at L., 496. He had all the qualifications necessary to enable him to take and hold under the Act, but died after a residence on the land of less than a year, leaving a will, executed in Ohio in 1849, whereby he devised all his estate remaining after the payment of some small legacies, to Samuel Parker Hall, then of Cincinnati, Ohio, but now deceased.

On the death of Loring, Joshua Delay claimed the land as a settler in behalf of himself and his wife, Sarah Delay, and after a contest with the representatives of Loring before the officers of the Land Department, the heirs of the Delays succeeded in obtaining a patent. Much litigation ensued between them and the heirs of Loring about the title, but, finally, all the estate of both these parties was transferred to the present defendants, in whom it is now vested, but with full knowledge, before the transfer, of the claim of the complainants. The theory of the present suit is, that Loring, by his settlement, acquired an estate in the lands which passed by his will, and that the heirs of the Delays took title under the patent issued to them in trust for the devisee of Loring as the real owner of the property. The court below dismissed the bill for the reason, among others, that Loring had no devisable estate in the lands when he died and, consequently, his devisee took nothing by the will.

The case, therefore, in this aspect, presents the question directly, whether the heirs of a settler under the Oregon Donation Act, who died before the expiration of the four years' residence and cultivation required, took by descent from the settler, or as donees of the United States. If by descent, it is conceded the settler had a devisable estate. If as donees, he had not.

The sections of the Act material to the determination of this question are the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 12th. The 4th is as follows:

"Section 4. That there shall be, and hereby is granted to every white settler or occupant of the public lands, American half-breed Indians included, above the age of eighteen years, being a citizen of the United States, or having made a declaration according to law, of his intention to become a citizen, or who shall make such declaration on or before the first day of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, now residing in said Territory, or who shall become a resident thereof on or before the first day of December, 1850, and who shall have resided upon and cultivated the same for four consecutive years, and shall otherwise conform to the provisions of this Act, the quantity of one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if a single man; and if a married man or if he shall become married within one year from the first day of December, 1850, the quantity of one section, or six hundred and forty acres, one half to himself and the other half to his wife, to be held by her in her own right; and the Surveyor-General shall designate the part inuring to the husband and that to the wife, and enter the same on the records of his office; and in all cases where such married persons have complied with the provisions of this Act, so as to entitle them to the grant as above provided, whether under the late provisional government of Oregon, or since, and either shall have died before patent issues, the survivor and children, or heirs of the deceased, shall be entitled to the share or interest of the deceased in equal proportions, except where the deceased shall otherwise dispose of it by testament duly and properly executed according to the laws of Oregon. Provided, That no alien shall be entitled to a patent to land, granted by this Act, until he shall produce, to the Surveyor-General of Oregon, record evidence that his naturalization as a citizen of the United States has been completed; but if any alien, having made his declaration of an intention to become a citizen of the United States, after the passage of this Act, shall die before his naturalization shall be completed, the possessory right acquired by him under the provisions of this Act, shall descend to his heirs at law, or pass to his devisees, to whom, as the case may be, the patent shall issue. Provided further, That, in all cases provided for in this section, the donation shall embrace the land actually occupied and cultivated by the settler thereon. Provided further, That all future contracts by any person or persons entitled to the benefit of this Act, for the sale of the land to which he or they may be entitled under this Act, before he or they may have received a patent, therefore, shall be void. Provided further, however, that this section shall not be so construed as to allow those claiming rights under the Treaty with Great Britain, relative to the Oregon Territory, to claim both under this grant and the Treaty, but merely to secure them the election, and confine them to a single grant of land."

The 5th provides "That to all white male citizens of the United States * * * emigrating to and settling in said Territory between the first day of December, 1850, and the first day of December, 1853, * * * who shall * * * comply with the foregoing section, and the provisions of this law, there shall be and hereby is granted the quantity of one quarter-section * * * if a single man; or if married * * * the quantity of one half section * * *."

Section 6 provides that, within three months after the survey has been made, or after the commencement of the settlement, each settler shall notify the Surveyor General of the precise tract claimed by him, and that the Surveyor-

General shall enter a description of such claims in a book to be kept by him for that purpose.

Section 7 provides that, within twelve months after the survey or settlement, each person claiming a donation right shall prove to the Surveyor-General that the settlement and cultivation have been commenced, specifying the time of the commencement; and that he shall, after the expiration of four years from the date of his settlement, prove in like manner the fact of continued residence and cultivation required by the 4th section; "And upon such proof being made, the Surveyor General, or other officer appointed by law for that purpose, shall issue certificates under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, setting forth the facts in the case, and specifying the land to which the parties are entitled. And the said Surveyor-General shall return the proof so taken to the office of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, and if the said commissioner shall find no valid objections thereto, patents shall issue for the land according to the certificates aforesaid, upon the surrender thereof."

"Section 8. That, upon the death of any settler before the expiration of the four years' continued possession required by this Act, all the rights of the deceased, under this Act, shall descend to the heirs at law of such settler, including the widow where one is left, in equal parts; and proof of compliance with the conditions of this Act up to the time of the death of such settler, shall be sufficient to entitle them to the patent."

Section 12 provides that all persons claiming by virtue of settlement and cultivation commenced subsequently to December 1, 1850, shall make affidavit that the land is for their own use and cultivation.

The rights of Loring and those who claim under him all depend on section 4. Whatever he took was by virtue of the grant there made. If that section gave him no devisable estate before the completion of the required four years' residence and cultivation, he had none. The other sections may be resorted to, if necessary, to get at the meaning of this, but this alone, when its meaning is ascertained, fixes the limit of the donation made to him.

The anomalous condition of affairs in Oregon Territory when this Act was passed has been heretofore brought to our attention. Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402 [73 U. S., XVIII., 925]; Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. 307 [85 U. S., XXI., 759]; Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 477 [XXIV., 276]; Barney v. Dolph, 97 U. S. 652 [XXIV., 1063]. For many years the inhabitants had been without any government except that which they had themselves organized for their own protection. The ownership of the soil on which they lived was in dispute between the United States and Great Britain. Under the operation of treaty stipulations for a joint occupation of the Territory, extensive settlements had grown up, and the people, in governing themselves, had adopted land laws which made occupancy the basis of ownership as between settlers. While waiting for the contesting sovereign claimants to determine which of the two should be the acknowledged owner of the soil they contented themselves with regulating their rights of occupancy as between each other, trusting to the bounty of the government under whose sole dominion they should ultimately fall, for a grant of title to the land itself. The first of these Acts was passed in 1844. Laws of Oregon, 1843 to 1849, 77. Under this, only free males, over the age of eighteen, who would be entitled to vote if of lawful age, and widows, were entitled to hold a "claim," save that a married man under eighteen was not debarred. A claim was also confined to 640 acres or less. Permanent improvements and continuous occupation and cultivation were essential to the preservation of the rights conferred. Following this was the "Land Law," contained in the organic law of the provisional government which went into operation in 1846. Ter. Stat. Oregon (1851), 32, art. III. This law relaxed somewhat the stringency of the former Act as to actual occupation, and extended the privilege of establishing claims to all residents of the Territory. By the Act of Congress creating a territorial government for Oregon, approved August 14, 1848, 9 Stat. at L., 323, all laws theretofore passed in the Territory making grants of land, or otherwise affecting or incumbering the title to lands, were declared void; but all other laws in force under the authority of the provisional government were continued in operation, so far as they were not incompatible with the Constitution, or the principles and provisions of that Act. All laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory were to be submitted to Congress, and if disapproved were to be null and void. Sec. 6.

Doubts having arisen whether, after the establishment of the territorial government, the land law of the provisional government was in force, an Act of the territorial Legislature was passed September 12, 1849, expressly declaring it to be so, and some additional provisions were made consistent with the title of the new Act, which was "An Act to Prevent Injuries to the Possession of Settlers on Public Lands." Ter. Laws (1851), 246. By section 5 of this Act it was provided that "Land claims shall descend to and be inherited by the heirs at law of the claimant, in the same manner as is provided by law for the descent of real estate." On the 26th of September, 1849, "An Act Respecting Wills" was passed by the territorial Legislature. Ter. Stat. 1851, 274. By this Act every person of twenty-one years of age and upwards, of sound mind, might, by "last will, devise all his estate, real, personal and mixed, and all interests therein, saving to the widow her dower." Before the passage of the Act of September 12, if a person died in the lawful possession of a land claim, it formed part of his personal estate, and was to be disposed of by his executors or administrators for the benefit of his legal heirs. Laws of Oregon, 1843 to 1849, 61.

It was in the midst of this condition of affairs that the Donation Act was passed. Congress had the right, on assuming undisputed dominion over the Territory, to confine its bounties to settlers within just such limits as it chose. The settlers had no title to the soil, and the legislation under the provisional government, as well as that by the territorial Legislature, had no other effect than to regulate possessory rights on the public domain in the absence of congressional interference.

The opening words of section 4 are "That there shall be, and hereby is granted." This is appropriate language in which to express a present grant, but as was well remarked by Mr. Justice Field for the court in Mo. Kan. & Tex. R. Co. v. Kan. Pacif. R. Co., 97 U. S., 491 XXIV., 1095], "It is always to be borne in mind, in construing a congressional grant, that the Act by which it is made is a law as well as a conveyance, and that such effect must be given to it as will carry out the intent of Congress." There cannot be a grant unless there is a grantee and, consequently, there cannot be a present grant unless there is a present grantee. If, then, the law making the grant indicates a future grantee and not a present one, the grant will take effect in the future and not presently. In all the cases in which we have given these words the effect of an immediate and present transfer, it will be found that the law has designated a grantee qualified to take, according to the terms of the law, and actually in existence at the time. Thus, in Rutherford v. Greene, 2 Wheat., 196, the grantee was Major-General Greene; in Lesieur v. Price, 12 How., 59, the State of Missouri; in U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet., 691, Arredondo and Son; in Frémont v. U. S., 17 How., 542 [58 U. S., XV., 241], Alvarado; in Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44 [88 U. S., XXII., 551], the State of Wisconsin; in R. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S., 733 [XXIII., 634], the State of Kansas; and, without particularizing further, it may be said generally that in the swamp land cases and all the internal improvement grant cases, where for the most part the question has arisen of late, if a grant has been held to take effect presently, the State or some corporation, having all the qualifications specified in the Act, has been designated as grantee. In other words, when an immediate grant was intended, an immediate grantee, having all the requisite qualifications, was named.

Coming, then, to the present case we find that the grantee designated was any qualified "Settler or occupant of the public lands * * * who shall have resided upon and cultivated the same for four consecutive years and shall otherwise conform to the provisions of the Act." The grant was not to a settler only, but to a settler who had completed the four years of residence, etc., and had otherwise conformed to the Act. Whenever a settler qualified himself to become a grantee, he took the grant and his right to a transfer of the legal title from the United States became vested. But until he was qualified to take, there was no actual grant of the soil. The Act of Congress made the transfer only when the settler brought himself within the description of those designated as grantees. A present right to occupy and maintain possession, so as to acquire a complete title to the soil, was granted to every white person in the Territory having the other requisite qualifications; but beyond this nothing passed until all was done that was necessary to entitle the occupant to a grant of the land. Whether the fee passed out of the United States before the claim was "proved up," it is not necessary now to consider. For the purposes of the present suit, it is enough to show that the occupant got no title himself, beyond that of a mere right of possession, until he had completed his four years of continued residence and cultivation.

That such was the clear intention of Congress

we think is manifested in many provisions of the Act. Thus, where married persons "Have complied with the provisions of the Act, so as to entitle them to the grant as above provided, whether under the late provisional government of Oregon or since, and either shall die before patent issues, the survivor and children or heirs of the deceased shall be entitled to the share or interest of the deceased in equal proportions, except where the deceased shall otherwise dispose of it by testament, duly and properly executed according to the laws of Oregon." This evidently related to such married persons as had completed their four years' residence and cultivation, and had done the other things required in the meantime; that is to say, had given notice of the precise tract claimed (section 6), and had proved the commencement of their settlement and cultivation (section 7). These were the provisions to be complied with "so as to entitle them to a grant." As there could be no grant until there was some person entitled to receive it, the conclusion would seem to be irresistible that, under this provision, married settlers had no estate in the land which they could devise by will, until from being qualified settlers only they had become qualified grantees. Having completed their settlement, and nothing remaining to be done but to get their patent, their estate in the land was one they could devise by will, or which would go to the surviving husband or wife and children or heirs of a deceased married person. Not so, however, with the mere possessory rights which preceded a compliance with the provisions of the Act so as to entitle the settlers to their grant of the land.

Again; "No alien shall be entitled to a patent for land, granted by this Act, until he shall produce to the Surveyor-General of Oregon record evidence that his naturalization as a citizen of the United States has been completed; but if any alien, having made his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, after the passage of this Act, shall die before his naturalization shall be completed, the possessory right acquired by him under the provisions of this Act shall descend to his heirs at law or pass to his devisees, to whom, as the case may be, the patent shall issue." An alien who had declared his intention to become a citizen, or who should do so before December 1, 1850, was a qualified settler, but he was not a qualified grantee until he had completed his naturalization. As no patent could be issued to him before his naturalization, provision was made for the disposition of the "possessory right" which one who had declared his intention, after the passage of the Act, could acquire as an authorized settler. By the requisite residence and cultivation, accompanied by the prescribed preliminary notice and proof of claim and settlement, the alien settler could perfect his right to a patent as soon as he completed his naturalization, but until he was in a condition to "prove up" for a patent, his rights in the land were "possessory" only.

Another provision is equally significant: "All future contracts by any person entitled to the benefit of this Act, for the sale of the land to which he may be entitled under this Act before he or they have received a patent therefor, shall be void." This must refer to sales after the necessary residence and cultivation were complete, because the grant was only to a settler "who shall have resided upon and cultivated the same for four consecutive years." This implies continuous residence and cultivation by the person or persons who make the claim. There is no provision by which the possession of one can be added to that of another, so as to complete the requisite term. The grant was to the occupant who had himself conformed to the provisions of the Act. The sale of a possessory right could have no other effect than that of an abandonment of the settler's "claim" and a grant to the purchaser of the right to enter upon the abandoned lands and begin a new settlement of his own.

This intention is even more distinctly shown in section 5, which being in pari materia with section 4, may be resorted to as in some degree showing the meaning of both sections. There the language is, "That, to all white male citizens * * * who shall in all other respects comply with the foregoing section, * * * there shall be and hereby is granted," etc. This indicates clearly that there was to be no grant except to persons who, by complying with the provisions of the Act, had qualified themselves to take.

We conclude, therefore, that under section 4 there was no grant of the land to a settler until he had qualified himself to take as grantee by completing his four years of residence and cultivation, and performing such other acts in the meantime as the statute required in order to protect his claim and keep it alive. Down to that time he was an authorized settler on the public lands, but not a grantee. His rights in the land were statutory only, and cannot be extended beyond the just interpretation of the language Congress has used to make known its will.

This brings us to the consideration of section 8, which, in substance, provided that if a settler died before the expiration of the required four years' continued possession, all his rights should descend to his heir at law, including his widow, if he left one, and that proof of his compliance with the conditions of the Act up to the time of his death should be sufficient to entitle them to the patent.

Here is a plain indication that the right of the settler before the expiration of his four years' continued possession was something less than a title in fee to the land, for the provision is not that the land shall descend, but the settler's rights only. Had it been supposed that the title was already in the settler, subject only to defeasance, if the conditions subsequent to the grant should not be performed, we cannot but think that provision would have been made for a transfer of the land free of the conditions, instead of only the settler's rights. The object of Congress, undoubtedly, was to allow a settler's heirs to succeed to his possessions and thus keep his rights alive. But for some such provision all rights of the settler would have been lost by his death. As the law required full four years' residence by the person who claimed the grant, if no provision had been made for a continuance of his possession the land would have become vacant on his death and open for a new settlement by a new settler, if the law authorizing new settlements still remained in force.

See 11 Otto.

Hence, it was provided that the possessory rights of a deceased settler should go to his heirs, and that they might get the land on making the requisite proof, without further residence and cultivation of their own. Their title to the land was to come, not from their deceased ancestors, but from the United States. The title, it is true, was granted to them by reason of the possessory rights of their ancestor, but these were rights which he could not transfer and which passed to them under the statute without any act of his. On his death his heirs became qualified grantees. Whether they took immediately on his death or after proof of his compliance with the provisions of the Act while in life, need not be decided. It is enough for this case that when their ancestor died he had nothing in the land which he could transmit to them, and that what they afterwards got came from the United States and not from him. All his rights in the land were dependent on his completion of the four years' possession; but in consideration of what he had done Congress made his heirs the special objects of its bounty if he died before his own grant had been secured. We attach no importance to the word "descend," as used in this section. In section 4 the word selected to convey substantially the same idea was "entitled." The thing done was to give the heirs of a settler the benefit of his rights and to designate them as the recipients of the bounty of the government, instead of him.

We have not overlooked the fact that, by the territorial enactments of Oregon, a settler's claim might descend to his heirs as real estate, and that his possessory rights might be disposed of by will. But all these enactments are in conflict with the Act of Congress and, therefore, inoperative. The heirs of the settler took only such title as Congress gave them. The territorial government could not add to or take from that grant. It is not contended that under the Act of Congress a settler might devise his interest in the land, unless the fee passed to him before his death.

It follows from this that Loring, at the time of his death, had no devisable estate in the land, and that the heirs of his devisee cannot maintain this suit. This makes it unnecessary to consider any of the questions that have been argued.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.
